

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at `http://books.google.com/`

VOLUME TWO

OF

THE SOUTHERN STAR.

INTRODUCTORY.

It hath pleased the Lord to bless us to the end that we might publish another volume of our Southern "Twinkler," and with heartfelt praise, thanksgiving and gladness to Him whom all blessings flow, we herewith present the same to our many patrons and the world. In our defense of the Gospel we have endeavored to be valiant, yielding no quarter to the enemy, and making no compromise with sin; in our explanation of the plan of redemption, and elucidation of the Holy Scriptures, we have striven to be plain and simple.

Trusting that our efforts have not been in vain, but that some poor wandering soul, who was straying from the narrow path, may have been led by the light of this little Star to forsake the erring way and cleave to the Truth, and hoping in Christ for the redemption and salvation of the sons of men, and the final and complete overthrow of wickedness, we submit our work to the public at large.

VOL. 2. CHATTANOOGA, TENN., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1899. No. 1.

THE THANKSGIVING CHORUS.

By Clara Broughton Conant.

A chorus of praise from a nation!
Could our Father but hear it today—
No heart that refused its oblation,
Too ungrateful to sing or to pray!
Like a wind that sweeps over the ocean,
While the sunlight is smiling above,
Would be the grand pulse of emotion
Uniting all souls in his love!

Oh, think how his mercies are thronging
Around us and crowning our days;
Cold hearts that can cherish no longing
To join in the service of praise!
My country! Think how he watched o'er us
When many predicted our fall,
And join every voice in the chorus
That ascends to the Father of all!

Dear souls, we have watched for the morning,
In the mission that blossomed so fair,
Who feared lest that beautiful dawning
Should be veiled in the mists of despair;
Who with faith and love's sweet self-denial
Soon found that the Helper was near;
Praise him, we are safe through the trial,
And unite for another brave year!

Oh, enter his courts with thanksgiving,
An eager and jubilant throng;
Would all were athirst for the living
Of the life that itself is a song!
Athirst for the heavenly fountains,
Flowing bright in Emmanuel's ways;
Then from seashore and valley and mountains
Would rise the glad chorus of praise.

History of the Southern States Mission.

The year 1893 came with chilly blasts and weeping heavens. The adversary was very alert and caused the brethren much trouble. Mobs were organized and the cloven foot was very much in evidence. South Carolina was much disturbed over the actions of a Mr. Gore, an apostate, who emigrated to Utah in 1892 and soon returned dissatisfied.

Jan. 22 Elders Dorrity and Patrick were holding a meeting at Pineway. S. C. Gore, with 100 followers, was in attendance, and after Brother Dorrity had concluded his remarks he was approached by Gore, who called him an untruthful person and accused him of not being honest. Elder Dorrity, with much complaisance, told Mr. Gore that it was unwise to talk as he was, and that such words seldom came from the lips of gentlemen. Mr. Gore's father then struck Elder Dorrity with his fist, but did not injure him. Friends intervened and prevented any further trouble.

Pike county produces the usual mob. who sent a bundle of hickory switches to Elders May and Haycock. The people also held a public meeting denouncing the "Mormons."

In Orangeburg, S. C., some mobbers lived. Elders W. H. Allen and J. T. Tanner went into the town to preach. A house was promised to them, but was finally refused at the needed time. They went about distributing tracts and had nearly finished their task when a mob assailed them, casting stones and pieces of ice at them. Further than a broken hat no damage was done.

Elder J. W. Sykes was traveling alone. He went to the small railroad town of White Plains, where he held a meeting. A large crowd turned out to meet him and paid devoted attention to him. At the close of the meeting he had an experience that many of us pass through—no one to invite us home.

Waiting until the crowd had dispersed, he went in search of entertainment. He had proceeded but a short distance when he was accosted by a young man riding a horse, who inquired Brother Sykes' business. Learning his trouble, he kindly offered to take him home. The invitation was graciously accepted. They went down the road a short distance, when the young man, pointing to a house, said: "You go up to the house and I'll be up directly, when I put my horse up." Brother Sykes went to the house and learned that a family of negroes lived there. Seeing the cruel joke, he returned to the road. Continuing down the road, he soon met two other men, who also inquired Elder Sykes' business. When informed, they offered their hospitality to him, which he eagerly accepted. The trio started through the woods, supposedly going to the homes of these two men. After walking some distance in the woods they feigned to be lost and asked Brother Sykes to pray. He then began to perceive their motives and refused, saying he thought he would return to the road. Suiting the word to the action, he turned and was about to be seized, when he commenced running. Being fleet he soon ran away from his captors, when they began shouting at him, and also shooting at him. Other men then appeared upon the scene, but he outran them all and made his way back to the church, where he remained all night.

The Elders in the Middle Tennessee Conference were having splendid success. They were traveling in the districts where President Woodruff had traveled before the war.

During the six months ending Feb. 28 the Elders had performed 124 baptisms, blessed sixty-three children, disfellowshipped seven and located a number of Saints who had been lost track of.

FANATICISM AND CRIMINALITY.

American Journal of Sociology.

The result of an analysis of a series of legal actions involving persecution of crime supposedly committed under the spell of fanatical religious beliefs serve to illustrate this point. Thus the Convulsionists, a sect existing in Paris about 1760, were wont to crucify members of their order, in emulation of the crucifixion of Jesus, in the belief that the souls of the surviving members would be saved by the sacrifice of their fellows. In 1817 the "Paeschelians," an Austrian sect, murdered a man, his wife and their daughter, under the delusion that the trio, who refused to go with the fanatics, were possessed of the devil. On the following day they crucified one of their own number, a girl of 18 years, who had suffered herself for the death, in imitation of the death of Jesus, in order to save the souls of her fellow-believers. In 1823 the leader of the Pietistic circle in Switzerland, after having dispatched her sister, who gave her life as a means of saving the souls of her relatives, was crucified by her followers at her own command, in order that she might die, rise again after three days, and restore to life the sister whom she had slain. In 1865 two mothers, adherents of the "Holy Men," slew their sick children, believing them to be victims of demoniacal possession. In 1875 a Hungarian miller, belonging to the "Nazarenes," killed his son as an offering for his own sins, after the fashion of Abraham. In 1870, in Irkutsch, Russia, one of the "Schismatics" convinced himself by prayer and fasting and much Scripture reading that to save his soul he must be crucified. Accordingly he attempted self-crucifixion, and succeeded so far as the circumstances of the case would permit. In 1830, in the government of Perm, Russia, a peasant killed his child as an offering for sin, and buried the body in an ant hill. Likewise, in the government of Vladimir, another peasant killed both his children in due Abraham form, and while the babies bled under the father's knife, the devout mother celebrated the service by reading aloud selected portions of the twenty-second chapter of Genesis. In 1854, in the government of Tamboff, Russia, a peasant, convinced that to save his soul a man must have a sin to repent of, killed a neighbor with an axe in order to satisfy this highly imperative condition.

It is part of the creed of the "Wanderers," a Russian sect, that Antichrist rules in high places there and that, accordingly, good men must have naught to do with governmental affairs of any sort. In conformity with this belief, a man murdered, in various ingenious ways, twenty-five men, women and children, including his own wife and babies, in order to free them from the danger of losing their souls by suffering the contaminating contact of the government census taker. This occurred in 1897. The "Deniers," another quite interesting Russian sect, believe that evil taints all earthly good, and that the only escape is death. In 1865 sixty of these men, strong in the faith, after having murdered their wives and children, permitted themselves to be put to death, one by one, by their leader. The "Scourgers," who also form a widespread and influential sect in Russia, in obedience to the behests of their "saviors," are in the habit of indulging in human sacrifices, cannibalistic feasts, erotic dances, and other lewd procedures, as an extremely efficacious method of keeping the hand of evil from off their immortal souls. So the "Muckers," of Koenigsberg and the celebrants of the black mass in Paris afford further examples of the use of a ritual of erotism, coupled with a practice of the most abandoned and obscene behavior, to promote the eternal welfare of the soul."

With such evidence as this, how can people say, who profess to know Jesus Christ, that the satisfaction manifested by the conscience is a sure guide, and if a "good conscience," or contentment of mind is enjoyed by professors of religion they will be saved, regardless of their belief? Can anyone deny that the people aforementioned were not sincere and had a satisfied conscience to bear them out in their dreadful religious rites?—Ed.

A Clergyman on the "Mormons."

According to the Hartford, Conn., Post of Monday, Oct. 9, Rev. Joseph Waite delivered a discourse at Unity Church on the previous Sunday, on his observations among the "Mormons." The paper gives this summary of his remarks:

"Mr. Waite admitted that he entered the state of Utah with a prejudice against the Mormon sect. But the highly cultivated and irrigated fields, the broad streets and avenues and magnificent buildings which burst into view as the train rolled into Salt Lake City after a tedious ride across the arid plains, dissipated the idea that a people who are looked upon as polygamists must of necessity live in a squalid condition. But the thrifty condition of their homes and places of business was 'an eye opener' and prompted investigation in every direction, and the statistics of the Mormon settlement as compiled by the federal authorities, they being non-Mormonists, were searched for information as to their social relations and public conduct. It was learned that in the jails and reformatories the percentage or Mormons imprisoned was so small that they may be said to be a non-criminal people.

"There has been year after year when there was not a representative of the sect imprisond in the jail of Salt Lake City. Of the thirty-five gambling houses of the city not a person connected with them was a Mormon. Of the houses of ill fame of the city not a Mormon woman was an inmate. There are no drunkards or illegitimate children among them. A further study of their history and customs showed that the Book of the Mormons on which their religious and social customs are founded never did nor does it now, advocate polygamy. * * * but the men who have taken a plurality of wives, who have borne them children, declare that they will never abandon those women and their offspring.

"Mr. Waite said that the Mormon Church was growing at a rate that outstrips any other sect in the country, but polygamy is not encouraged. The Mormons have suffered much in the way of persecution at the hands of non-Mormons, but like the Jews of old, when driven from their possessions they began the struggle for a living in a new country and have always succeeded, and their growth and prosperity at present indicate that their many virtues appeal to many pure-minded people who adopt their creed."

The Post adds:

"The lecture abounded with facts and figures relating to those people, which were a revelation to the hearers, and they left the church with a different opinion of the 'Mormons' than when they entered it. It is hoped the lecture will be repeated."

It is so unusual to hear anything favorable of the Latter Day Saints from religious teachers, that the foregoing is quite refreshing. In the main it is correct, but still there are some inaccuracies as may be expected from one not perfectly familiar with the doctrines and claims of our people.

A Vain Seeking.

Scribner's Magazine.

The recent announcements by several men of science that they believe that they have sure proofs of the immortality of the soul may not be so important as they seem to the gentlemen who make them, but at least they are interesting. The proofs that are relied upon are chiefly communications received through mediums, which are said to be so remarkable in the knowledge which they imply, that those who receive them are driven to conclude that they come from the spirits of persons who lately lived on earth. To the average observer spiritualism seems a labyrinth of frauds and mysteries, some deep, some shallow, wherein those who wander grope from delusion to delusion, and arrive nowhere. The cry is not so much that all spiritualism is false, as that whether false or not, it is all unprofitable. That is the usual attitude the intelligent public has toward it, and it is based on observation which is wide if not profound. For though we hear of reputations damaged and lives apparently misdirected as a result of spiritualistic experiments, we rarely hear of persons whom spiritualism has helped. The quest seems trivial and disconcerting; not useful.

Few of us think that spiritualism will ever prove the immortality of the soul to the satisfaction of the scientific mind. Still, when Prof. Hyslop, of Columbia University, declares that that very thing is about to be done, we are quite ready to give him our attention. We have heard before of Mrs. Piper, the Cambridge medium, who has been for ten or twelve years in the charge of the Psychical Research Society. We know that she is looked upon as a remarkable medium, and that the closest watching for years past has failed to detect her in deceit. It is through her Prof. Hyslop says that the proofs which he finds satisfactory have come. They have come, then, by a notable and reputable route, and they are endorsed by an observer whose endorsement is probably as good as can be given, for Prof. Hyslop is not only a man of high character but of a ripe experience in matters of this sort. Psychology is his specialty. He knows the tricks of commercial spiritualism, and has often detected and exposed them. It is human to err, and it is entirely possible that his certainties may turn vague on exposure, and that his conclusions will not stand; but certainly his proofs deserve and will receive respectful inspection.

But, of course, the question is not whether or not we are going to believe the soul immortal, but merely whether we shall consider these newly advertised proofs of it are worth anything. Most of us instinctively believe in a future life it is, and will go on believing in it however new proofs may triumph or fail. We think there must be a future life. It is not improbable. What is grossly improbable is that there is none. The wonder is not that there should seem to be feeble glimmerings of intercourse between us who are still here and those who have gone before. The wonder is that it has proved to be so extraordinarily difficult to speak across a grave. Prof. Hyslop has probability overwhelmingly with him in his general contention. If we are not agitated by his promises and impatient to read his disclosures, it is because proofs of the sort he deals with have heretofore been inconclusive and disappointing. For some reason the life of earth seems to have been isolated. We scarcely even dream of what life may have preceded it, and though we do dream much about the life that is to follow, we gather surprisingly little information about it.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Editorial Thoughts, Juvenile Instructor.

The question has been asked, "What shall be done with the broken bread that remains untouched after the sacrament of the Lord's supper has been administered?"

We reply, in the first place, the officiating Elders or Priests should endeavor not to break much more bread than is needed; in other words, they should adapt the amount broken to the number present to whom it is to be administered. If any remains over it should be returned to the care of the brother who provides the bread for the ordinance, and he should be admonished to see that it is not used for improper purposes; for instance, we do not think it should be fed to the fowl or swine, or carelessly thrown away in the street, or back yard, or elsewhere.

We learn from the writings of the early Christian fathers that it was the custom in the ancient Church in the days of the Apostles and their immediate successors, for the Deacons, after the sacrament meeting was closed, to carry the bread to the homes of those Saints who from sickness or other justifiable causes were prevented from being present at the assembly of the Saints. Those thus kindly remembered partook of the bread with gladness. We have known this to be done in these days, and believe such action, whether by the Deacons or others, to be justifiable and praiseworthy, but in the organized wards of the Church, it should be done with the knowledge and consent of the Bishop. The Lord has not commanded that the emblems of His infinite sacrifice should only be partaken of at a public meeting or on a certain day. We make this observation as we have heard of brethren claiming that the sacrament could only be properly administered on the Sabbath. Neither the revelations of the Lord nor the practice of the Saints justifies such a conclusion. We have had the pleasure of partaking of this ordinance in the house of the Lord on other days than Sunday when the proceeding was sanctioned by the presence and participation of all the general authorities of the Church, and was under the immediate direction of our Prophet, seer and revelator, God's earthly mouthpiece, both him who now lives and those who have gone before.

It has also been asked, "Is it right and proper to use at the ward sacrament meeting in the afternoon or evening the bread that remains over from the administration of the ordinance in the morning at the Sunday School?" No, we consider such an act improper. The breaking of the bread is a part of the ordinance which should always be performed in the meeting, and at the time that it is partaken of. To do this at any other time lessens the solemnity of the rite and robs it of much of its symbolism.

We partake of the sacrament, for one most important reason, that we may always remember that sacred body, that was offered up for our salvation, by which the ransom was paid and we were brought into communion with the Father, and made heirs of salvation and joint heirs with Him who made the sacrifice. To rob the ordinance of any of its significance by omitting any of its parts is not pleasing to the Lord, for to do so obviously weakens the intent for which it was established as an ordinance of the everlasting Gospel. So effectually and permanently does the Lord wish to impress the remembrance of that great sacrifice at Calvary on our memories that He permits us all to partake of the emblems—the bread and wine. As an object lesson it would not be as effective if the President of the meeting alone partook, or, indeed, if it were extended to the Priesthood only. But so that we may all remember Him, all who are members of the Church are permitted to partake, as are also the unbaptized children who have not reached the years of full accountability.

We remember once visiting a branch in England where the strange practice prevailed of breaking the bread some time before the meeting opened. After being broken it was put away on plates in the desk on the top of which it was afterwards blessed. This custom affected us quite painfully, as we felt that it was an unwarranted departure from the custom of the Savior and the prevailing practice of the Church, a departure from which no advantage could in any way be gained. It was, on the other hand, not only undesirable in itself, but was a dangerous example which might lead to other unauthorized changes in other ordinances; for we realized that by practices such as this the ancient Church gradually departed from the true order of God, and established the errors and mummeries that destroy the efficacy in modern Christian sectaries not only of the sacrament, but of other ordinances of vital importance to all who are seeking salvation. Where the Lord has condescended to give us a form of words or a manner of procedure in the performance of any ordinance in His Church, we should esteem it a pleasure and a duty to observe strictly what the Lord has revealed and neither add to nor diminish from. His expressed wishes and commands. Where no exact formula is given of Him we are safest in following the usual practice of the Saints, sanctioned by the presence or teachings of "those who hold the keys." Then for the rest, let the Holy Spirit guide us as to the details and the exact language to be used. If we are living our religion as faithfully as we should be, there is little fear of our going far astray while we thus officiate as His servants.

SHE RESTS IN SLEEP.

(Lines on the death of Sister Ethel Lowry Reid, by Sister Rhoda Watson Smith, Manti, Utah.)

Dear Father, Mother, do not weep,
Tho' your dear child was from you torn,
And in the silent grave will sleep
Until the Resurrection morn.

God lent to you that gentle flower,
That for a time so fair did bloom,
But in an unexpected hour
You had to bear her to the tomb.

'Twas but the clay you carried there,
Dear Ethel you again will meet.
Methinks I see her form so fair
Waiting her loved ones all to greet.

To that bright world, where pain and care,
Parting and sorrow will be o'er,
They'll gladly bid you welcome there,
She, and her brother, gone before.

Ah! yes, and here's her baby, too,
Think you he's left without her care?
No! No! She'll ever watchful be
That he with you might join her there.

So Brother, Sister, cease to grieve,
It pained you with your child to part,
Our Father will that pain relieve;
And He will help you bear the smart.

Oh! but a tear brings such relief
When hearts are filled to overflow,
It will assuage the keenest grief
When to His will we're called to bow.

Then drop a tear, and gently weep
For that lov'd form that's 'neath the sod,
She is not dead, she rests in sleep,
Her spirit hath return'd to God.

A LITERARY CURIOSITY.

(Each line of the following poem, as it appeared in the St. Louis Republic, is said to be a quotation from some one of the standard authors of England and America, and is the result of laborious search among the voluminous writings of thirty-eight leading poets of the past and present. The number of each line refers to its author below):

LIFE.

1—Why all this toil for triumphs of an hour?
2—Life's a short summer, a man, a flower;
3—By turns we catch the vital breath and die—
4—The cradle and the tomb, alas, so nigh.

5—To be is better far than not to be,
6—Though all man's life may seem a tragedy;
7—But light cares speak when mighty griefs are dumb,
8—The bottom is but shallow whence they come.

9—Your fate is but the common fate of all;
10—Unmingled joys, here, to no man befall.
11—Nature to each allots his proper sphere,
12—Fortune makes folly her peculiar care;

13—Custom does not often reason overrule,
14—And throw a cruel sunshine on a fool;
15—Live well, how long or short permit, to heaven,
16—They who forgive most shall be most forgiven.

17—Sin may be clasped so close we cannot see its face—
18—Vile intercourse where virtue has not place.
19—Then keep each passion down, however dear,
20—Thou Pendulum betwixt a smile and tear;

21—Her sensual sneers, let faithless pleasure lay,
22—With craft and skill to ruin and betray;
23—Soar not too high to fall, but stoop to rise,
24—We masters grow of all we must despise.

25—Oh, then, renounce that impious self-esteem;
26—Riches have wings and grandeur is a dream.
27—Think not ambition wise because 'tis brave,
28—The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

29—What is ambition!—'tis a glorious cheat,
30—Only destructive to the brave and great.
31—What's all the gaudy glitters of a crown?
32—The way of bliss lies not on beds of down.

33—How long we live not years, but actions tell;
34—That men live twice who live the first life well.
35—Make, then, while yet ye may, your God your friend,
36—Whom Christians worship, yet not comprehend.

37—The trust that's given guard; and to yourself be just;
38—For live we how we can, yet die we must.

Once I was pure as the snow, but I fell—
Fell like a snowflake, from heaven to hell—
Fell, to be trampled as filth in the street—
Fell, to be scoffed at, spit on, and beat;
Praying, cursing, wishing to die,
Selling my soul to whoever would buy,
Dealing in shame for a morsel of bread,
Hating the living, and fearing the dead.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

And he gave some, Apostles; and some, Prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body Christ; till we all come in the unity of the faith and the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive. (Eph. 4.)

There is no place in the Bible where it says these important officers were to be done away—they were to remain in the Church until we all come in the unity of the faith. Are we all in the unity of the faith? Are they in the Church?

OUR SECOND VOLUME.

In our second volume it will be our most earnest endeavor to fulfill the heartfelt wishes of all and supply some food for reflection that will be for the future good of our readers. Our acquaintance through the Star has been pleasant; if we have your confidence and friendship it will be our pleasure to retain them, and do such things as will strengthen those ties. When we were young we received many impressions, good and evil, many of which were learned through things we read. We have possibly read of the bold highwayman, the bloodthirsty Indian, or perchance the noble patriot, the hero and other worthies. All such created impressions, either good or evil. Our intention is to produce only those articles that will impress readers to be good, virtuous, honest and holy, to strike out for whatever is right and manly; to make principle and not popularity, one milestone in your career, in short, to do good. To make it available we have placed the subscription price at $1 for this volume.

BY GRACE ARE YE SAVED.

Modern Christianity has been for ages relying upon the grace of God for salvation, and have entirely neglected the weightier matters, thinking that by a simple belief in the Nazarine Jesus, who dwelt in Judea 1900 years ago, their salvation is secured. In consequence of this, many Priests waft into the arms of Jesus, men accused and guilty of the most wicked crimes. Murderers from the scaffold are swung by the neck into the arms of Abraham—saved in the Kingdom of God (?). Criminals of all descriptions are made secure by acknowledging a simple belief in Jesus, and by mourning at a penitent form, and exhibiting a worldly sorrow.

Such preposterous innovations coming from the dark age, are from beneath, not from God. Of course the devil can quote Scripture, as we find by reading the temptations of Christ. The servants of the devil can also place a wrong construction on the word of God, as they do in these latter days, and you often hear great sermons preached from the following text: "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is a gift of God." (Eph. 2-8.) Also, "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3-16.)

The above, of course, deals directly on the grace of God, who is indeed gracious to His children, in Sending His Son, as that is really the foundation of the Christian religion. Therefore, God's grace and charity are at the foundation of our faith. We cannot be saved without grace, we cannot be saved without faith, and we cannot be saved without works.

To illustrate, if a farmer owned 100 acres of good land, which God had blessed with His sun, and with His rain, in fact, He might be very gracious to that land; as to its environments, it might be capable of producing abundantly. But if the farmer is devoid of faith, and works, he will never expect anything but a harvest of thorns, briars, and noxious weeds. "If he sows the wind he reaps the whirlwind," and therefore the intelligent farmer will apply God's gracious sun and rain to the best advantage; having a belief and faith, which is a perfect assurance that what he sows he will reap, and he applies this faith by planting corn, and tilling it, and otherwise working it until it matures and is ready for the harvest. Thus we see grace, faith, and works and a grand result.

Any one of these gifts would be an entire failure without the other, and the belief in the Lord Jesus Christ alone is not adequate to salvation. James says, in his second chapter, that "faith without works is dead" and that "the devils believe and tremble." So we should be careful how far we allow ourselves to rely upon the grace of God. His Gospel ship is freighted and sailing toward the Millennium. Its officers, Apostles, Prophets, Seventies, and Elders, have control, under the great Captain, Jesus, and the life buoys of grace are being distributed in all the world; but the poor sinner who is floating on the sea of life would rather drown than apply the effort and faith necessary to grasp that God's life buoy, and be saved, and will rather float to his doom, while the ship takes two of a family and one of a city, who are of the seed of Israel, and carries them safe to Zion, where they learn more of the ways of their great Captain, and go on to perfection.

Would that all could fully appreciate the grace of God so as to love Him and keep His commandments, which is equivalent to doing good works, and obeying His laws. Then we can come to perfection; as He desires us to be perfect. Let us follow the admonition of John when he speaks of the Saints and says, "hereby we do know that we do know Him, if we keep His commandments. He that saith, I know Him, and keepeth not His commandments, is a liar and the truth is not in him." (John 2-3.) "But if we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." (I John 1). "Then are we in very deed the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear that we shall be; but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is. And every man that hath this hope purifieth himself, even as He is pure."

The whole teachings of the Gospel of Jesus induces faith and works, and a heartfelt gratitude to God, for the gracious gift of His Son; with the bounteous plan of redemption to the whole human family, who will be saved in the due time of the Lord by His grace, and their faith and works.

May the time speedily come when modern Christians will learn to obey God, and keep His commandments, and not depend wholly upon His grace.

Thanksgiving each year brings many happy reunions around the family board. The hearts of the fathers are turned to their children, and the hearts of their children to their fathers. Family ties are strengthened and love for each other increased. It is a rekindling of the fire of love and reliance in God, without which nations perish. Long live Thanksgiving day.

Brethren—We hope you did not miss the turkey.

Never be persuaded contrary to your better judgment.

The observance of a National Thanksgiving day once a year is a beautiful custom. None should nor none will be more truly thankful to our Creator than the Saints of God. True Saints are thankful for the goodness of our Father in heaven every day in the week.

When a man desires to sleep, he desires to hear no noise; so when a man doth desire to sleep in sin, he desires not to hear the voice of grace disturbing him; and the devil, like a diligent chamberlain, draweth the curtains of darkness and security about him.

Be always at liberty to do good; never make business an excuse to decline the office of humanity.

"Mormon" Roberts.

Editorial, New York World, Nov. 26, 1899.

On what ground is Roberts to be excluded from the House of Representatives of the United States? Has he not "attained to the age of twenty-five years?" Has he not "been seven years a citizen of the United States? Is he not an inhabitant of that State from which he was chosen? Was he not legally chosen in a legally conducted election?

The answers to all these questions as to the constitutional requirements must be in the affirmative. Then the proposal to refuse him his seat is a proposal to defy the Constitution of the United States, to refuse their political rights to the people of Utah.

This is a serious matter. No matter how worthy the people who advocate such a proposal, no matter how irreproachable their moral character, the nature of this proposal is not changed. It is, looked at in its most favorable light, a proposal to do evil that good may come; and the evil is a violation not only of the fundamental law ordained by the people of the United States, but also a violation of the fundamental principle upon which our liberties rest—the principle of representative government.

For such an assault there could be no justification.

THE DARK AGES.

BY ELDER A. ARROWSMITH.

Those who enjoy the light of the everlasting Gospel of Jesus Christ, as restored through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith, can appreciate the difference between that light and the gross darkness into which modern christendom has sunk. But for the benefit of those of our Elders who are not acquainted with the history of the events which transpired during the period of the great Apostacy, I will relate a few items, which will at least be of interest to the Latter-day Saint.

The Prophet Daniel, in his last chapter, eleventh verse, says, "that from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days (1,290)." There are two events of importance herein mentioned, a time when the daily sacrifice is taken away, and a time when an abomination shall be established. And there is a period of time called 1,290 days between these events.

Many comments have been made on these figures, but the Bible establishes beyond peradventure, that a day in Israel was reckoned a year of 360 days. The instance of David serving his Uncle Laban seven years for Rachel, he was deceived, and was requested to fulfill her week also, which meant that he had to serve another seven years. See Gen. 29, 18-20-27; Num. 14-34, also Eze, 4-6. Our Savior's expression to the Pharisees in Luke 13-32, speaking of Herod, said, "Go ye, and tell that fox, behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures today and tomorrow, and the third day I shall be perfected. Nevertheless I must walk today, and tomorrow, and the day following." Christ was not talking of a day of twenty-four hours, but He undoubtedly was speaking of His three years' ministry, referring to the day as a year, and implying that Herod had no power to kill Him, until His mission of three years was accomplished.

There is much testimony that the Israelitish mode of reckoning was different than ours, and that at least in these instances a day was as a year, also that the Hellenic year was used of 360 days, or a month of thirty days. The Bible being translated from the Greek, it is only reasonable to suppose that the Hellenic reckoning would prevail.

My object in making this proof is to show that Daniel refers to a period of 1,290 years, which should transpire before the abomination, or Dark Age, should commence.

I contend that the daily sacrifice was taken away by Antiochus Epiphanes, the King of Syria, when he overran Judea and offered a pig on the temple altar, thus defiling the holy of holies, and the oblation ceased for three years and a half, as recorded in Daniel 8-11. Josephus speaks of this occurrence in the days of the Maccabees.

The next time the daily sacrifice was taken away occurred at the crucifixion, as that sacrifice has surely never been honored by the Almighty since that time. As Christ fulfilled the intent of that sacrifice, and it was of no more efficacy.

I will now introduce the taking away of the daily sacrifice when the ten tribes of Israel were taken captive, 720 years B. C. They were brought into subjection to an idolatrous King, and driven into the northern countries, away from their sacred temple, and the daily sacrifice certainly ceased with them, so far as our knowledge goes. Thus we find a record of the daily sacrifice being taken away three distinct times.

To show how beautifully the Latter-day Saint can establish the foundation of his faith, we will reason upon the latter period. Shalmaneser, the King of Assyria, took the ten tribes captive (or the daily sacrifice away) 720 years B. C. Now let us add the 1,290 years to the abomination, and we reach the period of 570 years after Christ. The duration of this universal apostacy was to be 1,260 years; as I will prove from the word of God. Add 570 years to 1,260 years, and what is the result? The great year of jubilee, and liberation from the thraldom of Satan, when the Gospel was restored to the earth, in its pristine beauty, and God's Church was duly established through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith, 1830. What a remarkable result.

The worldly commentators have placed various interpretations upon the word of God, to their condemnation, but these figures stand as a testimony before the world. This, taken in connection with Daniel's second chapter, also his seventh, makes strong evidence to support a literal fulfillment of these events.

Daniel also speaks of a succession of empires, and man-made kingdoms, which should be overthrown and broken in pieces. He also sees through the vista of time when the God of Heaven should establish a kingdom, which should never be destroyed, nor given to another people, but should stand forever. The Babylonian, Medio Persian, Macedonian and Roman empires, with a power which should devour and break in pieces, speak great words against the Most High, wear out the Saints, change times and laws, and otherwise despoil the Church of God, fulfill this prophecy. A great beast was to arise, who should receive power from the dragon, or Satan, which should drive the Church and Priesthood of God into the wilderness, where she should be protected for 1,260 years, or a time, times, and the dividing of time, see Rev. 12, 1 to 6, 13th, 4 to 8, and much evidence is adduced to substantiate the fact that this abomination which maketh desolate, or universal apostasy, should be in existence for 1,260 years, and the whole earth be under the power of the beast, dragon, or Lucifer. And that the Church of Christ, with the Priesthood of the Almighty, should be taken from the earth for a period of 1,260 years.

The question might be asked, How do you arrive at the time, times, and the dividing of time, being a period of 1,260 years?

I will explain as briefly as possible, that Nebuchadnezzar, for his haughty vanity, was driven out to live as the beast, until "seven times" had passed over him. Or, in other words, he lost his identity, and eat grass with the beasts for seven years.

This would appear as if time was a year. And if a time was a year, why not times, which is the plural, mean two years, and the dividing of time a half a year. Now, at the 360 day year, it figures exactly 1,260 days, or the same period spoken of more clearly in John's apocalpse seen on Patmos, referred to in Rev. 12th and 13th chapters, where he speaks of it as forty-two months and 1,260 days. This data appears synonymous. And the day being as a year, we have the remarkable period of 1,260 years, when this earth would be turned over to a reign of terror, bloodshed and abominable desolation. The history of the Dark Ages will verify the fulfillment of this prophecy.

This is a lengthy subject, and I have been thus verbose, that I might more clearly account for the 1,290 years between the time of the sacrifice taken by Shalmaneser 720 years before Christ, and the fulfillment of the time 570 years after Christ, when commenced the great Dark Age of universal apostasy. Bridging over that period of darkness 1,260 years, to the restoration in this the nineteenth century, when angels have again visited the earth, and the kingdom spoken of by Daniel established in the year 1830.

The world might scoff and deride such egotism (?) presented by that despised and hated sect, called Mormons, but such derision is no argument.

The above is an introduction to a series of articles, to be published weekly, and I will try to take the subject up by the century, in order that it may be easy for the Elders to refer to. I will endeavor to show the most salient points in the great apostasy, commencing at the first century.

UNBELIEF—MIRACLES.

Western Standard, Nov. 1, 1856.

The unbelief of the present generation regarding the power and attributes which were formerly ascribed to the Lord, is extraordinary. They have an idea that He has ceased to give Himself the slightest concern about anything that pertains to earth or its inhabitants. True, they believe, or at least so express themselves sometimes, that He exercises a supervision over the affairs of men, and that He is the controlling power; but this is merely the effect of education, and not the result of personal experience. They see so little of what they imagine to be His management and interposition, that they have concluded the jurisdiction He exercises is of a general and not of a local nature. If plague, famine, earthquakes, or sickness and distress, therefore, should come in their midst, instead of acknowledging the hand of the Lord in them, or thinking that He can possibly have anything to do with the matter, they seek to account for their presence on purely natural principles. Hence, when pestilence enters a city there is no appeal made to the people to humble themselves under the chastening hand of the Lord; but they are exalted, in the strongest language, to attend to the sanitary regulations, and, if they attend strictly to them, it is all that is required. They act as though they believe that God had not power to operate, or that if He has the power, He will have to operate in an unaccountable and supernatural manner; therefore, everything that can be accounted for on natural principles must, of necessity, be independent of any agency on His part. These are the commonly received opinions of the day, and we see men everywhere acting upon them; yet nothing can be more absurd than such a belief. God always acts in accordance with well-defined and understood laws, and does not violate the laws of nature in the least in performing all His wonderful works. Because men, not comprehending how such works are performed, term them miraculous, it does not necessarily follow that there is a suspension of the laws of naure in such cases; neither does it follow, because men can partially comprehend a law according to which certain results are produced, that God has nothing to do with it. Everything that the Lord Himself performs, or which He commands His servants to perform, is plain and simple, and easily understood by Him—it is no miracle to Him, because He comprehends the law by the observance of which such things are produced. Mankind term such works miracles and supernatural, because they have not progressed sufficiently to understand how they can be done, without the suspension of the laws of nature. Did they fully understand all the laws of nature, however, they would then perceive that in the performance of these "miracles" no law of nature is in the least violated; but rather that they are produced by the superior knowledge of these laws which the person has who works them or the Being who permits them to be worked.

In nothing is the scepticism of the present age more visibly apparent, than in their treatment of the words of Jesus Christ and His Apostles, in regard to the practice of the ordinance of laying on hands and anointing with oil for the recovery of the sick. They have made such advances, as they think, in the art of medicine, that if a person should distrust their modes of healing, or express doubts about the ability of the medical practitioners of the present day, and have any desire to cling to the old mode revealed by Jesus and practiced so successfully by His disciples, he is thought to be a fanatic and a fool—too superstitious to keep pace with the discoveries of the age. Yet Jesus has plainly said, and the experience of His disciples, and their records contained in the Bible, substantiate the truth of His saying—that those who believed on Him and kept His commandments, should have this power. James, one of the Apostles of the Lord, in writing to the Church, counsels them if there should be any sick among them, to send for the Elders of the Church, and they would pray over them, anointing them with oil in the name of the Lord, and He promises them that the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise them up. The individuals who, in the most of instances, cry the loudest "folly, fanaticism and superstition" when they hear about the Latter-day Saints practicing this mode in the treatment of the sick, are those who boast the most of their belief in the Scriptures; and still they imagine themselves to be consistent. Jesus says this gift of healing shall be possesed by the believer. They say it shall not. James says, if any are sick, let them send for the Elders of the Church. They say, if any are sick, let them send for the physician. He says, the anointing of the sick with oil in the name of the Lord, with the prayer of faith, shall save the sick. They say, such a thing would be a miracle, and miracles have ceased; therefore, if the sick wish to be healed, instead of anointing them with the oil let them be dosed with medicine prescribed by physicians. This latter mode would be natural in their opinion, and the plan recommended by James supernatural. Because they cannot understand the principle by which the sick can be healed in this manner, they jump at the conclusion that a law of nature is suspended, and what they are pleased to term—a miracle, performed. The Latter-day Saints, on the contrary, believe it to be as much or more in consonance with the laws of nature to heal the sick by this treatment —because recommended by the God of nature, the Being who gave nature her laws—than by any other, and, therefore, are so indifferent in regard to the opinions of the world on the subject, that they practice it. As they progress in faith and knowledge, their comprehension will be so expanded that they will understand the principle upon which such things are done, and they will then cease to appear supernatural or miraculous.

Because the Latter-day Saints maintain that this gift, in conjunction with the other gifts which Jesus promised, is in the Church, and always will be enjoyed whenever God has a Church upon the earth, number tauntingly say, if you will give us an exhibition of this power —if you will work a miracle for us, we will believe your doctrines; for then we will have indubitable evidence that you are sent of God. And these poor creatures profess, too, to be believers in the Bible. They are so sceptical about the truth of the words of the Lord Jesus, whom they profess to adore and worship as their God, that they wish those who contend for the truth and infallibility of His words, to work a miracle to convince them that He did not deceive when He said, "These signs shall follow them that believe!" But, even if, what they term, a miracle should be performed—if they were to behold such an exhibition of power, would they be warranted in receiving the performer as a servant of God? If supreme power, and supreme power alone, could violate or transgress a law of nature, and it required such a transgression to constitute a miracle, then a manifestation of that kind might be reliable. But who can say that in the exercise of any of the gifts which Jesus promised to those who believed on Him and kept His commandments, a law of nature is transgressed or suspended? Shall we say because we cannot comprehend it, that, therefore, an eternal law is violated? As well might the savage, not understanding the philosophy of paper talking—of thoughts being communicated by letter to those at a distance, assert that a law of nature is violated in that operation, because it does not come within the grasp of his limited comprehension; or the man who hears, for the first time, that messages can be sent hundreds of miles with the speed of thought, pronounce it impossible unless a law of nature be suspended. Mankind should not, because a man performs something which, to them, may appear strange and unaccountable, imagine that he has the power to violate a law of nature, and that they may therefore receive him as a servant of God; for if they do, they will be liable to be deceived.

We are convinced that these manifestations, which are known as miracles, would be very commonly witnessed on the earth, if mankind would but live aright. When they are not enjoyed, the fault is in man, as the Lord is as willing and can as easily bestow them as hundreds of other blessings and gifts which He does bestow, which are not esteemed as miraculous on account of their being so generally enjoyed.

THE ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT.

Improvement Era.

Much has been said at different times as to the whereabouts of the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, but very little of a definite character has been said respecting this topic. Quite recently an article on this subject was reprinted in the St. Louis Republic, from a Richmond, Missouri, correspondent, and copied by the Troy, N. Y., Press and reproduced from the latter paper by the Deseret News of September 27th, with appropriate comment. That the readers of the Era may more clearly see the puerile, but malicious character of this article, which is a fair sample of many others published in the press of the country, on this subject, it is here reproduced:

"The original manuscript of Joseph Smith's 'Book of Mormon,' the Bible of the 'Mormon' Church, is kept in a bank vault in this town. The Elders of the 'Mormon' Church, in Utah, made different attempts, in past years, to get possession of it, but failed. Once they offered $100,000 in cash for the old and yellow manuscript, but its keeper, David Whitmer, one of the founders of the Church, refused the offer because he believed the Utah branch of the Church wished to get hold of the manuscript to insert into it, by forgery, a clause that would authorize and sanction the practice of polygamy. Last week two representatives of the 'Mormon' Church, of Utah, were here making another attempt to buy the manuscript. This original manuscript, written at the dictation of Joseph Smith, is now in the possession of George W. Schweich, of this town, a retired merchant, the grandson of David Whitmer, who was one of the three witnesses to the writing of the manuscript. The manuscript of the 'Book of Mormon' contains 600 large sheets of linen paper, the size of foolscap, written closely on both sides. The paper is yellow with age, and the ink is faded to brown. The pages are bound together with strings of yarn. The manuscript contains 350,000 words. It was written in 1829."

The fact of the matter is that the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon never was "kept in a bank vault" in the town of Richmond nor in that or any other town in Missouri. Neither has the original manuscript ever been in the possession of David Whitmer nor that of any of his kindred. Neither has the "Mormon" Church in Utah, through any of its Elders or otherwise, attempted at any time to get possession of the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, "and failed." The Church in Utah has not at any time, through its Elders or otherwise, offered $100,000 nor any other sum of money for the original manuscript, nor for the "old and yellow" copy of it which was left by Oliver Cowdery, at his death at Richmond, Missouri, March 3d, 1850, in the possession of David Whitmer, which copy is said to be now "in a bank vault" in Richmond, Missouri. The story about David Whitmer refusing "the offer" of $100,000 for his copy of the manuscript, "because he believed the Utah branch of the Church wished to get hold of the manuscript to insert into it, by forgery, a clause that would authorize and sanction the practice of polygamy," is ridiculous twaddle. The fact, however, that such a story is told, and published in some of the leading newspapers of the country, would make it appear that there are people blind enough to give credence to it.

First, let it be said that David Whitmer's "belief," if he ever entertained such a belief, together with the whole story, is without the least shadow of truth. How could it be possible for such a thing as forgery to be perpetrated? Up to the date of the alleged offer hundreds of thousands of copies of the Book of Mormon had been published and scattered broadcast over the world, and, besides, translated into more than a dozen foreign languages. Therefore, even if David Whitmer or the agents of the "Mormon Church of Utah" might desire to alter the manuscript, how could they hope to call in and change the tens of thousands of the printed book? Comment is unnecessary. A grain of common sense will show how imbecile the thought.

The statement that "last week two representatives of the 'Mormon' Church, of Utah, were here making another attempt to buy the manuscript," is a falsehood of the same class. However, there may have been occasionally an Elder of the Church, not posted on this subject, who, for some purpose known to himself, might have tried to ascertain the value in which this manuscript is held by its possessors. But no man, Elder or Apostle, is, or ever has been, authorized by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to offer any sum of money for the manuscript now in the possession of the heirs of David Whitmer. In September, 1878, in company with Apostle Orson Pratt, the writer visited David Whitmer, at Richmond, Ray county, Missouri. In the presence of David C. Whitmer, the son of Jacob, Philander Page, David J. Whitmer, son of David Whitmer, George Schweich, Col. James W. Black, J. R. B. Van Cleave and some others, Father David Whitmer was asked if the three witnesses signed their own names to the testimony to the Book of Mormon? Father Whitmer unhesitatingly replied with emphasis:

"Yes, we each signed his own name."

"Then," said the questioner, "how is it that the names of all the witnesses are found here (in D. W.'s manuscript), written in the same handwriting?"

This question seemed to startle Father Whitmer, and, after examining the signatures, he replied:

"Oliver must have copied them."

"Then, where are the original documents?" was asked.

He replied, "I don't know."

Knowing as we did with what sacredness this manuscript was regarded by Father Whitmer, both Elder Pratt and the writer sounded him to see if he could be induced to part with it, and we found him determined to retain it. We were not authorized to offer any money for the manuscript, neither did we make any offer of money or other consideration for it. But notwithstanding this fact, it was soon rumored about and published abroad that we had offered large sums of money for it.

In July, 1884, the writer received the following inquiries, by letter, from L. J. Traughbar, Jr., of Mandeville, Carrol county, Missouri:

"Did Mr. Pratt and you offer David Whitmer $10,000 for the manuscript of the Book of Mormon? Did you offer him $100,000? Did you make him any definite offer for them?"

To each question there can be but one reply, No, not these amounts and not one dollar!

Now let us see what became of the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon. The following is copied from the history of the Prophet Joseph Smith by his mother (pp. 142 and 143):

"Soon after this Joseph secured the copyright; and before he returned to Pennsylvania, where he had left his wife, he received a commandment which was in substance as follows:

"First, that Oliver Cowdery should transcribe the whole manuscript. Second, that he should take but one copy at a time to the office, so that if one copy should get destroyed, there would still be a copy remaining. Third, that in going to and from the office he should always have a guard attend him, for the purpose of protecting the manuscript. Fourth, that a guard should be kept constantly on the watch, both night and day, about the house to protect the manuscript from malicious persons, who would infest the house for the purpose of destroying the manuscript. All these things were strictly attended to, as the Lord commanded Joseph. After giving these instructions, Joseph returned to Pennsylvania."

This is sufficient to show that the original manuscript was copied by Oliver Cowdery.

The following letter may be interesting here:

"Further facts in relation to the manuscript of the Book of Mormon. I saw the Prophet Joseph Smith, Jr., hide up the above manuscript unto the Lord in the southeast corner of the Nauvoo House, Illinois. I stood within eight or ten feet of him, heard and saw what he said and did, on that important occasion, which I freely testify to all the world.

"(Signed) Frederick Kesler, Sr.,
"Bishop of the Sixteenth Ward,
"Salt Lake City, Utah.

"October 12th, 1878."

From the history of Joseph Smith, Millennial Star, Vol. 18, page 693. (See also Times and Seasons, Vol. 2, page 576), we copy: Conference met in the grove. The Presidency being absent laying the corner stone of the Nauvoo house, the meeting was called to order by President B. Young." This is under date of October 2d, 1841.

Many years ago the writer copied the following statement from the early records of the Church, which were kept by his private secretary under the immediate direction and supervision of the Prophet Joseph Smith himself:

"The corner stone of the Nauvoo house was laid by President Joseph Smith on the 2d day of October, 1841, and the following articles were deposited therein by the President, to-wit:

"A Book of Mormon; a revelation given January 19th, 1841; the Times and Seasons, containing the charter of the Nauvoo house; Journal of Heber C. Kimball; the memorial of Lyman Wight to the United States Senate; a Book of Doctrine and Covenants, first edition; No. 35 of the Times and Seasons; the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon; the Persecutions of the Church in the State of Missouri, published in the Times and Seasons; the Holy Bible. Silver coins as follows: one half-dollar, one quarter-dollar, two dimes, two half-dimes, and one copper coin."

Thus we see that the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, which had up to this time remained in the possession of Joseph himself, was on October, 2d, 1841, by his own hand, deposited in the southeast corner of the Nauvoo house, with other things, and that it never was at any time in the possession of David Whitmer. The copy taken was used for printing by E. B. Grandin, of Palmyra, New York. Oliver Cowdery read the proofs, and when the book was printed retained possession of the copy, which, at his death, in Richmond, fell in the hands of David Whitmer. These are the facts. And, in further proof, the writer avers that he is now in possession of a portion of the original manuscript, and "The Memorial of Lyman Wight to the United States Senate," which were taken from the Nauvoo house about the year 1884, by L. C. Bidamon, when he removed that portion of the house which contained the records.—Joseph F. Smith.

North Alabama Conference.

The Elders of the North Alabama Conference, about forty in number, met in Tuscaloosa, Alabama's "City of Oaks," on the 19th and 20th insts., and held their annual conference. There was some opposition, yet a most excellent time was enjoyed.

A few days previous to the appointed time President Thomas H. Humphreys entered Tuscaloosa and made arrangements with the hotels to entertain the Elders and Saints; also secured the use of the opera house in which to hold services.

Some difficulty was experienced in advertising the public meetings through the columns of the local papers, because of existing prejudice. As the next best, some dodgers were issued and posted in conspicuous places, besides being left at every home in the city.

In the absence of real provocation to make trouble for the Elders, and thus destroy the good effects of the conference, some citizen (?), probably the Mayor, had President Humphrey arrested, under the charge of "defacing public property" by attaching dodgers to trees with carpet tacks, inserted to a depth of an eighth of an inch, all this notwithstanding the fact that the trees in question were already victims of the jackknife, nails and tacks by the hundreds; yet when a despised "Mormon" used the same privileges granted the public he must be arrested. This contemptible act did not meet the approval of broader-minded citizens and the charge was withdrawn.

The weather during the conference was perfect, to the enjoyment of Elders and Saints. Saturday night all the Elders arrived and the usual rejoicing and hanshakings characteristic on such an occasion were indulged in.

President Ben E. Rich arrived early Sunday morning, and at 10 o'clock all assembled at the opera house. The audience was rather small, due no doubt to a misunderstanding in the minds of many as to the time of meeting.

After devotional exercises President Humphreys made a short address of welcome and introduced Elder G. M. Matthews as the first speaker. Elder Matthews spoke pointedly upon church organization. President Rich followed and spoke very forcibly upon the rights guaranteed by the Constitution, making reference to an article which appeared in the Tuscaloosa Times, written by the Mayor, villifying the "Mormon" Elders.

At the afternoon meeting President Rich spoke in his usual forcible and pleasing manner upon the doctrines and beliefs of the Latter-day Saints, and again in the evening on "Principles Considered Peculiar to Mormonism." Upon both occasions, especially the latter, large and appreciative congregations assembled. Most of the best citizens of Tuscaloosa assembled. The services created a good effect and aroused much interest. A pleasing feature of the afternoon services was a quartet rendered by Elders Perkins, Fisher, Thorn and Madsen.

Council meetings were held Sunday afternoon and Monday morning, at which many valuable instructions were given.

On Tuesday the Elders left for their various fields amid "good byes," with strong determinations to elevate the standard of North Alabama Conference.

COURAGE.

How strange this conflict of our daily life,
This human life, with all its loves and pains;
With all its heavy losses and its gains,
With all its joys and all its grief and strife.

A nation struggles thro' mistake and sin,
Brave lives are lost and fiercer grows the fight,
Thro' dark, sad years men grope toward the light,
And thro' the clouds they see the dawn begin.

Rise up, my soul, to fight thine own good part,
For everywhere is victory born of pain;
Rise o'er the ashes of thy passions slain,
Be strong to bear and to endure, O heart!

IN THE MISSION.

Elders and Saints will be pleased to learn that Elder C. W. Burnham, of Virginia Conference, is improving, after a long illness.

The Elders laboring in Petersburg and Richmond, Va., have so far been unable to get permission to sell books. People of these cities generally treat them with courtesy.

The Mayor of Tuscaloosa, Ala., evidently believes in the Bible, when it is closed, and the Constitution of these United States only when in accordance with his (?) ideas. He thinks "Mormonism" ought not to be tolerated.

Elder Ben L. Rich has received and accepted an invitation to deliver an address before an Agnostic society in Cincinnati—subject, "Divine Authenticity of the Bible and Book of Mormon." The lecture will be delivered some time in January.

Bishop Derby Johnson, Jr., of Colonia Diaz, Mexico, is a Bishop after our own heart. About every so often we get a letter from him reading about like this: "How is Elder —— getting along? Does he need anything? Brother —— is one of 'my boys,' and I want to know how he is prospering. Kindly let me hear from you."

Brethren, put a ring around this and send to your Bishop.

Not long since two Elders laboring in Georgia were arrested for not having paid their poll tax. The laws of Georgia exempt ministers from this tax, but the court held "these Mormons are not ministers," and imposed a fine. The Elders could not show a diploma from a "preacher factory," and being called to preach in the old-fashioned way did not count.

St. Peter, the illiterate fisherman, to whom was given the keys of the Kingdom, would have had a hard time before such a judge. Unquestionably he would have met the same fate as these humble men of God.

SOLITUDE.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Laugh, and the world laughs with you;
Weep, and you weep alone,
For the sad old earth must borrow its mirth,
But has trouble enough of its own.
Sing, and the hills will answer;
Sigh, it is lost on the air,
The echoes bound to a joyful sound,
But shrink from voicing care.

Rejoice, and men will seek you;
Grieve, and they turn and go.
They want full measure of all your pleasure,
But they do not need your woe.
Be glad, and your friends are many;
Be sad, and you lose them all,—
There are none to decline your nectar'd wine,
But alone you must drink life's gall.

Feast, and your halls are crowded;
Fast, and the world goes by.
Succeed and give, and it helps you live,
But no man can help you die.
There is room in the halls of pleasure
For a large and lordly train,
But one by one we must all file on Through the narrow aisles of pain.

Look before you ere you leap,
For as you sow, you're like to reap.

'Tis better to be lowly born
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'ed up in a glistening grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

We are pleased to announce the appointment of Elder John Peterson as president of the East Tennessee Conference, successor to F. B. Hammond, Jr., released to return home. Thirty-five years ago Elder Peterson was born at Saxtrop, Sweden. Soon after this time his parents decided to locate in more congenial climes, and with a fond farewell they left the mother country for America, arriving safely in the fall of 1869. They located at Huntsville, then moved to Ogden, where Brother Peterson acquired his education by attending the public schools. Each of the children were required to assist in the support of each other, and consequently they had but little time to attend school. At the age of 16 he left home, hoping to better his circumstances. He followed railroading, ranching, mining, etc. While visiting friends in Moab, Grand county, a sudden desire to keep the commandments of God came upon him, and he accordingly took unto himself a wife that he might begin with the first. Three of heaven's jewels adorn his home as a result of this union, who will feel proud to welcome a faithful father home. He arrived in Chattanooga in March, 1898, and was assigned to the East Tennessee Conference, where he has labored very efficiently in every branch of missionary work, and is well qualified for the position he has been called to.

ELDER JOHN PETERSON,
President East Tennessee Conference.

We feel that East Tennessee will not be behind in any respect to other conferences, for our confidence in Brother Peterson assures us differently.

History of the Southern States Mission.

March—

This being the month set for the spring emigration of Saints, most of the Elders were busy helping someone off.

The company consisted of seventy souls, including eleven Elders, who were returning home, under the direction of George A. Smith.

Eight Elders arrived during the month and were assigned to the various states of the Mission.

Several of the Elders had school houses closed against them, and one case of mobbing, but no serious results.

During the month 1,500 tracts were distributed in Charleston, S. C., by Elders Dorrity and Tanner. They could get no house in which to hold services and resorted to the street, but with little success. Several baptisms were reported.

April—

A number of releases and appointments were made during the month.

Twenty-one baptisms, and good health among the Elders.

In Nicholas county, Va., Elders Krogue and Cranney were forced to leave that part of the state, where they were laboring, for more congenial climes.

Elders Harris and Seegmiller had a similar experience in South Alabama.

On April 21 a mob who had been hounding Elders Taylor and Carter called at the home of Brother James Watts, where they forced an entrance and searched the house, also all sheds, barns, etc., to try to find the Elders. Fortunately the Elders had left a few hours before and were out of harm's way.

May—

Reports from the various Conferences were full of good news and encouragement. All Elders reported well.

A little more animosity than usual was manifested in some of the Conferences, and in some instances mobs were organized.

Forty baptisms were reported during the month.

About forty souls, including several Elders, went west.

Elders Rushton and Gardner, in Smith county, Tenn., were abused and mobbed.

Elders May and Haycock met the usual Mississippi mob in Marion county. This was all that happened to them, just the meeting.

Elders Miles and Schwanaveldt were ment in Clarenden county, S. C., by nine men, who forbade them preaching in the school house, then in the county, and finally in the state. At the request of the nine the Elders produced their license to preach, and much to the amusement of the onlookers, for not one of the nine could read. Such men generally make mobs.

Fifteen Elders arrived and received their appointments.

HABIT.

BY PHILIP S. MAYCOCK.

Electricity is a force which, when properly controlled, is capable of producing the highest kind of benefit to mankind. With this power at command of man, space counts for little—one can talk to his friend who is miles distant. By it the machinery of the factory is kept in motion, and the machinery of life is stilled.

But when not under control, electricity produces widespread destruction; it leaves ruin in its path.

As to its nature, we cannot compare habit to electricity; but as to the kind of effect it produces, we can so compare it. For if we make habit our friend we may rise by its aid from the lowly earth to the vaulted skies of character; we can possess that true worth which "lies in being, not seeming; in doing each day that goes by some little good, not in dreaming of great things to do by and by;" or as our foe, habit will bind us hand and foot; it becomes a cruel despot whose abject slaves we are.

Now, we want to learn something about the nature of this being; how to act so as to make him our friend; how to fight him successfully if, unfortunately, he has become our foe.

It has been fitly said that the little child lying in the cradle is a bundle of possibilities. Embodied in that little lump of flesh are the germs that may yet develop into a Newton. Whether this result shall follow or not depends largely on the direction in which these possibilities shall develop—on the habits that are formed. In childhood "the season, the soil, the seed and the implements are all in our hands," and we may choose what we will plant. But, having once chosen and planted the seed, we can neither change nor escape the harvest. The possibilities of the child develop until they become habits in the adult, who is aptly called a mere walking bundle of habits.

The child's organism, nature, "make-up"—call it what you will—is such that every act or state of the mind leaves an enduring effect. The organism tends to form itself in accordance with the mode in which it is constantly exercised. Power and tendency are the results of all acts; that is, there is more likelihood of again doing an act once done and there is greater ease in doing it.

To get an understanding of the nature of habit let me perform a little experiment—(paper-folding.)

In the broader meaning of the term habit, we may say that the paper has been habituated to fold in a particular way. Other similar instances are at hand. A coat after having been worn for a time clings to the body better than when it was new. There has been a change in the tissue of the coat, and this change is a habit. The wooden frame of the violin has the function, I believe, of intensifying, by the vibrations of the wood particles, the sound made by the strings of the violin. It is a well-known fact the sounds of the violin improve in quality in the hands of a master. And a violin that has been long used by a master commands a fabulous price. The explanation of the improvement in quality of sound is that the particles of wood have, in the hands of a master, been habituated to respond in a certain way so as to produce harmony. It is said that the laws of nature are nothing but the unchangeable habits which the various sects of matter follow in their action and reaction on one another. For example, the fact that a body once set in motion would continue forever, did not some external force prevent, is simply an unchangeable habit of all matter.

But let us speak of habit in things with life. There seem to be two kinds of habit, called active and passive. By Rosenkranz, active habit is said to be the preparing of the mind for action upon the outer world, while passive habit is the preparing of the mind to be acted upon by outer agencies; that is, active habit is the steeling of the internal for action upon the external: and passive habit is the steeling of the internal against the influences of the external. As an illustration of passive habit, we may refer to the boy beginning to smoke; the body objects, but the boy continues the practice and in consequence, the body adapts itself to the condition; it grows to the way in which it is treated. Persons who have been confined many years to dungeons, ask to be readmitted to prison, after having been set free. An instance of this kind occurred here in our city. One prisoner who had been kept at the city jail for a number of years, could not be driven away; he had to be allowed to pass the remainder of his days there. The man who lives in the city and often hears the piteous complaint of the street beggar gets into the habit of hearing unaffected such tales; he steels himself against them; they do not affect him as they affect the man from the country, who is immediately melted to tears, and likely gives his all, in a financial sense, to the beggar. The boy who is continually scolded soon becomes indifferent to the scolding. As illustrations of active habit there may be named the habit of walking. The child had to give attention to each separate movement, and then poorly succeeded, but the adult walks with his attention centered on a subject far removed from the problem of how to walk. The various single acts in walking have become so closely connected that, if one be presented, the others follow without the intervention of either will or consciousness.

On one occasion, in telling a story you had heard you exaggerated somewhat. It was not so easy to exaggerate then, but when you told a second story, you found it much easier to exaggerate, and each successive time less effort was required to bring about the exaggeration, till now it is almost impossible for you to tell a story without exaggerating; you have formed the habit. When you began to study, you found it difficult to attend for a great length of time; now, as a result of habit, you can attend for hours.

From these illustrations we can draw the definition that habit is a fixed disposition to act or to be acted upon (either physically or mentally), and an ease in acting or being acted upon—this condition being the result of numerous repetitions of similar actions.

Let us now refer to the conditions of the formation, and of the strength of habit. The conditions are similar in the two cases, for what tends to form a habit will increase the strength of one already formed.

The first condition is, the amount of attention given at the outset, at the beginning of the formation of the habit. Launch yourselves out with as strong a beginning as possible. Let all circumstances favor the action which you desire to turn over to habit.

The second condition is, frequently repeating the habit tends to fix it. Repetition is the great means of forming a habit.

The third condition is, we must not only repeat, but repeat uniformly. Continuity is necessary. Never suffer an exception to occur till the habit is firmly rooted in your life. Each exception is like the letting fall of a ball of string which one is carefully winding up; the single slip undoes more than a great many turns will wind again. If you are forming the habit of arising early in the morning, and fail on one morning to get up somewhat near the time set, you will find it very hard to rise the next morning at the appointed time. The effect of the lack of continuity is shown on such occasions as holidays in school. The student does not study during the holiday, and as a result he finds it difficult to begin to study again when school commences.

The same conditions are required for the breaking up of an old habit that are required for the forming of a new one. And this brings us to the question of how to break off old habits, or the question of "tapering off." On this matter there is a wide difference of opinion. Dr. Sulzheim says: "All changes which nature produces are successive, and we ought to imitate her proceedings. It is the same in dietetic rules, and in every manner of feeling and thinking. Drunkards cannot leave off their bad habits suddenly, without injuring their health. Those who are near starving from inanition will perish if too much nourishment be given; and too much light dazzles those who have long lived in darkness. The bad effects of great and sudden changes of temperature on such bodies as glass, plants, animals and man are generally known. Great and sudden changes of political, moral and religious opinions are not borne with indifference."

However, the best authorities agree that an abrupt breaking off of the old habit and an abrupt acquisition of the new is the best method to follow. Dr. James says: "In the main, experts agree that abrupt acquisition of the new habit is the best way, if there be a real possibility of carrying it out. We must be careful not to give the will so stiff a task as to insure its defeat at the very outset; but, provided one can stand it, a sharp period of suffering and then a free time is the best thing to aim at, whether in giving up a habit like that of opium, or in simply changing one's hours of rising or of work. It is surprising how soon a desire will die if it be never fed. One must first learn to walk firmly on the straight and narrow path, looking neither to the right nor to the left, before one can begin to make one's self over again (that is, break off old habits). He who every day makes a fresh resolve is like one who, arriving at the edge of a ditch he is to leap, forever stops and returns for a fresh run."

Then let us remember that habits are formed by attentive practice, and are forgotten by disuse. A child can be made to form a habit by giving it the opportunity to practice it specially and by removing opportunities for action colliding with it. Heighten the pleasure in the action by the union of pleasant impressions with the deed, and, on the other hand, make the conflicting habits unpleasant by uniting pain with them. In other words, make it easy and pleasurable for the child to tell the truth, and hard and unpleasant for him to tell a lie, if you want to form the habit of truthfulness in him. And only when he speaks the truth as a habit is he safe. It has been said that he is not honest in the strictest sense of the word who must still be on his guard that he may not cheat his fellowmen or covet their goods; but he only is honest indeed with whom honesty has become a favorite habit, which rules his inmost sensibilities and aspirations, so that no power from without can turn him away from it.

Habit is a cable. We weave a thread for it each day, and it becomes so strong that we cannot break it. If not resisted, habit soon becomes necessity. It is during the period of childhood and youth that we weave this habit. This the young should clearly understand: "As the twig is bent the tree is inclined." Wool once dyed never regains its primitive whiteness.

If the young appreciated the fact that childhood and youth is the season for the formation of habits, and that the effect of an evil habit never can be wholly eradicated, there would be fewer excuses for youthful follies. The hackneyed cry that the boy must sow his wild oats would be considered almost blasphemy. No one is ever safe from evil, if he has ever practiced evil. A bad habit broken off, may be left in disuse for years, yet in an unguarded moment it may assert itself. Too many reformed drundards, when worry and misfortune overtakes them return to their old love. Just as a sprained ankle or dislocated arm is to a greater or less degree, in danger of being sprained or dislocated again when favorable circumstances offer themselves; so the one, who once practiced stealing or lying is likely again to do the same thing if the circumstances be favorable.

The flirt before marriage is likely to be the flirt after marriage. Therefore be not blinded by the statement that it matters not what habits the youth or the maiden forms, so long as they break them of when they become men or women. The evil effect of these habits is likely to flow on through indefinite ages, acting as a damning blot against them in the great day of judgment.

When formed in early life, habits are more easily formed and are much more permanent. The traces of what is early learned are never lost. In later years the organism has become more rigid, the sense of doubt and the anticipation of difficulties have become stronger, and, what is more important, the whole force of habits which have been allowed to form themselves during youth have to be encountered. For these reasons it is harder to form a habit in later years. Dr. James says: "Already, at the age of 25, you see the professional mannerism settling on the young commercial traveler, on the young doctor, on the young counsellor-at-law. You see the little lines of cleavage running through the character, the tricks of thought, the prejudices, the 'ways of the shop,' in a word, from which the man can by and by no more escape than his coat sleeve can suddenly fall into a new set of folds. On the whole it is best he should not escape. It is well for the world that in most of us by the age of 30, the character is set like plaster, and will never soften again. If the period between 20 and 30 is the critical one in the formation of intellectual and professional habits, the period below 20 is more important still for the fixing of personal habits, properly so-called, such as pronunciation, gesture, motion, and address. Hardly ever is a language learned after 20, spoken without a foreign accent. Hardly ever can a youth transferred to the society of his betters unlearn the nasality and other vices of speech, bred in him in his growing years. Hardly ever indeed, no matter how much money there be in his pocket, can he ever learn to dress like a gentleman born. The merchants offer their wares to him as eagerly as to the veriest swell, but he simply cannot buy the right things. An invisible law as strong as gravitation, keeps him within his orbit arrayed this year as he was last, and how his better-bred acquaintances contrive to get the things they wear will be for him a mystery till his dying day. The great thing then in all education is to make our habits our ally instead of our enemy.

For this we must make habitual as early as possible as many useful actions as we can, and guard against growing into ways that will be disadvantageous to us, as we should guard against the plague. The more of the details of our daily life we can hand over to the custody of habit, the more our higher powers will be set free for their own proper work."

Further, since habits are so easily formed in childhood, single actions have an importance far beyond what at first seems due to them. The tendency to repetition is so strong in the young that a lie told in jest, a little carelessness in dress or wastefulness in food may lead to habits of untruthfulness, carelessness or prodigality. On this point Dr. James fitly remarks: "The hell to be endured hereafter, of which theology tells, is no worse than the hell we make for ourselves in this world by habitually fashioning our characters in the wrong way. Could the young but realize how soon they will become mere walking bundles of habits, they would give more heed to their conduct. We are spinning our own fates—good or evil—and never to be undone. Every smallest stroke of virtue or of vice leaves its never so little scar. The drunken Rip Van Winkle in Jefferson's play excuses himself for every fresh dereliction by saying: 'I won't count this time.' Well, he may not count it, and a kind heaven may not count it, but it is being counted none the less. Down among his nerve cells and fibres the molecules are counting it, registering and storing it up to be used against him when the next temptation comes. Nothing we ever do is in strict scientific literalness wiped out. Of course this has its good side. As we become permanent drunkards by so many separate drunks, so we may become saints in the moral and authorities and experts in the practical and scientific spheres by so many separate acts and hours of work."

BY ELDER A. ARROWSMITH.

The First Century.

To fully understand the nature of my former article, and that we might more fully comprehend the situation, in the gradual decline of primitive Christianity, it will be necessary to point out from the first century the many innovations that crept in even from its inception, when Rome was at her zenith, and governed by the Caesars.

The prevailing religions were Pagan, under the name of Epicurians, Academics, Platonics, Eclectics and Gnostics. There was a philosophy taught in the schools of Alexandria, the New Platonic, which taught men to lead very devout and austere lives; but the Pagans generally were very corrupt, worshipping gods who would pander to their passionate licentiousness, such as Jupiter, an adulterer; Mars, a murderer; Mercury, a thief; Bacchus, a drunkard; Venus, a strumpet, and thus they paid homage at the shrine of gods whom they thought would grant the desires of their wicked hearts. Costly altars were erected, and these gods were worshipped with great splendor. The 17th chapter of Acts describes this multiplicity of gods, where in Athens the superscription read to the unknown god, and Paul on Mars' Hill described so beautifully the God of Israel, but their hearts were corrupt, and not susceptible to truth, and they followed after vain philosophies.

How gullable the people were, to be sure, but still religious liberty was guaranteed to the fullest extent by this great empire of Rome, and it is estimated that they had over 30,000 gods, whom they worshipped with ceremonies of lust, drunkenness and bloodshed, unfit to be described.

Judaism with its Pharisees, Sadducees, and the austere Essenee marked the nearest form of true worship, and outside of the Essenee, they also had become very corrupt.

Thus it is easy to see that the world in its corruption was hardly in a condition to accept and understand the pure teachings of Jesus. However, He came, and His followers were from among the Essenees, who had all things in common, and were doing the best they could to please God. Christianity grew and spread over the then civilized world, especially amongst the Gentiles, until even the corrupt Tiberius wished to Deify Christ and place Him amongst the many gods of Rome. This shows the success that Christianity met soon after the crucifixion.

It is true the Jews, with headquarters at Judea (which was a province of Rome under a procurator), were very bitter in their hatred of the Christians, and in every way sought to stamp them out, but were curtailed in their vindictive malice to a great degree by the religious liberty granted by Rome.

However they slew many and drove them from city to city, and but few Christians were found in Judea when Vespasion and Titus invaded the country. But under Paul's administration they multiplied in Corinth, Ephesus, Alexandria and other places, and a strong branch of the Church was established in Rome.

The first great persecution which came from the great empire was instigated by the tyrant Nero, who was the sixth Caesar. This reprobate was guilty of every known crime. He murdered his mother, sister and brother, and kicked his wife, Poppaea, to death, and to gratify his poetic (?) fancy, wishing to witness a great conflagration, he had the city of Rome burnt. The populace naturally was much incensed at this, and disclaimed against this depraved villain, who, to appease their wrath, blamed the incendiary act on the innocent Christians.

They were hunted by the Roman soldiery and tortured in every conceivable manner, being tied to pillars, covered with combustible material and ignited to give light to the gardens of this monster. Covered with the skins of wild animals, they were torn to pieces by dogs, fed to lions, and otherwise put to death, their slaughter being made the occasion of much mirth and festivity.

The amphitheaters were crowded to their full capacity, and the appetites of the populace fully glutted by blood, and atonement for the destruction of their city, compensated by the blood of the innocent, which cries for justice, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost Thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them that they should rest for a little season, until their fellow servants also and their brethren that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled." (See Rev, vi.:10.) Men, women and children, without discrimination, were murdered in this bitter persecution. Paul was beheaded and Peter crucified and many noble martyrs were sacrificed between the years 60 and 70 A. D. From this time on until the fourth century Christianity was exceedingly unpopular.

Under Vespasion and Titus, the Christians had comparative peace, as at this time occurred the great siege of Jerusalem, at which over 1,000,000 lives were lost, and several hundred thousand taken captive, the Jews in this, partly atoning for the many afflictions placed upon their Lord, whom they rejected.

In this siege they actually ate their children, fulfilling the prophecies of Moses in Deut. 28:57. Josephus, who was a general in this war, records a woman of Galilee of good birth named Mary, who was brought to such a strait and degree of famine that rather than have her child sold into slavery, she slew it, and partly ate it, when the remains were discovered by the zealots who were hunting for food. Dean Millman beautifully describes the incident, as it was related by the zealots to the High Priest. These are his words:

"'Most welcome, warriors!' and she led us in and bade us sit like dear and honored guests, while she made ready. Some

2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

A BACKWOODS EDITOR.

There is a man living down in Alabama who edits a paper called the Tuscaloosa Times. His efforts would be more appreciated if he would direct his energies in a channel calculated to do good, rather than attempt a discussion and chastisement of a people of whom, from his article, he is very ignorant. In one of these betraying articles of Oct. 15 he says: "There is something gruesome about the fact that emissaries from that hot-bed of vice are permitted to invade the sacred precincts of our homes in Tuscaloosa. If there is no legal protection against such intrusion, must one take the law in his own hands or be a law unto one's self?"

This article briefly indicates the character of this man. If you were to ask him he would no doubt say that he was an American and believed in sustaining the laws of the land. Yet he would presume to suggest that one should make a law to one's self to drive men away and restrict them in their religious worship.

Nov. 21 he wrote about a conference held by the Latter Day Saints, and among other things, slurringly remarks about the coats worn by some of the Elders, which, he says, bore evidence of having done considerable service. We believe it is everywhere written, and upon the lips of every school child, and understood by every one who is rightly entitled to live in this progressive age, that it is the ugliest kind of ignorance and corrupt manners to speak of others' clothes in a disrespectful way. It is quite comforting to know that God judges by the heart and not by the tile, the set of the cravat or the broadcloth suit. It might be profitable and comforting to many if Mr. Jameson would invest a quarter for a work on etiquette for his mother's sake, if it be that he is not too depraved and vicious to learn a few items on decency and manners. He then comments upon the manner, as he says, in which President Rich tried to arouse the sympathy of the people. President Rich need only tell the truth to cause any man with even a spark of patriotism in him to feel that the "Mormons" when they were driven from Missouri and Illinois; when they had their houses burned; their women and daughters butchered and ravished by men, who, as Mr. Jameson, made laws unto themselves, were not treated like Americans should be. The power to make laws that regulate affairs between states and citizens of different states lies with the Congress of the United States, so he need have no fear that an organization numbering about 350,000 scattered throughout the whole world, will "undermine and overthrow the laws." True, he may be somewhat annoyed, for we are here and cannot deny it, to fight all manner of wickedness, and possibly he feels insecure under those conditions and would like to make a law to drive these men away lest he be overtaken in sin.

"We would feel that our education had been woefully neglected if we were not informed upon the practice of the 'Mormons.'" This is what we think. What would he have you believe the "practice of the 'Mormons'" was? He speaks of it as a hot-bed of vice and tries to create the general impression that "Mormonism" implies all manner of vileness, chief of which is the unrestricted honor of the fair sex, and we will take his word that he believes as he says; he knows his own self best.

There is one part, however, that don't come with very good grace from him, after having advised making laws or taking them into their own hands. He says that the "Mormons" have a right to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. Yes, they should have, and we thank God that all people aren't as Mr. Jameson or we would have to think and do as they thought and did or else be burned at the stake or some other hideous torture inflicted. Continuing, he says: "We are strenuously opposed to anything that is not lawful." I suppose he folded his hands and rolled his eyes toward heaven while he thought of this, and forgot what he had written in the early part of the article.

"These Mormons confine their operations to the rural districts." We are quite surprised, yet not so much when we consider the source. We thought Tuscaloosa to be one of the busiest little cities of the south, and thoroughly up to date, and anything but a backwoods city. Surely this cannot be applied to all the citizens. It must be that as he makes laws unto himself (the editor, I mean), he must have made one which placed him as the criterion, and being such a rank backwoodsman he thought everybody else as verdant as himself.

"In this enlightened day and generation the people have learned to rely on reason to shape their destinies."

Poor Brother Jameson. If this be true, and you say it is, maybe in your future destiny you can, shaped by your reason, get some Lazarus to come and place a drop of cool water upon your parching tongue. Surely you do not deny miracles. If you do you must acknowledge God's goodness, for this is the nineteenth century, nearly the twentieth, and you are living, and, remember your own words, this is an enlightened age.

He concludes with quite a plea for the respect of society and the sacred relations existing between man and wife. Mr. Jameson, do not forget that once you had a race of people down here, who were very black; who had no bones in their nose; little if any hair; feet that were not arched as the white man's, and not any were red-headed. Now how came this change in their appearance? Remember your plea, Mr. Jameson, and look in your own door yard all over the country where you live and see if some people don't live in glass houses.

People who believe in the transmigration of the soul should try to get the editor of the Times and place him on exhibition as a living testimony that the spirit of Annanias had again come to earth.

While traveling through the south some of our Elders are frequently asked if it is true that a man must have four or five wives before he can join the church. Only last week we received a letter from a school teacher in Florida, asking if we couldn't furnish him with two or three wives and no one be the wiser. They also ask if Utah is any place around Salt Lake City, what ocean they had to cross to come to America; if it took them long to learn the language; if Salt Lake was not near Jerusalem, etc. After wondering how people could be so ignorant, we are now quite satisfied that Mr. Jameson once taught school, and this is what he taught, for he says he is educated concerning "Mormonism," and he evidences the veracity of that remark from the way in which he writes.

Being generous and broad-minded in our religious views, we still believe there will be some place in the various degrees of glory in God's Kingdom where the editor's soul may find a resting place, if it can be found. But should he be consigned to the other apartments for a season they would have to get a good many souls like him if Alabama has them and put them all in a mustard seed and consign the seed to hell to be able to damn them. A soul no larger than he has could walk forever in the shadow of a two-foot gravestone. Just such shrunken, warped and narrow bigots as this put Jesus Christ to death.

SCARED OF THE LIGHT.

A dispatch to the Courier-Journal from London, Ky., of Dec. 2, '99, comments upon a conference soon to be held in that city by the Latter Day Saints. It says they will not be very kindly received nor cared for after arriving, for the only place where they can get a place to stay is at the Riley Hotel. About a month ago the same sect went into Goldsboro, N. C., for the same purpose and had a very similar experience. The manager of the hall they had hired said he would have to break his contract because of public opinion created by ministers.

In Louisiana a similar case occurred. And yet we are accused of being afraid of the light, and fear the investigation of the wise. Whenever we go to these cities we are always met with opposition created by men who say they are ministers who warn the people, as they say, and tell them to have nothing to do with us, If "Mormonism" is such a hideous monster, why do they not invite their flock to go and hear them? If they do become polluted all they will have to do, you say, is confess that Jesus is the Christ and they will be saved. That used to be the devil's plan to force people.

How can you preach that God has no passions? Unless you was blind to truth you would know He was long suffering and loved His children or else how would you have escaped this long the damnation of hell, if such be the home of the ungodly and sinners and liars.

WHAT IS MEANT

The following question and answer is clipped from a religious paper published at Chicago, Dec. 2, 1899:

"To whom or to what did Jesus refer when he said, "Thou art Peter; and upon this rock I will build my church," etc., as recorded in Matt. 16:17-18? Did Jesus mean that Peter was the rock?

"There is not, so far as we can see, any sound reason whatever for supposing that the reference was to Peter; on the contrary, all the evidence tends to show that he, Peter, could not have been the 'rock,' but that Jesus Himself was to be the foundation stone upon which the eternal, immovable church was to be builded. 'Whom say ye that I am?' asked He, and the response came, 'Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God.' Then follow the words from which the quotation is taken. It would seem impossible that the unstable Peter could have been meant. In the paragraph following, we find our Lord reproving Peter, declaring him to be an offense or stumbling block. All too soon we see him denying, with profane lips, all connection with the Master, and although he afterward became a mighty force in turning the hearts of the people to a positive faith in Jesus, it does not alter our conviction that the 'rock' spoken of was and is Jesus Christ, 'the chief corner stone.'"

The answer to this inquiry is in part right, inasmuch that it speaks of Peter not being the rock upon which the Church of Christ was to be built. But the question is, does it also apply to Jesus, or did He mean something else when He blessed Peter and bestowed some remarkable gifts upon him?

Note the expression "For flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.

And I say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build My Church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

In the first place He tells Peter that flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee * * * and upon this rock I will build My Church, He continues.

True it is that Christ is the chief corner stone, whom the builders rejected, but was it this that He was referring to when he said, upon the rock will I build My Church? Is it not very reasonable to believe He was referring to the power that had given Peter the testimony that it was Jesus to whom He was speaking, and that upon the rock of revelation He would establish His Church?

In the eighth chapter of Amos and eleventh verse it is recorded that there would be a famine for the word of God. The same author, in chapter three and seventh verse, tells us that the Lord will do nothing, but He revealeth His secret unto His servants, the prophets. At this particular time of speaking, when Christ was addressing Peter, the saving dispensation of Jesus Christ was to be ushered in, and as Christ did only those things which He seen the Father do, then it must have been upon that information the Father revealed to Him that He built His Church; or upon revelation. And if no information could be had concerning the Father or His work (none of His secrets), isn't it quite plain that we cannot do the work of the Lord without His instructions? Yes, I know we have the word, but the letter killeth and the spirit giveth life, and for each succeeding circumstance that transpires we must be enlightened so that we will know His will.

When the Lord wanted a temple built all that had previously been given to Noah as to how to build the ark would not do. He must again speak. The instructions to Joshua, how to capture Jericho would never have caused the walls at Jerusalem to fall. But each successive event needs the word of God to make it successful. At no time in the history of God's work were the people deprived of revelation, and are we not of as much importance as any people that ever lived upon the earth?

Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophesies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away.

For we know in part and we prophesy in part.

But when that which is perfect, then that which is in part shall be done away. (I Cor. 13:8-10.)

Has perfection come? Until that time we are to know in part, prophesy in part, see through a glass darkly, but when that which is perfect is come then (and not till then) we are to see face to face. Are these gifts in the Church? If not, what will you do with this Scripture?

And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that was called of God, as was Aaron. (Heb 5-4.)

Aaron was called by revelation through a prophet of God. How was your preacher called? Does the Bible tell us preachers are to be called any other way? Does your minister through worldly learning take this honor unto himself? When you are asking yourselves which is the way to be saved, think over this Scripture and find its parallel among the many plans offered to save mankind on the earth in this age.

Catholic Doctrine.

"It is the general teaching of Catholic theology," says a Catholic priest in Donohue's Magazine, "that among the scenes and places of man's future habitation will be this planet, not as we have it now, with its winters and summers, with its biting winds and enervating atmosphere, but as it will be after the great day of judgment, when, according to the clear teaching of Holy Scripture, the world is to be deluged by fire, and in the purifying elements of fire the world is to be renewed and regenerated. The world will then be transformed into a scene of changeless and surpassing loveliness, a fit dwelling place for glorified man."

The New Creed of the Universalists.

The "Winchester Platform" of 1803, which Universalists have commonly accepted as their standard, embraced these three propositions:

Art. I. We believe that the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments contain a revelation of the character of God, and of the duty, interest and final destination of mankind.

Art. II. We believe that there is one God, whose nature is Love, revealed in one Lord Jesus Christ, by one Holy Spirit of Grace, who will finally restore the whole family of mankind to holiness and happiness.

Art. III. We believe that holiness and true happiness are inseparably connected, and that believers ought to be careful to maintain order and practice good works; for these things are good and profitable unto men.

The Universalists have now adopted a new creed. The committee on revision has made reports to successive general conventions for years. At last the convention which met at Boston last month adopted the following as its declaration of faith:

The universal fatherhood of God.

The spiritual authority and leadership of His Son Jesus Christ.

The trustworthiness of the Bible as containing a revelation from God.

A certainty of retribution for sin.

The final harmony of all souls with God.

A One Man Duel.

Collier's Weekly.

One of the stories that the late James Payn, the novelist, liked most to tell was about what he called an American duel, wherein two duelists, with one second, met within doors and drew lots to decide which should shoot himself. A was the unlucky man, and without a word he retired into the next apartment to carry out the purpose of self-destruction. B and the second, both very much moved by the tragedy of the situation, remained in listening attitudes. At last the pistol was heard. They shuddered with emotion and remorse, when suddenly in rushed the supposed dead man, triumphantly exclaiming: "Missed, by heaven!"

Mrs. Younghusband—Do you notice any difference in the milk, dear?

Mr. Younghusband—I should say so; this is a much better quality than we have been getting lately.

Mrs. Younghusband—Indeed it is. I got it of a new man, who said he would guarantee it to be perfectly pure, so I bought enough to last a couple of weeks. —Chicago News.

EFFECTS PRODUCED BY LIVES OF GREAT CHARACTERS.

Blessings of God Secured by Obedience—When the Lord Gives Commands He Opens the Way for the Obedient to Fulfill Them.

[ADDRESS DELIVERED BY ELDER HEBER J. GRANT AT SALT LAKE CITY, OCT. 6, 1899.]

I rejoice exceedingly at again having the opportunity of meeting with the Latter-day Saints in General Conference. I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the remarks that have been made by the brethren who have spoken, and I earnestly desire that the time which I occupy may be for our mutual benefit, to strengthen us in the faith of the Gospel, and to inspire us with a determination to press forward in the discharge of the many duties and responsibilities resting upon us as members of the Church. We all, no doubt, look around in life and from our observation of men, or from our reading of the lives of those who have died, form our ideals, and we try to live and to be like those whom we admire. There is no character with which I have been familiar through my reading that has inspired me more than has Nephi of old. I can never read the life of that man without being inspired with a desire to be faithful, diligent and true to the Lord, that I may be abundantly blessed of the Lord, as was Nephi. If we all could be inspired with a determiniation to live as this man lived, there is no question in my mind but we would grow and increase in the Spirit of God, and in power and ability to do the will of our Heavenly Father on the earth. Alma says that the Lord granteth unto men according to their desires, whether they be for life or death, for joy or remorse of conscience. As Latter-day Saints, let us have a desire to live lives of usefulness, and to be instruments in the hands of God of accomplishing much good.

I have read and spoken time and time again from the section of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants from which Brother Woodruff read this morning. I have felt a desire in my heart to be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and to bring to pass much righteousness of my own free will. I have endeavored to impress this also upon the minds of those with whom I have been laboring since being called to minister among the people. I desire to read a few words more from this same section. After telling us to be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and not to wait to be commanded in all things, the Lord says:

"Who am I that made man, saith the Lord, that will hold him guiltless that obeys not my commandments?

"Who am I, saith the Lord, that have promised and have not fulfilled?

"I command and a man obeys not, I revoke and they receive not the blessing.

"Then they say in their hearts, this is not the work of the Lord, for His promises are not fulfilled. But wo unto such, for their reward lurketh beneath, and not from above."

I know scores of Latter-day Saints who have been commanded of the Lord time and time again, but have failed to receive the blessings promised through the fulfillments of the commandments of God, because they have obeyed not. Yet they have accused the Lord of failing to fulfill his promises made to those who obey His commandments. I have ever known that those who pay not their tithing are the ones that criticise the expenditure of the tithing. Those who are approached for donations for laudable purposes, sometimes under the direction of the Presidency of the Church, and who refuse to contribute, are the ones that criticise the Presidency of the Church and the Apostles for calling upon them for means. But I find that the men who obey are those who testify that the promises of God are fulfilled. Therefore, it behooves each and every one of us to be true and energetic.

I desire to read a few words from the writings of the Prophet Nephi. After hearing the testimony of his father, and after they had gone into the wilderness Nephi says:

"16. And it came to pass that I, Nephi, being exceedingly young, nevertheless being large in stature, and also having great desires to know of the mysteries of God, wherefore I did cry unto the Lord; and behold he did visit me, and did soften my heart that I did believe all the words which had been spoken by my father, wherefore I did not rebel against him unto my brothers.

"17. And I spake unto Sam, making known unto him the things which the Lord had manifested unto me by his Holy Spirit. And it came to pass that he believed in my words.

"18. But behold Laman and Lemuel would not hearken unto my words; and being grieved because of the harshness of their hearts, I cried unto the Lord for them.

"19. And it came to pass that the Lord spake unto me saying, blessed art thou, Nephi, because of thy faith, for thou hast sought me diligently, with lowliness of heart.

"20. And inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments—"

This is the point that I desire to impress upon your minds.

"And inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall prosper, and shall be led to a land of promise; yea, even a land which I have prepared for you; yea, a land which is choice above all other lands."

I say to the Latter-day Saints that this last statement is one of the testimonies of the truthfulness of this record, because this is the land choice above all other lands, and God has blessed the people upon this land. He has fulfilled the words recorded in this book time and time again, that those who should come up to fight against the people of this land should not prosper. After Nephi had been thus abundantly blessed of the Lord, when he returned to his father, who had received a commandment from the Lord that his sons should go back to Jerusalem for the brass plates, Laman and Lemuel were murmuring against this commandment. But these are the words of Nephi:

"And it came to pass that I, Nephi, said unto my father, I will go and do the things which the Lord has commanded, for I know that the Lord giveth no commandments unto the children of men, save He shall prepare a way for them that they may accomplish the things which he commandeth them.

"And it came to pass that when my father had heard these words he was exceedingly glad, for he knew that I had been blessed of the Lord."

We will all be blessed of the Lord if we have the same spirit and realize that no obstacles are insurmountable when God commands and we obey. I heard Brother Lyman once remark in a meeting of the Quorum of the Apostles, that he knew of no man who had ever been blessed by one of the Quorum of the Apostles or by the Presidency of the Church and had been sent out to fulfill a mission that had failed to do so. There might be those whose hearts they did not touch, but there were those whose hearts could be reached. There never was a member of the Quorum of the Apostles sent upon a mission, but what sooner or later fulfilled that mission. This is a testimony of the statement of Nephi: "For I know that the Lord giveth no commandment unto the children of men, save He shall prepare a way for them that they may accomplish the thing which He commandeth them." Let us realize this and that the keeping of the commandments of God will bring to us the light and inspiration of His Spirit. Then the desire of our hearts will be to know the mind and will of the Lord, and we will pray for strength and ability to carry it out, thereby following in the footsteps of our Lord and Master Jesus Christ. After the sons of Lehi had gone up to try and get the plates and were driven back, and Nephi's brethren desired to return to their father, Nephi said unto them.:.

"That as the Lord liveth, and as we live,. we will not go down unto our father in the wilderness, until we have accomplish the things which the Lord hath commanded us.

"Wherefore let us be faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord."

Here is the key: Nephi knew how to be successful. Let us therefore be faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord.

"Therefore let us go down to the land of our fther's inheritance, for behold. he left gold and silver and all manner of riches. And all this he hath done because of the commandments of the Lord."

After they had been driven the second time and Laban had stolen their gold and silver that they had offered him for the plates, Laman and Lemuel murmured again, and said that Laban could command his fifty and would slay them. And Nephi replied:

"Let us go up again unto Jerusalem, and let us be faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord; for behold he is mightier than all the earth, then why not mightier than Laban and his fifty, yea, or even than his tens of thousands."

This is the kind of faith to have. Let us be faithful in keeping the commandments of God and then we know that we can win the battle, though we may be opposed by a man with his tens of thousands. The final result was that Nephi got the plates. We find recorded here also that Nephi was commanded of the Lord to build a vessel. His brethren laughed at him when they saw he was sorrowful because they refused to help him to build the vessel. Nephi said to them:

"Behold, my soul is rent with anguish because of you, and my heart is pained: for I fear lest ye shall be cast off forever. Behold, I am full of the Spirit of God, insomuch that my frame has no strength."

Nephi continues:

"And now it came to pass that when I had spoken these words, they were angry with me and were desirous to throw me into the depths of the sea; and as they came forth to lay their hands upon me, I spake unto them, saying: In the name of the Almighty God, I command you that ye touch me not, for I am filled with the power of God even unto the consuming of my flesh; and whoso shall lay their hands upon me, shall wither even as a dried reed; and he shall be as naught before the power of God, for God shall smite him.

"And it came to pass that I, Nephi, said unto them, that they should murmur no more against their father; neither should they withhold their labor from me, for God had commanded me that I should build a ship."

On another occasion when Nephi was in affliction, having been bound by his brethren on the ship, and they unbound him because they were afraid of the storm, Nephi said:

"Wherefore they came unto me, and loosed the bands which were upon my wrists and behold they had swollen exceedingly; and also mine ankles were much swollen, and great was the soreness thereof.

"Nevertheless I did look unto my God, and I did praise Him all the day long; and I did not murmur against the Lord, because of mine afflictions."

We find here a man of faith; a man who submits to affliction without murmuring. In all his history we find that he followed the commandments of the Lord. The Lord said to him in the beginning that if he followed His commandments he should be prospered in the land, and he was prospered. I wish to bear my testimony to the Latter-day Saints that all of us who will obey the commandments of God will be prospered in the land. Sacrifice doth bring forth the blessings of heaven. I bear my testimony to the truth of what Brother Lund has said today, that if the people will pay their tithes and offerings, they will not only be blessed in their material affairs, but they will be abundantly blessed with increased outpouring of the Spirit of the Lord. We find recorded in section 130 of the book of Doctrine and Covenants, the following:

"There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundation of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated:

"21. And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated.

I bear witness to you, as an Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, that material and spiritual prosperity is predicated upon the fulfillment of the duties and responsibilities that rest upon us as Latter-day Saints. I have rejoiced exceedingly that the debts which the people owe to the Lord in tithing have been forgiven by the Prophet of God. But I want to say to those who are able to pay those debts, it will be a great deal better for them if they will do so, notwithstanding they have been forgiven. If the Lord will help me, I propose to pay every debt that I owe in the world. I propose with the help of the Lord to be true to my fellowmen in fulfilling every obligation that I have entered into with them. But above all and beyond all, I propose to fulfill my obligation, to the best of my ability, to God my Heavenly Father. I have been ridiculed in the public prints because I said that a man's duty was to pay his debts to the Lord if he did not pay his debts to his fellowman. I repeat that. God my Heavenly Father has blessed me with a knowledge of the Gospel. I do know that God lives; I do know that Jesus is the Christ; I do know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God; I do know that Lorenzo Snow is a Prophet of God; I know that God loves me; that he blesses me; that I am one of His children; that I am under obligations to Him; and that all I have on earth, all that I will ever receive here or hereafter, I am indebted to Him for it. Therefore, I say, shall I not fulfill the duties and obligations that I owe to my Creator and loving Parent before I fulfill my obligations to my fellowman. Has any man ever loaned me money because he loved me? No; he has loaned it to me because he wanted his interest. With the help of the Lord I propose to keep the commandments of the Lord, and then I do know that I shall be able to pay all that I owe because I know that God blesses those who keep His commandments. I know that I never made a sacrifice of a financial nature in my life to help the advancement of God's work, without being abundantly rewarded therefor. Not only materially, but I grew in the knowledge of the Gospel and in the Spirit of God, which is worth more than all the wealth and honors of men. I desire never to allow my heart to wither up, so to speak, but rather to have it grow and expand. I desire to seek first the kingdom of God. I do know and bear witness to you that if I do it all other things for my good will be added unto me. And what I bear witness to pertains to myself, I bear witness to for all the Latter-day Saints. If you desire the Spirit of God, be honest in keeping the commandments of God. If you desire prosperity, and at the same time the testimony of the Gospel, pay all your obligations to God and you shall have it. If you are not honest with God, you may prosper and you may be blessed with the things of this world, but they will crowd out from your heart the spirit of the Gospel; you will become covetous of your own means and loose the inspiration of Almighty God. The Savior told us that if we gained the whole world and lost our own souls, it would profit us nothing. We have started out for life eternal, the greatest of all the gifts of God to man, and keeping the commandments of God will bring it to us. May God bless you. Amen.

North Kentucky Conference.

The Elders of the North Kentucky Conference arrived in Louisville Friday, November 24th, and registered at the Victoria Hotel, where they were treated royally. The evening was devoted to spiritual exercises, and addresses were made by Elders Thorley, Terry, Turman, Peterson, Brain, Thatcher and Clegg.

Saturday morning President Rich and Elder Arrowsmith, our late president, arrived from Chattanooga; a meeting was held and a lecture on the "Restoration of the Gospel" given by Elder Arrowsmith, by request of the Elders. After having a photo of the conference taken the Elders again retired to the hotel parlor and held council meeting. After prayer and singing President Thorley made a few remarks. President Ben. E Rich then questioned the Elders in turn as to their health, feelings, circumstances and their general condition. Elder Arrowsmith in a brief address exhorted the messengers of God to press forward in the cause of truth. Upon invitation from President Rich, two of our local Saints, Brothers Cannon and Ritchie, of Jefferson, made a few remarks, bearing a faithful testimony to the divinity of Joseph's mission. Elders Hibbert and Peterson, of the Southern Indiana Conference, responded to the invitation to address the Elders.

President Rich impressed upon the minds of the Elders the necessity of being energetic, true and devoted in their labors as ambassadors of the Kingdom of God; brought up many business points, and urged the Elders to labor with unity and love.

A general meeting, to which the public were invited, convened in the Odd Fellows' Hall at 10 o'clock Sunday morning, the 26th. President L. A. Thorley presided. Singing, "Oh, My Father." Prayer by L. M. Terry. Singing, "Farewell All Earthly Honors."

President Ben. E. Rich made a few remarks relative to the object of our mission and the barbarous treatment tendered us by mobs of professed Christians.

President Thorley introduced in turn Elders D. C. Benson, Brigham Clegg, J. R. Turman and George L. Freestone, who bore their testimony to the truthfulness of the Gospel, and discussed briefly miscellaneous doctrines as taught by our blessed Redeemer. President Rich made a few closing remarks. After singing and prayer the meeting was adjurned until 2:30 p. m.

The afternoon meeting convened at the appointed hour, and Elder James McArthur bore a faithful testimony, after which Elder Albert Arrowsmith spoke on the gathering of Israel and miscellaneous principles of the Gospel as taught by the Latter Day Saints, pointing out some of the fallacies of modern Christianity.

The night meeting convened at 7:30 o'clock. Elder L. M. Terry made a few remarks upon Revelation in a very interesting manner.

President Ben. E. Rich in a pleasant manner introduced his subject and took his text from Gal. i.:8, showing the necessity of present revelation. Said the sin of every generation was a belief in dead prophets, and a rejection of the living oracles. Proved that the Church of Christ should have the same officers in it today as was placed there by the Master 1900 years ago. Said a man must be properly called of God as was Aaron to preach the Gospel, and that signs would follow the believer. Compared the civilization of the "Mormons" with that of professed Christians who revile us, burn our churches and brutally mob Elders. Brought up polygamy as it exists in Utah, and as misunderstood by the world. In closing he made an appeal for peace and brotherly love. President Thorley thanked the people for their presence and hospitality.

A good congregation was present during the meetings, many of our friends and Saints from other places attending. A spirit of brotherly love and union was felt, and no one who has not had the like experience can realize the sorrow at parting and joy of meeting, understood so well by Saints, Elders and friends.

President Thorley was released to return home and Elder L. N. Terry appointed his successor. The Elders were given companions and went to their various fields of labor feeling refreshed by the spiritual feast that they had attended and feeling more determined to work ezalously in the Lord's vineyard.

President Terry chose as his counsellors Elders J. R. Turman and Brigham Clegg. And the headquarters in the future will be Bagdad, Shelby county.

President Rich complimented the Elders on their appearance and general neatness. We have a good president and a bright, energetic lot of Elders. It is our aim and desire to see that the North Kentucky is behind none of her sister conferences.

President L. A. Thorley and Elder George L. Freestone were honorably released and go home early in December.

Ohio Conference.

The Elders of hte Ohio Conference on Nov. 28 and 29 held one of the most successful conferences ever held, either in the history of the Ohio Conference or of the Southern States Mission. Two weeks before the appointed time, Elders Ben. E. Rich and L. M. Nebeker entered the city of Columbus to make preparations for the coming event.

A true American spirit prevailed in this city; all but a few treated the Elders with due respect; the papers reported them fairly; officers and citizens alike showed every courtesy. The chief of police when requested to interfere and stop our conference by some ladies belonging to a society, who has members that judge a matter before hearing the condemned speak, were informed that they were in America.

Tuesday, the 28th, was spent in Priesthood meeting.

Wednesday morning, according to appointment, all met in the I. O. O. F. Hall at 10 o'clock. After singing, prayer and singing again, President Ben. E. Rich addressed the congregation briefly, outlining "Mormonism."

Elder R. L. Shepherd quoted extensively to show how every new truth has its drawbacks. Elder L. M. Nebeker discussed the contention of sects and deplored the fact; for half an hour he spoke very interestingly. The meeting then adjourned till 2:30.

After the usual preliminaries President J. W. Funk arose to speak. His calm eloquence so enthralled his auditors that a death-like silence prevailed, and occasionally a burst of applause indicated the rapture of the audience; thus he spoke and thus the audience were swayed for some time.

Elder Maycock followed, speaking on the Spaulding story and Book of Mormon, showing there was no resemblance. Also the frailty of the argument used by some who would make these books the same. He also compared the work of Joseph Smith with that of the founders of other religious societies; after which the meeting adjourned till 7:30 p. m.

At the appointed hour the house was filled. Elder Ben. L. Rich was the first speaker, who in eloquent terms showed "Mormonism" to be a progressive form of religion. He was followed by President Ben. E. Rich, who spoke for about an hour to a very appreciative audience, who were entertained by his pleasing and apt illustrations.

When the meeting was adjourned many men swarmed around the Elders and were loud in their praise of the doctrine taught by the Elders. Among the crowd were three men who had attended all three services. They approached President Rich and said: "We are heathens; they call us heathens because we are agnostics, and because we cannot believe in the kind of a God they worship. To night, Mr. Rich, after attending these services we come nearer believing in God than we ever did in our lives. You teach a reasonable doctrine."

Many such expressions were heard. As formerly mentioned, this was one of the most successful conferences held this year. Owing to the release of Elder Funk, George E. Maycock was unanimously sustained as president of the Ohio Conference. He chose L. M. Nebeker and H. Z. Lund as his counsellors.

DEATHS.

Stephen Perry departed this life Nov 12, 1899, at the home of Wm. Perry, near Northcut's Cove, Tenn. He was 86 years and two months old and had been a member of the Church since Nov. 19, 1896. His house was always open to the weary traveller. He was a kind and indulgent father, a loving husband and a very desirable neighbor. He lived and died a faithful Latter-day Saint. May he rest in peace until the trumpet of God shall sound, then may he come forth to share the glories of the resurrection prepared for the just.

THE DARK AGES.

among us wondered, and some spake jeeringly, thanking the lady, that she had thus with provident care, reserved the choicest banquet for the scarcest days. But even as she busily ministered, quick, sudden sobs of laughter broke from her. At length the vessel's covering she raised up, and there it lay! Ben Catha paused, and the High Priest exclaimed: 'What lay, thou'rt sick and pale!"

"By earth and heaven, the remnant of a child! a human child! What, start? so started we. Whereat she shrieked aloud and clapped her hands.

"Oh dainty and fastidious appetites! The mother feasts upon her babe, and strangers loathe the repast. And then, 'My beautiful child, the treasure of my womb; my bosom's joy.' And then in her cool madness did she spurn us out of doors. Oh, still. Oh, still, I hear her, and I shall hear her till my day of death."

Thus the prophecies of Moses and Jesus were verily fulfilled, and Jerusalem was destroyed and torn up until every vestige of its glory had vanished, and not one stone was left upon another to tell of the glory of Herod's temple.

Vespasion employed the captive Jews in the construction of the great Ampitheater in Rome, whose vast ruins stand today. A circus which would accommodate 80,000 people, where gladiatorial exhibitions were given before a bloodthirsty populace. The Jews have remained in a scattered condition ever since, and been the hiss and by-word of every nation.

The lull in the Christian persecution was broken by the edicts of the Emperor Domitian, who was extremely bitter in his hatred of the Christians. He was jealous of Christ, whom he looked upon as a rival to his throne; and in consescendants of David, vowing their extermination.

It was this Emperor, who, tradition records, had the beloved John placed in boiling oil, and not being able to take his life, had him banished to the coal mines of Patmos, a lonely isle in the Aegean sea; where the Savior appeared to him, with angels, who opened the windows of heaven to his view, and he saw the beautiful gates, and the golden streets, which must have been a source of great joy in his loneliness. These beautiful visions are recorded in his book of Revelations.

John was the last of the Apostles, and appeared to vanish from earthly view in the latter part of this the first century at Ephesus; where Timothy was Bishop. Timothy had been tied to the tail of a horse, and dragged to death; and all the Apostles had been ignominiously slain. At this time the laity was becoming weak in the faith, and apostates becoming quite numerous.

The Gnostics were making great headway, especially under the unrepentant Simon Magus, did this sect thrive, after his denunciation by Peter (when asking for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and desiring to pay for it), Peter said, "Thy money perish with thee, for I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity." (Acts 8.) This man Simon the sorcerer, could bewitch people, and had a certain power that he got from the evil one, so that in the eyes of the people he worked wonders and miracles, and had a great following. He had been highly learned in the dark mysteries of Egypt, and like Jannes and Jambres of old, who withstood Moses and Aaron, by their enchantments, so Simon in like manner operated under the power of the evil one, and could almost deceive the elect by his imitations of the powers of the priesthood. He came to his end in a startling manner. Being under the impression that he could ascend at will to heaven, he appointed a time and jumped from a high building, expecting to go upward, but descended, and was dashed to pieces. That is about the way the devil invariably deserts his subjects.

Jewish doctors also corrupted the weak Christians in the provinces of Rome, by preaching the law of Moses; against the teachings of Christ, which doctrines were principally refuted by Paul in his epistle to the Romans. The first chapter gives a glaring description of the corruptible condition of mankind at this period.

The living oracles had departed, and the Saints were becoming weak, and many were departing from the faith as taught by the Apostles, falling into darkness, and grovelling in the mire of rank paganism.

IMPATIENCE.

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

How can I wait until you come to me?
The once fleet mornings linger by the way;
Their sunny smiles touched with malicious glee
At my unrest, they seem to pause and play
Like truant children, while I sigh and say,
How can I wait?

How can I wait? Of old, the rapid hours
Refused to pause or loiter with me long;
But now they idly fill their hands with flowers,
And make no haste, but slowly stroll among
The summer blooms, not heeding my one song,
How can I wait?

How can I wait? The nights alone are kind;
They reach forth to a future day, and bring
Sweet dreams of you to people all my mind;
And time speeds by on light and airy wing.
I feast upon your face, I no more sing,
How can I wait?

How can I wait? The morning breaks the spell
A pitying night has flung upon my soul.
You are not near me, and I know full well
My heart has need of patience and control;
Before we meet, hours, days, and weeks must roll.
How can I wait?

How can I wait? Oh, Love, how can I wait
Until the sunshine of your eyes shall shine
Upon my world that seems so desolate?
Until your hand-clasp warms my blood like wine;
Until you come again, oh, Love of mine,
How can I wait?

A Battle Song.

Edwin Arnold.

We are they who will not falter—
Many swords or few—
Till we make this earth the altar
Of a worship new;
We are those who will not take
From prelate, priest or code,
A nearer law than brotherhood—
A higher law than good.

We are those whose unpaid legions,
In free ranks arrayed,
Massacred in many regions,
Never once were stayed;
We are those whose torn battalions,
Trained to bleed, not fly,
Make our agonies a triumph—
Conquer, while we die.

Therefore down to Armageddon,
Brothers bold and strong,
Cheer the glorious way we tread on,
With a soldier's song!
Let the armies of the old flags
March in silent dread.
Death and life are one to us,
Who fight for quick and dead.

ELDER GEO. A. LYMAN.

The subject of this sketch, Geo. A. Lyman, arrived in the missionary field just three years ago. He labored for five months as a canvassing Elder and was then appointed general superintendent of Sunday Schools of the East Kentucky conference. Later he was chosen to act as counselor to President Elias S. Woodruff and acted in the same capacity to President John Woodmansee.

ELDER GEO. A. LYMAN.

Nov. 10, 1898, at the release of President Woodmansee, Brother Lyman succeeded to the presidency of the East Kentucky conference, which position he filled with signal credit. In Jan. 1899, he was called to the office at Chattanooga to act as counselor to President Ben E. Rich, of the Southern States Mission. Since that time he has traveled in nearly every state comprised in the Southern States Mission, visiting among the Elders and Saints, instructing them in their duties. Brother Lyman is a very able counselor and did much good wherever he went. As previously stated he has spent three years as a missionary and goes home Dec. 15, 1899, conscious of having done his duty, and with the assurance that God will bless him. His services were much appreciated in the office and we reluctantly bid him farewell. We present his picture this week because he is the oldest Elder in the mission, not in age, but in the time spent in the work.

History of the Southern States Mission.

In the latter part of May a serious mobbing occurred at Greasy Cove, St. Clair county, Alabama. May 21 Elders M. W. Miller and B. F. Le Baron were requested by Mr. Pink Battles, the postmaster of the above named place, to hold a meeting. They gladly consented and were entertained by Mr. Battles.

Early next morning news reached the Elders of an approaching mob. Mr. Battles also learning of the intended raid, summoned five neighbors, who were friendly disposed toward the Elders. At about 6 a.m. both parties appeared, the five friends a little in advance of the mob. The law-breakers demanded the Elders, as they wanted to kill them. When informed by Mr. Battles that these gentlemen were his guests and he would defend them, the mob knew with whom they were dealing and said then if they were only allowed to whip the brethren they would be satisfied. This overture was indignantly refused, and finally they allowed the oppressed to depart, on the conditions that they leave the country.

The mob disbanded very much dissatisfied with what they had accomplished, and dispersed swearing vengeance. This was by no means the end of this trouble. On the 27th Elders Beecher and Brinkerhoff, who had not heard of the mobbing, wandered into this neighborhood and spent the night there, and continued their journey next morning. All day they were followed by an armed mob, who were determined that they should not be molested in their demonial intentions; at noon thirty of the number, tired of the chase and returned. This was about one-half of the mob. The other half continued the pursuit and overtook the Elders just at dark. Then they could not agree as to what disposition to make of the Elders. Many would kill them, others thought whipping severe enough, while others still were in favor of letting them depart, providing that they (the Elders) would apply the lash to those who had befriended them. This insult was indignantly resented, so they decided to give Elder Beecher thirty lashes and Elder Brinkerhoff twenty. Guards stood on both sides of them with rifles leveled at the Elders' heads, while two of the brutes wielded the hickory. In the mob were James Gillan, Eli Gillan, Edward Gillan, John Smith, Robert Bryant, James Walker and Bud Jackson, who were ministers of the Gospel; at least they were preaching and were the recognized pastors of some of the churches.

June—

The cloven foot is again in evidence this month. Elders Sessions and Smith went to a school house to hold meeting. From appearances they thought they would "get in a box" if they held services, as a coffin with an explanatory sign tacked on it was left on the doorstep. They held no meeting.

Elders Jones and Phelps had some very unpleasant experience in Pearl River county, Mississippi. If people let them preach in their house or entertained them, someone would apply the torch and burn them out, consequently they had to depart for other fields. At Poplarville, the county seat, they were compelled to flee under cover of darkness to avoid being harshly treated.

July—

Elders Carter, Done and Allen were stopping near Knott's mill, Orangeburg county, South Carolina. At 6 p.m. the 14th inst. two men approached the house and inquired if they had any cattle to sell. Receiving a negative reply, they departed, returning in a few minutes with twenty others. They said they had a warrant for the arrest of the Elders, and when asked for thtir authority they presented some formidable-looking revolvers and said, "This is our authority." Elder Allen had left the house to see a friend, and by this act escaped the unpleasant flagellation to which Brothers Done and Carter were subjected.

At 8 a.m. the two were taken into custody and were marched all day through dense swamps and undergrowths. All this time friends were following, hoping to be of some service in time of need. The mob had halted for a short rest, but now resumed the journey at 3:30 a.m. the morning following the capture. They continued the journey until about two and a half miles from Swancy. The leader, a minister, Abney by name, called a halt and ordered that the men should be searched. Everything they had was confiscated, excepting their Bible. Their licenses, cards and all other books were destroyed, and their money (50 cents) was confiscated. Among their possessions was a bottle of Rubifoam. The minister mounted a log and said the bottle contained holy oil, and asked if anyone wished to be annointed. As no one replied he threw the bottle against a tree and broke it.

The Elders were then compelled to lie across a log while a stalwart brute struck them twenty-one lashes each with a heavy tug. They were then put aboard the train, closely guarded by one of the mob, and taken to Columbia. At this place they were to be arrested, but when they arrived they told the guard that they would have him arrested. He then seen his predicament and begged for mercy. He was allowed to go by those whom he had persecuted. The mob hunted night and day for Elder Allen, but were unable to find him.

The ministers were very active in opposing the Elders at this time, and enlisted the newspapers to help them. One of these sheets published in Virginia published the opinions of some of the men. What seemed to hurt, they said, was the fact that the Mormons were allowed to proselyte among the Methodists and Baptists, and were successful in their work. John Page, of Beaver Dam, Va., who led a mob that drove the Elders from the county in which he lived about a year before this time, said: "To lose my life getting rid of the Mormons would give me as much pleasure as to die fighting for my country; in fact, I prefer the former."

The Death Sentence.

There is kept in a small chapel at Caserta, a village twenty miles north of Naples, a thin brass tablet upon which is engraven, in Hebrew characters, the purported death sentence pronounced by Pontius Pilate upon Jesus of Nazereth.

This plate was found in the year 1280 among a quantity of records of the Kingdom of Naples in the city of Aguilla. A number of other documents were found, whose genuineness were never doubted. They referred to official transactions in the Roman provinces about the same time as the crucifixion of the Savior. The inscription upon the plate is as follows:

"Sentence pronounced by Pontius Pilate, intendant of the province of Lower Galilee, that Jesus of Nazareth shall suffer death by the cross on the 25th day of the month of March, in the seventeenth year of the reign of the Emperor Tiberius, during the pontificate of Annas and Caiaphas, in the holy city of Jerusalem.

"Pontius Pilate, intendant of the province of Lower Galilee, sitting in judgment as president in the seat of the praetor, condemns Jesus of Nazareth to die on a cross between two robbers, because of the numerous and conclusive testimony of the people as follows:

"1. Jesus is a disturber of the peace.

"2. Jesus has taught the people sedition.

"3. Jesus is an enemy of the laws.

"4. Jesus calls Himself the Son of God.

"5. Jesus calls Himself the King of Israel.

"6. Jesus disturbed the worship of the temple by leading a mob of people with palms in their hands.

"Quirilius Cornelius, first of the centurions, is ordered to take the body of Jesus to the place of execution and provide the cross. All people are forbidden to appear or prevent the execution."

Then follow the names of the judges and the names of the witnesses to the various charges in the indictment. The engraving is well done, and most of the characters are still clear enough to be traced. Any traveler who visits the village of Caserta can see this extraordinary relic by paying a small fee to the priests.

Life is made up, not of great sacrifices or duties, but of little things, in smiles and kindness and small obligations, given habitually, are what preserve the heart and secure comfort.

HABIT

BY PHILIP S. MAYCOCK.

Another thing we must remember. The child and even man easily adopts the manners of those with whom he frequently associates, particularly when he honors and loves them; and what was formerly a strange example confronting him gradually and unperceptibly becomes his own thought and actions. At first we may be shocked by a wicked act, but if the act be repeated we gradually assimilate ourselves to it. "Vice is a monster of so frightful mien that to be hated needs but to be seen; but seen to oft, familiar with his face, first pity, then endure, then embrace." How careful we should be of the surroundings we make, the companions we choose, the books we read.

There is another aspect of habit to which I wish to refer. Extreme habituation is fraught with danger. It may diminish the many-sidedness of our interests, or even make the new incomprehensible or intolerable to us. Habit may keep us in a rut. We may form the habit of being interested in only one line of work—the mathematician cares for nothing but mathematics, the stock-raiser cares only for matters concerned with his calling. Instead of forming the habit of attending in any particular direction, form the habit of giving attention generally. Form the habit of paying debts you owe, not only to a class of your acquaintances, but to all. Instead of forming the habit of being neat and orderly in company only, form the habit of being neat and orderly in all conditions. No matter how good the habit may be, if it be narrow instead of general in its nature, it tends toward slavery. We must not be bound by habit. We must form the habit of rebelling, if necessary, against a habit, the habit of being able to break a habit, the habit of freedom. It is because habit in the narrow sense tends to keep us in a rut, and thus prevent progress, that Rosseau said: "The only habit which a child should be allowed to form is the habit of doing nothing in particular."

In politics, habit is a conservative; in religion, he clings to the beliefs of the past; in education, the old methods are his and the old masters are his ideals. He allows the radical to look up to the rising star; he himself remains faithful to the sun which has set. In fashion he clings to the modes and styles of his ancestors. In short, habit defends despotism, and asserts the supremacy of human laws, adheres to the old creed, and supports ecclesiastical authority, pays respect to titles and preserves forms. Reformers do not always understand that it takes years to uproot an established custom and originate a new one. Only gradually is the change made. A struggle goes on between the resisting force of ancient custom and the contagious sympathy of new modes of feeling and thought. Reformers are generally too hasty, and because they cannot in a short time effect a change in the habit of a nation, they become disheartened pessimists. No revolution in public opinion is the work of one person or one day. The Reformation would have occurred had there been no Luther or Zwingle. Their individuality, their personal energy and zeal, hastened, perhaps, by a year or two the event. But had the public mind not been already ripe for their revolt, the fate of the reformers would have been death. Woe to the revolutionist who is not himself a creature of the revolution. If he come before the spirit of the time is ready for him he is lost, for it requires what no one individual can supply, a long and powerful counter sympathy in a nation to untwine the ties of custom which bind a people to the established and the old. When an atetmpt was made to establish the United Order among the Latter Day Saints, the people were not prepared for such a system and a failure was the consequence.

Let us now refer to a few pedagogical maxims that are of great value to us. On this point Dr. James is so rich I shall quote him at length: Seize the very first possible opportunity to act on every resolution you make, on every emotional prompting you may experience in the direction of habits you aspire to gain. No matter how full a reservoir of maxims one may possess, and no matter how good one's sentiments may be, if one have not taken advantage of every concrete opportunity to act, one's character may remain entirely unaffected for the better. With mere good intentions, hell is proverbially paved. A character is a completely fashioned will, and a will is an aggregate of tendencies to act in a firm and prompt and definite way upon all the principal emergencies of life. A tendency to act only becomes effectively ingrained in us in proportion to the uninterrupted frequency with which the actions actually occur. Every time a resolve or fine glow of feeling evaporates without bearing practical fruit is worse than a chance lost; it works so as positively to hinder future resolutions and emotions from being carried out into acts. We must expect nothing from cautions and precepts beyond the point at which practice has changed them into firm habits. Training converts precept, example, and impulse into habit. There is no test of virtue except its exhibition in action. A right feeling should have its issue in a corresponding action. The oftener we speak of right, as a matter of mere sentiment, the wider becomes the gap between the feeling and the act. There is no education to moralty apart from the practice of morality.

There is no more contemptible type of human character than that of the nerveless sentimentalist, who spends all his life in a weltering sea of sensibility and emotion, but who never does a manly concrete deed. The weeping of a Russian lady over the fictitious personages in the play, while her coachman is freezing to death on his coach outside is the sort of thing that everywhere happens on a less glaring scale. One becomes habitually filled with emotions which habitually pass without prompting to any deed, and so the sentimental condition is kept up. The remedy would be never to have an emotion at a concert (or theater) without expressing it afterward in some active way—doing the least thing in the world, speaking generally to one's aunt or giving up one's seat in the horse car, if nothing more heroic offers, but let it not fail to take place. Keep the faculty of effort alive in you by a little gratutitous exercise every day; that is, be systematically ascetic or heroic in little unnecessary points; do every day something for no other reason than that you would rather not do it, so that when the hour of dire need draws nigh it may find you nerved and trained to stand the test. Asceticism of this sort is like the insurance which a man pays on his house and goods. The tax does him no good at the time, and possibly may never bring him a return. But if the fire does come, his having paid it will be his salvation from ruin. So with the man who has daily applied himself to habits of concentrated attention and self-denial in unneccessary things. He will stand like a tower when everything rocks around him, and when his softer fellow mortals are winnowed like chaff in the blast.

Let us remember that since habit is the master of one's later years, we should in youth endeavor to form good habits; that although inherited tendency counts for much—for has not some one said that the child is the fruit of all the past and the seed of all the future—still habit counts for more in forming character; that although one original nature may be strong, habit may become a second nature—nay, as the Duke of Wellington said, it may become ten times nature, "for use can almost change the stamp of nature;" and, remembering these truths, let us not ascribe to natural endowments the achievement that is the effect of long and persistent attention; but let us go forth as apostles of patient and persistent work, climbing each day higher and higher up Sinai's slope, not satisfied 'till we shall have reached the summit.

The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night.

There is no one who has not grown up under a load of beliefs—beliefs which he owes to the accidents of country or family, to the books he has read, to the society he has frequented, in general to the circumstances which have concurred in the formation of his intellectual and moral habits. These beliefs may be true or false; or what is more probable, they may be a medley of truths and errors. It is, however, under their influence that he studies, and through them, as through a prism, that he views and judges the objects of knowledge. Everything, therefore, is seen by him in false colors or in distorted relations. And that is why, in the search for truth, renunciation of prejudices is required, a prejudice being an opinion formed without a previous examination of its grounds. Christ says that unless we become as little children, we cannot enter the kingdom of heaven; unless we cast off the prejudices of the man, and become as children, docile and unperverted, we need never hope to attain progress in truth. Man is by nature, says Aristotle, a social animal, and there is a tendency in each of us to assimilate in opinions and habits of thought, to those with whom we live and act. As men are prone to imitate others, they naturally regard as important or insignificant, as honorable or disgraceful, as true or false, as good or bad, what those around them consider in the same light. They love and hate what they see others love or hate. Our faith is likely to be faith in somebody else's faith. Almost every opinion we have but by authority; we believe, judge, act, live and die on trust, as common custom teaches us. We are too weak to choose and decide for ourselves. An ounce of custom outweighs a ton of reason. But the wise do not act thus. They, as Paul says, prove all things and hold fast to that which is good. But since prejudice makes men slaves, disqualifies them for the pursuit of truth, we must break off the habit of prejudice. We must learn to judge of opinions by things, and not judge of things by opinions. Let us free ourselves from our opinions, but in asserting our liberty let us not act the part of revolted slaves and run into license. Let us doubt, but remember that doubt is a means, not an end. We begin with doubt in order that we may not end in doubt. We doubt once in order that we can believe always. We surrender opinion that we may obtain knowledge. We must not be infidels in truth. Our doubt must not be the doubt of passion, of fancy, or of darkness; but must be the doubt of prudence, of wisdom, the doubt that is born of light, and produces light in its turn. Belief without question is the work of a feeble mind; but unlimited skepticism, of a feebler one; and we are likely foolishly to ascribe vigor of intellect to one who doubts everything. Among the habits that induce us to adhere to skepticism or error, there is none more dangerous than sloth. The greater part of mankind are inclined to spare themselves the trouble of a long or laborious inquiry, or they fancy that a superficial examination is enough, and the slightest agreement between a few objects in a few points they at once assume as showing the agreement of the whole throughout. The discovery of truth can be made only by the labor of attention. The attention is a natural prayer by which we obtain the enlightenment of reason.

Pride is a powerful impediment to progress, in knowledge. Under the influence of this passion men seek honor, not truth. They do not cultivate what is most valuable in reality, but what is most valuable in mere opinion. They disdain perhaps what can be easily accomplished and apply themselves to the obscure and recondite.

Self-love is an enemy to progress in truth. It has led men to close their eyes against the most evident truths which were not in harmony with their adopted opinions. What a man wishes to be true that he prefers believing. If the human mind has once taken a liking to any doctrine it draws everything else into harmony with that doctrine and to its support; and although there may be found a more powerful array of contradictory evidence or instances, these the mind does not notice, or else condemns and rejects.

Baptists Disagree.

Chattanooga Times.

The Baptist church of Texas is badly split as a result of the factional differences which resulted in a large number of delegates being refused seats in the convention. The faction which was excluded is known as the church party. Its leaders were today in earnest but quiet consultation. The situation was considered from all standpoints and a vigorously aggressive campaign determined upon. An address to the Baptists of Texas is to be promulgated within the next three days. The instrument is now being prepared.

It was determined to distribute this address among every congregation of Baptists in Texas and then at the expiration of two months energetic action is to be taken.

Into the Courts.

The first move of importance will be a resort to the courts of law.

The board of directors appointed today by the general convention are to be sued to obtain control of the Baptist general convention, all of the educational institutions of the Baptist denomination in Texas, the possession and control of mission funds, and, in fact, for all the machinery of the Baptist church in the state. This will be the most extensive religious lawsuit ever instituted in the United States.

It was also given out that the proceedings of the general convention, just adjourned, will be reported to the various churches by the church policy party and denounced as illegal and of no force; that the amendments to the constitution are not binding and a recommendation that a general convention be held under the auspices of the church party leaders. The result will be that the fight will be carried into every church in the state, some 2,500 in number.

"Some people," said the man with the large Adam's apple, "seem just naturally to have the hardest kind of luck. Here's an account of a man who put out his eye with his own umbrella."

"Say," observed the man with the celluloid dickey, "that's so. Now there's my friend Quackenboss. He put his false teeth in his coat-tail pocket, forgot they were there, sat down on them and bit himself so severely that he died in three days from hydrophobia. Now—"

But the man with the large Adam's apple was gone.—New York Press.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

Elders desiring clergy permits will please make application through their respective presidents.

The Universalist church reports 1,003 parishes and 47,471 families, an increase of about 1,200 families over last year.

Write your name in kindness, love and mercy, on the hearts of those you come in contact with, and you will never be forgotten.

We will be greatly obliged if, when Elders are renewing their subscriptions, they will also give their home address where the paper is to be sent.

FRANKLIN D. RICHARDS DEAD.

Many a home will be thrown into deep mourning to learn of the death of Apostle Franklin D. Richards, president of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles and Historian of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

He was summoned to the Master at four minutes after twelve o'clock a. m. Dec. 8, 1899.

The end was very unexpected, and while he was known to be ill, yet his recovery was always expected.

He was surrounded by his immediate family when the sad hour came.

President Franklin D. Richards, of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, was the son of Phineas and Wealthy Richards. He was born at Richmond, Mass., on April 2, 1821.

In 1836 he was converted to the Gosple and was baptized by his father, who had previously identified himself with the Church. Two years later Brother Richards bade his New England home farewell and moved to Far West, Mo. In 1839 he was ordained a Seventy and sent to Western Indiana on a mission and made a reputation as a public speaker.

From Far West Apostle Richards moved to Nauvoo, dwelling there until 1846, witnessing the laying of the cornerstone of the Nauvoo Temple in 1841.

In 1846 Brother Richards was again sent on a mission, this time to Europe. On his arrival in Liverpool, England, he was appointed to preside over the Church in Scotland. In October of 1848 he landed in Salt Lake City in charge of a large company of Saints who had come with him from England. In 1849 he was ordained an apostle and went on a second mission to England. After two years he returned to Utah and was elected a member of the Territorial legislative assembly.

In 1853 he took part in the ceremonies of laying the corner-stone of the Salt Lake Temple. Later he again performed a mission in Europe, returning to Utah finally in 1868. He held the office of probate judge in Weber county from 1869 to 1883. When Lorenzo Snow was chosen President of the Church in 1898, Apostle Richards became President of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles.

The labors of President Richards have been in many lands, and his name is familiar to Saints throughout the world. He was also associated with the history of Utah; not only from being a pioneer in its establishment, but as a compiler and preserver of historical data, both civil and ecclesiastical. He was church historian and recorder, and the president of the State Historical Society.

GROWTH OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The first Sunday School of the Latter Day Saints organized west of the Rocky Mountains was on Dec. 10, 1849, with twenty-six members. At this time the great Salt Lake valley was sparsely settled and the facilities for this work were very few.

In the midst of the adverse circumstances then surrounding the Saints Richard Ballantye saw the need of some institution where the young could be taught the Gospel, and accordingly set about preparing a suitable place. He owned a lot on the northeast corner of First West and Third South streets, Salt Lake City, and upon this he erected an adobe building eighteen by twenty feet, outside measurements, for Sunday School purposes, besides a smaller room used by the family as a living room. The roof was of dirt; the benches were made of slabs extending the width of the room.

This briefly announces the beginning of this marvelous work, which now extends to all parts of the world. The statistical report for 1898 is as follows:

In 1898 there were forty Stakes of Zion, containing 639 Sunday Schools, 11,384 officers and teachers and 93,388 pupils. Total, 104,772. Besides these there were sixteen missions that reported 378 Sunday Schools, 1,933 officers and teachers and 9,998 pupils. Total, 11,931. The grand total was 116,703 officers, teachers and pupils.

Thus we see how this work has grown.

It is exceedingly gratifying to see the interest that is taken by the whole people in this grand cause. Everybody recognizes the value of the Sunday School, or at least they should do so, for but few homes are bereft of those God-given jewels of heaven, children, and we are now taught that to neglect them means their sins will be upon our heads.

We know that as the twig is bent the tree is inclined, and in the period of childhood the good or evil impressions are made that will some day assert themselves either for good or evil. We cannot be too zealously engaged in this work, for it is but a pace from boyhood to manhood, and if it be true that the boy is the father of the man, it is easy to be seen that the safety of our homes, our state and our nation depends on the manner in which our youth is educated. If we would have them honorable and God-fearing they must be taught concerning honor and God.

We often meet people who say: "It is nowhere taught in the Bible that we are to have Sunday Schools." There are many things omitted or not taught in the Bible that are absolutely and indispensably necessary for the perfecting of the Saints. Paul says we should have helps and governments to assist in this work of perfecting ourselves, and if nothing that defileth can enter into the heavenly Jerusalem is it not imperative that we cannot begin too early in life to learn lessons that will in after life assist us in coping with that vile monster, sin. "Why don't you quit smoking?" we might ask these same people. "Why," they would invariably answer, "we learned to smoke when we were young and can't quit now." Then why not teach the young good things, and this is the purpose of the Sunday School, that the habit of doing good will remain with them when they get old.

The Christian's Prayer.

J. J. Fix.

Jesus, my light, my life, my all,
Most humbly at Thy feet I fall;
And cast on Thee in earnest prayer,
My doubts, my fears, my every care.

Lead me in paths of truth and right;
Shield me, and keep me by Thy might:
"Purge me with hyssop," make me clean,
And with Thy saints may I be seen.

Help me to love, to do, to serve,
And from my duty never swerve,
Until at last within the veil,
My bark no longer fears the gale.

And thus, a vessel made of clay,
May I lead others in the way;
And when my armor is laid down,
Receive from Thee a starry crown.

THE PRESENT CRISIS.

BY ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

Written forThe Southern Star.

We need scarcely observe, that, from the first, the righteous among men have been objects of the combined assaults of the wicked and ungodly. From the days of "righteous Abel," unto the present time, those who have been upholders of Truth and advocates of purity, have had to stem the torrent of vile abuse, fierce persecutions, and perilous heresies. Affliction seems to be the portion of the righteous, as it was that of our glorious Head—the Lord Jesus—"a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief."

On the one hand, it has been the endeavor of the true followers of Christ to vindicate God's honor, and arrest the workings of wickedness; on the other it has been the effort of the evil one and his seed, to sweep from the earth these defenders of Truth. There is a necessary repugnance between truth and error; between evil and good. The two cannot be amalgamated; they will not coalesce. Evil, wheresoever it exists, will always league against good; so that the wicked among men whose "deeds are evil," are sure to join hands in a desperate companionship to overthrow righteousness. Those "fallen angels," cast from the courts on high for their rebelliousness, have carried on nothing but battle with God; and we need not, under the present dispensation, look for a discontinuance of the assaults of the enemy.

As Latter Day Saints, we are passing through a very trying crisis, being persecuted and opposed in many places by brute force and mob violence. It is quite natural for us to rejoice when all is peace and happiness, our pathway unobstructed, our meetings undisturbed. The miracle is to "rejoice in tribulation," and this miracle is continually wrought as the faithful saint presses on through this "vale of tears." None of us can be the people of God and be immune from the odium of the world; the better we are, the more we will be hated. "The ripest fruit is most pecked by the birds." We will be slandered; we will be calumniated; just in proportion to our zeal and feality to God, we will be evilly spoken of.

There is, of necessity, a cause for every effect. Let us then straightway proceed to investigate the subject and find out some of the causes, productive of the effects, manifest in the recent assaults of mob violence inflicted upon our brethren. Hence the question, Why are we persecuted? arises before us, and as we advance in our elucidation of this subject, we trust it may prove a faith-strengthener to us of the household, and a gentle warning to those engaged in our opposition and persecution.

First, it is clear to the candid minds of all who have given Mormonism a fair investigation, that the very ones who ought to be our kindest friends, are our most bitter enemies, and they care not what means they use, whether foul or fair in their opposition against us. To reason from the negative side of the question, in regard to the subject under discussion, viz: Why are we persecuted? Let me ask: Is it because we are agnostic in our tendencies or infidelic in our views, that a war is made upon us by the pulpit and the press? Is it because we are opposed to God and His Christ? Is it because we are guilty of sacrilege or desecration? Is it because we are hypocritical, deceitful, or traitorous in our dealings? To these interrogations there is but one answer and from the lips and hearts of the earnest and sincere among men, the answer comes in thunder tones: No! Look where you will. Go where you may, among the Latter Day Saints, and you will find that they are truly Christian in their endeavors to do good; God-fearing in their worship and work; and hold with sacred regard and holy zeal whatever belongs to the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is for these causes that they are subjected to the assaults of the prejudiced, the lash of the bigot, and the violence of mobs.

Religious rancor is in the van of persecution against the saints of God today, stirred up by those Pharisaic prelates, who under the disguise of sanctity and the cloak of usurped authority, place daggers in the hands of ruthless fiends with which to ply upon the innocent and unoffending. In former days this religious rancor could be seen unsheathing the sword and fighting the pile around the martyrs of Truth. Today when human society is at a high point of knowledge and refinement, we naturally look for a suppression of these barbaric means in opposition to religious differences; especially when religious toleration is being advocated far and wide. But alas! in this we are disappointed! Religious bigots today, blinded by tradition and error, whose consciences seared with the hot iron of prejudice are using much the same weapons against the work of God, as their forefathers did in days of old. Savage violence is the engine employed to crush what the world erroneously calls Mormonism, and that too in a land of boasted liberty and equal rights! But neither the might of armies, the scheming of politicians, nor the tirades of religious scandal-mongers avails anything against the work of God.

I do not deem it wisdom to present a lengthy discussion of any one topic at the present time. There are some thoughts, however, that are connected with the subject—the present crisis—that are deeply rooted in my mind, which I desire to present.

The trite saying: "History repeats itself," was never more apparent than during this present crisis. I refer to sacred or Biblical history. And it is my desire to have the reader accompany me, while we scan the pages of Holy Writ, in search of our proofs, that the history of the present is but analogous with the history of the past. Remembering the words of Washington Irving, "Argument is never so well understood by us selfish mortals as when it comes home to ourselves," let us therefore view the labors of Christ and His apostles, relative to the ground upon which they stood in support of the message they bore, and the treatment they received, together with the servants of God today, and see the remarkable similarity existing between the two.

Upon one occasion, amid the cavil of the Jews, our Lord uttered the following injunction, "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me," John 5:39. Now let us keep in mind this fact, that when the Master gave vent to this expression there was not one word of the New Testament written; so it was to the Old Testament—the "Law and the Prophets," that He directed their attention, at the same time telling them that those very books they claimed to believe in, and esteemed so highly, bore testimony of Him. Thus we see He cited them to their own records, which they held as holy and divine for proofs of His divinity. Again He says, in the same chapter, "Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father; there is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust. For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?" (verses 45-47). Here again, we see the Savior declaring unto them the words of Moses, giving them to understand that, if they would only implicitly believe the writings they already possessed, as a consequence they would also believe in Him.

Furthermore, we find the Lamb of God going into the synagogues of the Jews; taking up the records found therein, preaching the word of God unto them, showing them light upon the scriptures, discoursing as "one having authority;" and that too from the very books they claimed to be divine. How was He received for so doing? Was He not subjected to scoffs and jeers? Was He not buffeted, spit upon, mocked and reviled? Yes! and finally when the birth of salvation was complete, when He had finished the work allotted Him to perform in the plan of redemption, He was taken by wicked, cruel hands, nailed to the cross of Calvary on Golgotha's dreary heights, and there, suspended between the heavens and the earth, He died for the sins of the world. He was led out of the gate "scape goat" for the whole human race, for upon this spotless Lamb of God, full of mercy, equity, truth and grace, was laid "the iniquity of us all." What had He done to bring upon Him the scorn of the multitude, the scorn of the Pharisee, and the violence of the rabble? He had taught them words of life and truth, from their own books, found in their places of worship, and read by their Rabbis and High Priests, and for so doing it brought Him grief and sorrow, and ultimately cost Him His life.

To continue our search, we will next see why it was that the Apostles were persecuted and afflicted. When that stalwart giant for truth—Peter—stood up before the multitude on that memorable Pentecost, as recorded in the second chapter of "Acts of the Apostles," we find him proving the divinity of Christ's mission from the "Law and the Prophets," quoting as authority there, the writings of such inspired men as David and Joel, prophets of the Old Testament. What was the result? What happened to Peter for so doing? He quoted from the very books his accusers claimed to believe in, and following in the steps of the Good Shepherd, he was beaten, imprisoned, and put to death.

How was it with Brother John, the beloved apostle of our Lord? Did he not reason from the scriptures, and say, "Let that therefore abide in you, which ye have heard form the beginning?" John 2:24. Yes! and he too, suffered pain, sorrow, affliction in various forms, and banishment!

Let us now take a view of the apostle Paul's experiences in this line, and see if this great apostle to the Gentiles fared any better than his fellow-laborers—Peter and John! When we first meet with the apostle Paul in Holy Writ, or as he was then called, "Saul of Tarsus," we find his hands stained with innocent blood, for when the prophet Stephen was stoned to death Saul "consenting unto his death," stood by and took charge of the clothes of those who committed this dastardly deed. In his blind zeal, he persecuted the saints of God into strange cities; compelling many to blaspheme, and raising his voice against others who were put to death. When he was engaged in this ungodly warfare against the followers of Christ, while he went about denying the mission of Jesus, and His resurrection from the dead, he was with the world, "hale fellow well met," for we have no account of him suffering, whatever, during this time. But oh! how changed is the scene, how reversed is the programme, when, after that eventful day's journey from Jerusalem to Damascus, he begins to preach the truth as it is in Christ Jesus! Former friends become his bitterest enemies; where he was once received with smiles, he is now beaten with stripes; where he was once welcomed with open arms, he is now cast out and beaten with rods; instead of the hearty handshake to cheer him on, and "hale fellow well met" to greet his ears, it is now the contemptible frown to bid him depart, and "What will this babbler say?" wherever he goes. And why? you ask. Go with him for a few moments and understand the "whys and wherefores" as he himself bears testimony of them.

BENEFIT OF HAVING THE LIVING ORACLES.

The Way to the Tree of Life—The Oral and the Written Word of God—Fulfillment of Ancient and Modern Revelation—The Law of Tithing.

[DELIVERED BY ELDER ANTHON H. LUND, OCT. 6, 1899.]

I hope I shall be able to make myself heard by this vast congregation. I was very much interested in the remarks of our brethren this forenoon, and the subjects they touched upon are of great value and importance to us as a people. When Brother Cowley spoke he alluded to the blessings we have received in having the living word of God in our midst and the Prophet of God to lead us. It made me think do we really appreciate this great blessing of having inspired men in our midst to lead us? Do we give heed to their counsel and advice? The brethren have dwelt upon the importance of paying heed unto the Lord's commandments to His people. When He commands, He desires His children to obey. Obedience to the Father's will is a principle that we must all learn. He has not left us in the dark in regard to what He wants us to do. I believe the Latter Day Saints have more faith and a stronger testimony than any other people. They received this strong testimony when the hands of the servants of God were laid upon their heads. They received the Holy Ghost, which leads into all truth and makes known the Father's will. So that, while we have inspired men in our midst to give us the word of the Lord, we are not dependent upon that alone. The Lord has given unto us His Holy Spirit to witness unto our spirits whether that which is given us is right or not. The Latter Day Saints who perform their duty are not in the dark in regard to the counsel which they receive. When it comes from the servants of God unto them the Holy Spirit gives them a testimony that it is true.

Lehi of old had a beautiful dream. He saw the world spread before him. He stood by a tree—the tree of life—enjoyed its precious fruit and saw how multitudes were hurrying to get to that tree. He saw that there was a mist came down that obscured the tree of life from the view of the multitude. They wanted to reach it, but this darkness or mist prevented them from seeing it. The Lord, however, had provided means whereby they could reach it. There was a path leading to the tree and at the side of it a rod of iron. By taking hold of this and following it, although they were not able to see the tree, but believing what had been told them, that this rod led to the tree of life, many found it. But many would not take hold of the iron rod, and they went astray and did not reach the tree with its precious fruit. Lehi saw also how that the greater number were walking on the other side of a river, which divided them from the tree of life. They went to a spacious building. He saw his own children, Laman and Lemuel, and he feared for them when he saw that they did not come where he was. His wife and his other children shared with him the blessing of partaking of the fruit of the tree of life. This iron rod, it was explained, is the word of God. By taking hold of that we need not go astray. Although we may have to look forward with the eye of faith, holding to the iron rod we will be just as safe as if there were no mist.

We are blessed, brethren and sisters, in having the word of God in our midst; not only the written word, but also the living word of God. We are thankful that we have so much of the written word of God in our midst. While we do not look upon the Bible as many Protestants do, still we have just as great reverence for it as they have. We have just as great a testimony, and greater, that it contains the word of God. We revere its contents, and we are trying to carry them out in our lives. We have testimony of the truth of the Bible from other sources, which the world do not accept, however, But the book itself proves to us that it is genuine. Its own prophecies, fulfilled since it was written, prove to us that it is a book containing the word of God. Look at Daniel's prophecy. In what a nutshell is the history of the future portrayed there? We could not any better describe it today, after we have followed history down for more than two thousand years. Daniel's prophecies are like history written beforehand, showing that they were inspired. The words of Jesus have been fulfilled since they were written and given to the world. In Matthew we have a clear prophecy concerning the Temple and the City of Jerusalem. How deeply I felt impressed when I sat on Mount Olivet and looked down upon the Temple ground. I thought of the prediction that not one stone of that building should be left upon another. This was uttered when Jerusalem was flourishing. It seemed an impossibility that such a prophecy could be fulfilled, but within forty years it came to pass. The Temple, built of large masses of rock, was entirely destroyed, the stones carried away and the Temple ground plowed, so as to obliterate any trace of the Temple. It was considered policy by a Roman emperor to do this, but it was the fulfillment of a prophecy of Jesus. We look upon the Bible as containing the word of God written to those of old, but much of it in a general way applies to us.

We also believe the Book of Mormon to contain the word of God. We look at its contents and we find that it contains internal evidences of its truth, that it sets forth, which also show that it is a divinely inspired book. Take the 10th chapter of second Nephi, and you will find that in that book, which was published to the world some months before the Church of Jesus Christ was organized, prophecies concerning our time. It alludes to this land; it designates it as the land of Zion and tells how the Gentiles shall come and enjoy liberty here; that there shall be no king here, and that those who fight against Zion shall not succeed. The prediction that there shall be no kings upon the land has been fulfilled even in our day. When I read of Dom Pedro of Brazil, having been dethroned, and the report went forth that being so popular he might again take the reigns of government over that state, I said that I did not believe that he would do so. I believed that the words uttered by Nephi, six hundred years before Christ, would be fulfilled, and that the time was hastening when there should not be any kings upon this land. When Louis Napoleon tried to establish an empire in Mexico he miserably failed, and the man who tried to become king there lost his life.

But I specially want to draw your attention to the allusion to this being a land of Zion. It here gives us an intimation of the gathering; that people should come from other nations, gather to this land, establish a Zion and that the Lord should protect them so that the enemies of Zion should not have power over her. This was years before emigration to this country took place, but the prophecy has been fulfilled. We look upon this as the land of Zion, and the principle of gathering, though a unique one, has been one that has pervaded the teachings and belief of the Latter Day Saints from the beginning. Even before the Elders in their missionary labors have said anything about a Zion, the spirit of God has witnessed to the spirits of those who have received the Gospel that there would be a gathering, but that God would have a people of His own and that they would be gathered to one place. From the very beginning of the Gospel being sent to England we have evidence to prove this. I have seen in my administrations how quickly the spirit has taken possession of the Saints. And while we do not urge gathering today, feeling that the work will be strengthened by most of the Saints remaining in the branches for a time and helping the Elders carry the warning message of the Gospel, yet the principle of gathering is just as true today as ever it has been. We feel, however, that it is better for those who receive the Gospel abroad to become well grounded in the faith before they make the sacrifice of leaving their homes and their relatives, and when they are well grounded in the faith and have helped to build up the Church where they have received the Gospel, we want them to gather with us and to make a part of the great united Church of God.

We have also the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, which contains numerous prophecies that have already been fulfilled. Take the 45th Section and that alludes to the gathering. The first year after the Church was organized this revelation was given and it plainly tells us that the people should gather from all the nations to this land, and that no weapon formed against Zion should prosper. Take the 49th Section, and what a plain prophecy it contains! So early in our history we are told that Jacob should flourish on the mountains—alluding to the people coming to the mountains and becoming a strong people here, as the Prophet Joseph prophesied twelve years after the organization of the Church.

These books we look upon as containing the word of God to us. But further, we believe that God has living witnesses upon the earth; that He has a mouthpiece upon the earth to give forth His words. Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God. His teachings prove that what he taught was divinely inspired. Some of his prophesies have been fulfilled, and others remain to be fulfilled. His predictions have not been guesswork. In 1832 he looked down and saw the fate of the nation. Earlier than that he told us the fate of the Church. Now it is reasonable to suppose that if the Lord raised up a Prophet, that Prophet would say something in regard to these two important things—the nation and the Church, and he did. He told how the Church would be persecuted and driven, and that even the blood of some should be spilt and should cry unto Heaven against those who had shed it. He prophesied that the Church should go to the Rocky Mountains, and he was so much impressed with the spirit of this that he appointed a committee to go and search for a place to locate the Saints. He did not live to see this accomplished, but we have seen this prophecy fulfilled. In regard to the nation he plainly foretold where the Rebellion should begin and what its results should be. Every one can see plainly that part of that revelation has been fulfilled, and the other part remains to be fulfilled. Take the successors of the Prophet Joseph, and they have been inspired of the Lord to give His word unto the people, and we have known that it has been the word of the Lord.

Today, brethren and sisters, the word of the Lord to us through His Prophet is that we should remember the law of tithing. It has been preached to you in many of your Stakes, and I am very happy to see the response that you have made to the call of the servants of the Lord. I hope that this will not be a temporary effect, but that you will all see and appreciate the importance of continually obeying the word of the Lord. Today we are walking in faith; that mist which Nephi saw lies around us, but we are shown the iron rod. Let us not let go of it and think that we can follow in another direction and that we will get through any way. If you and I shall obtain the privilege of eating of that precious fruit of the tree of life, we must hold to the iron rod. When the servants of God give us His word, let us cling to it; let us obey His will, and we will have no cause for regrets. In the book of Doctrine and Covenants we are taught that no religion has salvation in it that does not ask for sacrifice. It should not be a great sacrifice to us to pay our tithing. Great blessings have been promised those who will obey this law. The experience of the Saints has been that the Lord has fulfiled His promise in this regard. Before I close I wish to say to all: if you want your faith strengthened, if you want your testimony made clearer, pay your tithing and the Lord through His spirit will witness His approbation of your work. God bless you all. Amen.

Small Praise.

A young man who had disappointed his grandfather by displaying no fondness for New England farm life made his way through college, and the law school, and in time became a judge. His grandfather watched his progress with a sort of unwilling pride, but never by word or look gave young John the least encouragement or praise. When the appointment to the judge's bench at last came, the grandson took heart and asked for the old man's congratulations. "Aren't you glad for me, grandfather?" he asked, almost wistfully, glancing at the stubborn old face beside him. "Well, yes, I am glad for ye, John," admitted the octogenarian in a grudging tone. "I am glad for ye, but I don't want you should feel set up and imagine you amount to any great shakes jest on account of being made jedge. I want you should always recall when anything like this comes to ye that there's plenty of folks that when they're in need of a stopper and haven't got a cork, they'll make shift with a corncob! You jest bear that in mind."

Remarkable Drinks.

Of the many extraordinary drinks regularly consumed, the blood of live horses may perhaps be considered the most so. Marco Polo and Carpini were the first to tell the world of the Tartar practice of opening the veins in horses' necks, taking a drink, and closing the wound again. As far as can be seen, this has been the practice from time immemorial. There is a wine habitually consumed in China which is made from the flesh of lambs reduced to paste with milk, or bruised into pulp with rice, and then fermented. The Laplanders drink a great deal of smoked snow-water, and one of the national drinks of the Tonquinese is arrack flavored with chicken's blood. The list would scarcely be complete without mention of absinthe, which may be called the national spirituous drink of France. It is a horrible compound of alcohol, anise, coriander, fennel, wormwood, indigo and sulphate of copper. It is strong, nasty and a moral and physical poison.—New York Home Journal.

Power of Example.

Like alone acts upon like. Therefore do not amend by reasoning, but by example. Approach feeling by feeling; do not hope to excite love except by love. Be what you wish others to become. Let yourself, and not your words, preach.—Henri Frederic Amiel.

THE DARK AGES.

BY ELDER A. ARROWSMITH.

The Second Century witnessed much martyrdom among the Christians, and Pliny's letter, which is still extant, speaks eulogistically of their faith, implying that they were honest, good, simple and God-fearing people. Pliny's testimony was invaluable, as he was a Pagan, and the governor of Bithynia, under Trajan, the Emperor of Rome, and his letter was instrumental in checking the persecution which was raging (as the various edicts issued under Domitian were enforced by the Pagan officials). But the Christians were forbidden, under the penalty of death, to make proselytes.

Many translations of the New Testament were circulated during this century, and Christianity grew in spite of the Pagan opposition.

The Christians were accused of all manner of enormities. If an earthquake occurred, drought, sickness or pestilence, they were blamed for it; also it was generally understood that they ate human flesh. Such wicked accusations, however, were fabrications, without foundation in fact. They gradually were becoming defiled with too close acquaintance with the Pagans, whose enticing and seductive worship drew many followers. An instance in this century. One Ammonius Saccus, who had been highly educated in the schools of Alexandria, of Christian parentage, favored the monastic life, and the ascetic mode of living in celibacy and maceration.

The following doctrine was generally taught and accepted by a majority of Christians, in accord with this man's teaching:

"The soul of the wise man ought to be removed to the greatest possible distance from the contagious influence of the body; and as the depressing weight of the body, the force of its appetites, and its connections with a corrupt world, are in direct opposition to this sacred obligation. Therefore all sensual pleasures are to be carefully avoided; the body is to be supported, or rather extenuated, by a slender diet; solitude is to be sought, as the true mansion of virtue, and contemplation to be employed as the means of raising the soul as far as possible to a sublime freedom from all corporeal ties, and to a noble elevation above all terrestrial things.

The person who lives in this manner shall enjoy, even in a present state, a certain degree of communion with the Deity; and when the corporeal mass is dissolved, shall immediately ascend to the sublime regions of felicity and perfection, without passing through the state of trial that awaits the generality of mankind."

Such doctrines were widely disseminated in this the second century, and caused an intermingling of Paganism and Christianity.

The Emperor Marcus Aurelius was exceptionally bitter in his persecution of the Christians, many being put to death at his instigation.

The principal martyrs were Simeon, Ignatius, Polycarp and Justin Martyr, all Bishops and prominent church officials.

Perhaps it would not be out of place to relate the martyrdom of Polycarp, who was a prominent Bishop, and who had a personal acquaintance with St. John, as it shows the fortitude and courage the primitive Saints were in possession of, many of whom gloried in the cross of Christ, and almost invariably met their death bravely.

Polycarp requested that he be not secured to the pile, whereon he was to be burned, and said, "Let me be thus, for he that giveth me strength to bear the fire will also give me power, without being secured by you with these spikes, to remain unmoved on the pile." They therefore, did not nail him, and he prayed, saying: Father of Thy well beloved Son Jesus Christ, through whom we have received the knowledge of Thee. The God of angels and power of all creation, and of all the family of the righteous, that liveth before Thee. I bless Thee, that Thou hast thought me worthy of the present day and hour, to have a share in the number of martyrs, and in the cup of Christ, unto the resurrection of eternal life, both of soul and body, in the incorruptible felicity of the Holy Ghost, among whom may I be received in Thy sight this day, as a rich and acceptable sacrifice, as Thou, the Faithful and True God, hast prepared, hast revealed, and fulfilled. Wherefore on this account. and for all things, I praise Thee, and glorify Thee, through the Eternal High Priest Jesus Christ, the well Beloved Son; through whom be glory to Thee, with Him, in the Holy Ghost, both now and forever, amen."

After Polycarp uttered the above prayer, the executioners ignited the pile, and Polycarp died rejoicing.

Ignatius was torn by wild beasts, and expired rejoicing.

Many scholarly philosophers and writers lived in this century, among whom we might mention Justin Martyr, Tertulian, the disciple of Montanus, Irenaeus, Saccus and Origen, whose writings are still extant, and which furnished much food for thought during the Dark Ages, as they were recognized authorities on theology, although undoubtedly impregnated with Paganism.

The condition of the Christians in this century was becoming deplorable; they were mostly poor, and had been hunted from pillar to post, and were almost worn out, as the Prophet had predicted they would be. The Platonists and Gnostics had mixed with them, and the outcome was retirement to monasteries and nunneries; and the celebacy of Priests, monks and nuns. The mixture was a combination of the Persian, Egyptian Magian system, intermingled with a smattering of the doctrines of Christ. This conglomeration denounced marriage as a doctrine of the devil, and it was thus declared by their corrupted priesthood, and it was discouraged in all those who sought a spiritual life. See I Tim. 4-3.

The true Christian was terribly persecuted, which is the lot of all those who follow their persecuted Master, "as all who live Godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." And these poor Christians, as a sect, were everywhere evily spoken against, and they took joyfully the spoiling of their goods, went hungry and thirsty, and were considered the offscourings of all things; yet they were happy in the hope of the recompense promised to the faithful, by their great file leader, and Captain of their salvation, Jesus Christ.

Many of them sought refuge in the catacombs of Rome, the remains of which are seen today. These underground passageways afforded retirement from the wicked world, and the Christian were comparatively safe in these 900 miles of passage ways, beneath that great metropolis Rome; where they worshiped their Lord with true and humble devotion; their simplicity and purity preserving them in the faith. They made brick, which they exchanged at the entrance of these catacombs for bread and the common necessaries of life. Remains of these Christians, their simple ways and mode of life can be found to this day.

Those of them who dared the sunlight of heaven were exposed to much danger and hatred, and in their simple worship were compelled to seek the groves and plantations that bordered the Tiber, seeking the most secluded spots along that river, which was polluted with the blood of martyrs. Many times they were caught in their devotions, and foully butchered in cold blood by the Roman soldiery, no mercy being extended them, and the heavens being as brass to their petitions.

At this period the devil, with all his imps of darkness, must have grinned and gloated over the apparant discomfiture of the Saints, who were surely being prevailed against, and were driven from the earth, seeking refuge in the subterranean passages before mentioned. How puffed up he must have felt to think that his Satanic arrogance had in such a short period of time perverted and almost obliterated the perfect system, which was introduced by his superior, Jesus, the Nazarine, whose Gospel taught love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; and all good works, which were exemplified in His life. But the Prince of Darkness prevailed, and many preferred darkness, rather than light; and God gave them up, to follow their own wicked inclinations. And the great Arch fiend, Lucifer, led them at his will, into all manner of enormities and sins, so that it was hard to find virtue, chastity and truth upon the face of the earth.

As Paul says, he, the Devil, had surely become the God of this world, and blinded the minds of all who believed not the Gospel of Jesus; consequently the works of the flesh were manifest, which were "Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like." Gal. 5-19.

Every jot and tittle of the word of God had to be fulfilled, and the great Apostasy had to come, and Satan was but serving the purposes of God and fulfilling the prophesies of His servants, by his deplorable actions in this century; and the Christians who preserved their integrity died rejoicing in the hope which passes all human understanding, knowing that their reward was sure and eternal in its nature. And they could say with Paul, who was beheaded for the Gospel's sake, and said in his letter to Timothy that he had fought a good fight, had finished his course, and had kept the faith. Henceforth there was laid up for him a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, had prepared for all those who loved His appearing. The Saints died with a glorious consciousness of these facts, and death was but a relief from the many pangs which tribulations of earth brought, consequently many of them courted death, and wished to suffer like their beloved Master, who was ignominiously crucified.

East Kentucky Conference.

To The Editor:

According to appointment the Elders of the East Kentucky conference met at London, Ky., Dec. 1, and 2.

The religious campaign of last fall caused such a bitter hatred against the Latter Day Saints that it was impossible to get any public building, in which to hold services, so we did second best by preparing a large room in the Riley house.

By Thursday night all of the Elders and a few Saints had gathered to receive spiritual food.

No one but an Elder can even imagine the extreme pleasure there is in a gathering of this kind.

The conference began at 10 o'clock Friday morning by singing "How Swift the Months Have Passed Away;" prayer was offered by Elder MacKay. After singing President D. A. Broadbent compared the difficulties confronting the servants of God in both ancient and modern times. "Opposition," said the speaker, "is necessary. If we had no opponents we would become stagnant and would retrograde."

President George A. Lyman was pleased to meet with the Elders of East Kentucky again. He spoke of the deplorable condition of the world who have not the knowledge of the Gospel and the testimony of Jesus.

Afternoon Session.

After the regular preliminaries the testimony meeting continued until every Elder had borne his testimony. It was a feast for the Elders and Saints assembled.

President Broadbent encouraged the Elders to be energetic in their labors. He warned them not to tear any one's belief down; rather show the Gospel truths to the people; build them a Gospel mansion then invite them to dwell in the luxury of truth.

Elder Davis spoke for a few moments, after which President Rich eulogized the people of the south very highly.

The business of the conference was then transacted after which the meeting adjourned until Saturday morning.

Saturday Morning Session.

The meeting began by singing "Yes My Native Land I Love Thee;" prayer was offered by Elder Wright; singing "Ye Who Are Called to Labor."

President Broadbent thanked the Elders for the support tendered him during his labors as president of the conference. He taught the Elders to be humble and obedient; to seek for the spirit of God, and overcome the evils of this world, then success will crown your every effort.

President Rich asked for the faith and prayers of those assembled that a spiritual feast might be had.

We have been sent out to preach the Gospel, therefore use every honorable means to get this message before them.

Many of our opposers know we have the truth and they cannot gainsay the doctrine, therefore they resort to foul means to get rid of us.

The sin of this and other generations is a belief in dead prophets and a rejection of the living Oracles. The theme of Lucifer is to stir up hatred against the living servants of God and a reverence for the dead ones. The dead can do nothing for our salvation, the devil knows it, and he further knows that the living oracles have power through the authority they have to save if the people will only give heed to their words.

He explained the difference between the plan of Lucifer and Christ in the beginning; why the devil was rejected and Christ accepted. Satan was cast out of heaven for opposing the truth and he still continues to war against the work of God.

Be willing to take the persecution heaped upon you. If you die here all will be well with you.

President Lyman bore testimony to the words of President Rich.

Elder Davis made a few remarks after which the Elders were assigned to their fields of labor and with a hearty hand-shake they left feeling that they had been abundantly paid and spiritually fed for gathering together.

W. T. DAVIS,
Clerk of Conference.

THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT.

When the world seemed young and the wonder of life swung strong in the hearts of man.
When the simpler faith and the sturdier hope welled up where the red blood ran,
When the back-log glowed on the open hearth and love in the open heart,
In the good old days when the wencles fair for the Christmas woods would start,
By the mazer-bowl of the vassals stout to the twenty-hooped pot of kings.
All the world was given not over to greed and the passion for trifling things.

It was boar-head, mistletoe, holly and ale. and songs, though the notes were gruff;
'Twas a flagon of mead and a joint from the spit, a toast, though the board was rough;
It was "Stand all, now, and a life to the King!—A health to the lads afar!—
And a toast to Her, with your hand on your heart!—The last, to the Eastern Star!"
So the great hall rang with their carol and hymn, the dawn in the East grew gold;
Then vassal and monarch humbled their hearts and kneeled to their Christ of old.

But the dusk has crept through the aging years, and the heart of the world has changed,
It is good-by now to Romance as it was farewell to the Life estranged;
In the rush for gold, in the battle for bread, 'tis Chivalry trampled out,
Where we live in houses that darken sad streets, and swarm in the citied rout;
And heavy of heart we stop for a day, we pause at the Christmas chimes;
Where our ashen faces and sorrowing eyes still glow for the good old times.

No matter how mad is the struggle and fevered the marts of the new-born age,
Ah, the loom shall stop and the anvil be still and the cities forget their rage!
Though we feed not now on the husk of the past, we have, O my soul, man's hope
That the darkest years have their end and each cloud God hangs at the last shall ope;
So a wraith, this day, of that old Romance, a ghost of that earlier Peace
Through the years still whisper that Hatred and War and Strife in the end shall cease!

—Arthur J. Stringer.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

The subject of this sketch, Geo. E. Maycock, appeared in this sphere of action about twenty-three years ago. His parents were sturdy and God-fearing: they cheerfully endured the hardships incident to "crossing the plains" in the hand cart brigade, that they might associate with the Saints of God in Zion.

Eld. Maycock attended the public schools until 1892, at which time he entered the Latter Day Saints College, attending that institution of learning one and one half years.

From the time of discontinuance until 1896, he followed various occupations. At this time he received notice that his services were wanted in the missionary field, to which place he departed March 21, 1896. He was assigned to Texas, where he labored until Jan. 9, 1897. From Texas he was transferred to Mississippi where he labored in the various branches of missionary work, being associated as counsellor to Frank T. Pomeroy, also T. R. Condie.

In September he was released to return to Zion, arriving there the latter part of that month, immediately entering school where he attended during the winter.

ELDER GEO. E. MAYCOCK,
President Ohio Conference.

In September, 1899, he was again summoned into the missionary field, where he arrived October 16, 1899.

Elder Maycock was chosen to fill the editorial chair of the Star. Nov. 29th, he was appointed president of the Ohio conference, but will continue his labors on this paper until some time after the turn of the year, when he will take personal charge of the work in Ohio.

History of the Southern States Mission.

August 1893.

Seldom, since the mission opened, has this month passed with as little trouble. The treatment of the Elders was in general good.

In Durham, N. C., two Elders were forced to flee to another city for protection.

Elders Doxey and Ence had a very disagreeable time in the city of Pass Christian, Miss. The mayor of the city consented to their using the city hall for services. The town council thought differently and met and protested against "Mormons" using the hall. They were notified to leave the city, and when informed by a friend, that the "white caps" were organized, they left, going into the country, where very similar treatment was accorded them.

The semi-annual report for the half year ending August 31, 1893, was as follows:

Number of traveling Elders, 123.
Number of branches organized, 4.
Number of baptisms, 224.
Number of children blessed, 79.
Number of emigrants, 50.
All Elders reported well.

September.

President J. Golden Kimball commenced a tour of the conferences.

The price of all tracts and cards published at Chattanooga was reduced.

The Elders laboring in Charleston, W. Va., also Richmond, Va., report much kinder treatment and consideration in these cities than is generally received in many similar places.

Near Dundee in South Alabama, a number of ruffians surrounded a house where several of the Elders were being entertained and fired a number of volleys from shotguns, pistols and rifles, into the house. No one was injured. Elders Maiben and Beecher were similarly fired upon by "bushwhackers" but escaped unhurt.

December.

Elders E. A. Griffin and Geo. M. Smith, laboring in Concord, Cabarrao County, N. C., were staying with a young man who was very friendly. About 9 o'clock a mob of twenty-five men came and ordered the Elders to leave the town at once. After some controversy on the subject, the Elders were allowed the privilege of remaining at the hotel until the next day.

The young man was told, if he allowed the Elders to remain at his home he would be discharged from the factory where he was working, and turned out of the house he was renting.

A school house near Pocatalego, Kanawha County, W. Va., was burned because "Mormons" had used it.

Magnolia, Tenn.

Editor Southern Star.

If you will give me space in your paper for a few lines I desire to say a few words in regard to what I have learned about the "Mormons" and their doctrine.

It was in the month of December, 1886, when two Mormon Elders called at our house to inform us that they would preach at the school house the following Sunday. I went to hear them. and to my surprise I heard the Gospel of Christ taught for the first time in my life. It cut me to the heart like a two-edged sword. I was determined to follow the teachings of the Scriptures and investigate their doctrines. I soon became a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and I am thankful to my Father in heaven that I have been permitted to live and partake of the Gospel of my blessed Savior. I have a testimony for myself, that the Gospel which is taught by the Latter-day Saints is the same as taught by the Savior and His Apostles, and that Joseph Smith was a true Prophet of God, and if we will live up to and obey the teachings of that Gospel it will lead us into the Kingdom of God, while those who do not obey will come under condemnation. I now pray that the blessings of God may forever rest down upon the Church, from the greatest unto the least and last ordained.

I remain your sister in the Gospel,

Mrs. Louisa F. Beechum.

I have often been asked why it was that I "joined the Mormons?"

My answer to such inquiries was that I learned from the Elders the truths as they really were in the Bible; that their teachings harmonized in every respect with that divine Book, and that the Faith that comes by hearing would be planted in every soul if they would obey the Gospel as they taught it.

I noticed how these Elders endured the persecution heaped upon them, and how that they had charity to all mankind. I also learned that "the world" loves its own and if you was separated from the world you would be persecuted. This was their lot and all who were even friendly disposed had a measure of the wrath of the unjust poured upon them. From reading the Bible I knew this was the unfortunate position of the early Christians and that all who lived Godly in Christ Jesus should suffer persecution.

No other people that I had ever known were so maligned and abused, and, by investigation I learned the reason. I seen how other denominations were loved by the world and tolerated and were allowed all the privileges of American citizens, and this particular church was denied them all. Then my investigations showed to me the reason, and by further investigation, I was convinced that the Elders were preaching the restored Gospel of Jesus Christ.

With every respect, Your brother.

THE DARK AGES.

BY ELDER A. ARROWSMITH.

THE THIRD CENTURY—The Christians continued after the pollutions of the Pagans, and the dazzling worship of the latter was gradually weaning the Christian from his lowly, modest worship, and they were fast amalgamating and becoming one, and it was getting hard to tell the Christian from the Pagan in their devotions and religious rites.

The fearful persecutions under the Emperor Decius Trajan caused almost an extermination of the true Christian.

He ordered all who would not worship and pay respecet to the Pagan Gods to be put to death by torture, without exception. Those who escaped death had to apostatize and offer incense to idols (and that was worse than death to the true Christian), or seek refuge from under the dominion of the tyrant. Many apostatized and complied with his wicked demands, as they were driven to desperate straits.

The Bishops in many places assumed a princely authority, with splendid ensigns of temporal majesty. They had thrones surrounded with ministers, and they stood exalted above their equals, disdaining their disciples.

What a contrast to the meek and humble Nazarene, who walked, with no place to lay His head, throughout Judea; and whom they pretended to follow. He washed His disciples' feet, and administered unto them as a servant; while their sumptuous apparel dazzled the eyes and minds of the multitude, into an ignorant veneration for their arrogated authority.

The Bishop of Carthage, Cyprian, was a great character during the early part of this century; he favored celibacy, and the monastic life, and introduced the mode of baptism, so much in vogue, and practiced by modern Christians, viz., sprinkling; also infant baptism.

Exorcists were employed at this time to cast out evil spirits, preparatory to baptism, and after the ordinance was performed the victim to this superstitious rite returned home, adorned with crowns and arrayed in white garments, in token of victory and purity.

It was at this time that the first account of pouring, in place of immersion, occurred. An important heretic named Novation, realizing that salvation was vested in Christianity, also that he would be brought to judgment for his many misdeeds, desired his sins remitted by baptism. The death bed repentant sinner was unable to comply with this ordinance by being immersed (as other converts of Christianity were initiated into the door of the church, through baptism by immersion), therefore a special encyclical was issued by the Bishop to meet his case, and water was poured upon him in bed. Thus a dangerous innovation was introduced, which became almost general in the thirteenth century (that is, sprinkling the rule, and immersion the exception).

The introduction of baptizing infants appeared at this time, as it was not known, or thought of, before Irenaeus, the Bishop of Lyons (a prominent leader in the church), and don't appear to have been practiced until the indorsing by Cyprian and his councils, in the early part of this the third century, when it was required that children at eight days old be baptized; taken, apparently, from the ancient custom of Israel in their rites on circumcision.

Israel were strict observers of that law given through Abraham; which law, with all the laws of Moses, were done away in Christ; as the pure Gospel laws superseded the carnal laws. So did the rites of baptism for the remission of sin supersede the sacrifice of blood as a sin offering. And as a child is pure and blameless before God, it consequently is not a fit subject for baptism, "for of such is the kingdom of heaven." The Bible fails to record one instance of a child being baptized. Therefore this innovation as introduced so boldly in this century, marked a terrible step in the downfall of pure Christianity.

Mosheim declares that in this century nunneries and monasteries grew, where men and women tried to live lives of chastity and virtue; many practicing great austerity and devoutness; while others of the clergy got so fanatical on this mode of living that they actually tried to live lives of purity and preserve their chastity by sleeping with nuns, who had made the same vows of celibacy as themselves; which brought much corruptness in the church.

These several innovations came from Paganism, as the temples of Diana will show; these temples abounded with vestal virgins; who were nothing more nor less than the Pagan nun; many of whom prostituted their bodies for money, and thus enriched their temples and cities, where the Pagan God of lust was worshipped, under the names of Venus and Diana. Many of these temples supported hundreds of prostitutes, who degraded mankind to the level of beasts, who at this time took delight in bestiality.

Eternal life did not abide within the church, as they had departed from the Faith, as taught by the great Captain Jesus (who said it was life eternal to know the true and living God). Therefore many ideas and grave contentions arose as to the nature of the Godhead. Many Bishops discussed and offered preposterous arguments in favor of the old Platonic theory, with its Pleroma and Aeons, Demiurge and Logos; realizing the good and evil in all things (as any man with a conscience does to this day). This theory recognized evil in all matter, as everything material is carnal, and it led some to lives of wickedness, men who ignored the body, as it was not considered subject to the soul, or spirit, and not to be resurrected. It was this religion that reconciled good and evil, making both acts of grace before God, allowing a man to commit crimes too horrible to mention, as a means of debasing the body, and purifying the soul; also alowing a man to macerate the body by fasts, and thus purify himself, by strict austerity, that closer communion could be had with spiritual influences.

The extremes were used in their religious rites, one class worshipped in gorgeous temples, displaying great magnificence, and splendor, the ceremonies accompanied by priestly munificence, robes, incense, miters and crosiers. While the other extreme took their departure into the wilderness, away from the haunts of men, where they lived on herbs, in poverty and solitude, contemplating the grandeur of spiritual existence in celibacy and single blessedness.

This system was called Gnosticism, and its inroads in Christianity can be seen to this day. The gorgeous displays of modern Christendom, with its priestly robes and splendor, incense, elevated host, martyr worship, relic worship, image worship, and other superstitious rites, speaks glaringly of ancient Paganism; its face is prominent in all the grand steeples erected to the Apostles, St. Paul and St. Peter, etc.

And in the practices of the many who will whip and macerate the body, that they may get absolution from sin today, also in the actions of the Fakir in the far east, who will stoically sit and stand in unnatural positions for years, and sacrifice their lives to their God, Juggernaut, to get eternal bliss. These actions today are but a dulpicate of what occurred in the third century. The Devil ever did lead men devoid of the Spirit of God into all kinds of enormities.

Pardon the digression, but I wished to explain the nature of those who affiliated with and corrupted the primitive church, and introduced a being, whom they thought had all the perfections and attributes of a God, but who was without "body, parts and passions," an entirely different being than the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, who was after the form of man, "as man was made in His image."

The discussions carried on by the great philosophers of this century, Sabellius, Arius and Athanasius, terminated in the adoption of the Athanasius creed, which is accepted authority on the nature of the Godhead in Christendom today; as He is considered as an aerial, mystical being, whose center is everywhere and circumference nowhere; so large that He fills the universe, and so small that He can dwell in man's heart; who sits upon a throne that is topless, and is described as a tyrant, who can derive pleasure in thrusting nine-tenths of the human family into a hell, without a bottom, where these children of this tyrannical God ever burn and never consume.

This is the kind of being that came from these contentions at this period of time; and that has been so universally worshipped from that time on to the present; and it is this being, that has never given any light, inspiration, or revelation to the multitudes who have worshipped Him. Not having a body, parts or passions, the human family have been worshipping a nonentity. the result has been they have never heard from Him, and the heavens have been as brass to the many petitions offered. No wonder that infidels can defy and mock such a God, who can neither love nor hate them, not having any passions.

The God of the Bible made man in His image, and He had a body of parts, that could walk, and converse with man, with every sense that man possesses, and our Elder Brother Jesus Christ was described as being the express image and brightness of God's (His Father's) glory. At least, this was the kind of God that Israel worshipped.

But during the Dark Ages Paganism introduced into Christianity the Gnostic theory, which was mystical in the extreme, and incomprehensible to the finite nature.

In the next century the great council of Nice met, and fully decided on the nature of their God; which is the Athanasius creed.

The pure Gospel of Jesus, as taught by Him in Galilee, had become unpopular and that meek and lowly spirit was no longer manifest, but a gorgeous and an attractive ceremony was adopted, under the name of Christianity, which had barely a form of Godliness, and entirely devoid of that power and inspiration which comes from God, and which was so much manifest in the days of the Apostles.

The mystery of iniquity which had commenced in Paul's day was fully developing into that man of sin, represented as "the Son of perdition," which should oppose, and exalt himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that He as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing Himself that He is God." (II Thess. 2.)

Some Awful Deaths.

What is the most awful shape in which death may come to mortal man? Not by fire, nor by water, nor by gunshot. These are mere pleasures to some of the deaths by which you may die.

The most agonizing of all is caused by an insect half the size of a pea—a small black spider. It lives in Peru and South Australia, but a few specimens have reached Europe and America in shiploads of timber. Not long ago a dock laborer was unlucky enough to come upon one in the Victoria docks while unloading a bark. The tiny death dealer dropped upon the back of his hand and dug its fangs into his flesh. The bite itself was nothing, but as soon as the poison began to work the man fainted with pain. Soon afterward he came to and lived three days before the end came.

This spider's venom scorches up the blood vessels and spreads through all the tissues, causing the most fearful agony a human being can have to bear. The worst of it is that the victim lives at least two days, enduring unthinkable anguish the whole time. This spider is luckily not common. It is known as the "specky," and when a man who knows what the bite means is bitten he generally blows out his brains.

Another fearful death is caused by eating a grain called "bhat." This sometimes gets mixed with rice, which it resembles. The plant grows in the east, and a few grains of it will drive one into a state of mania. The victim becomes drowsy at first and afterward hilarious, then he goes stark, staring mad and tears himself literally to pieces with his fingers, biting mouthfuls out of his limbs. It is bad enough to see such a case, but as for experiencing it—

The grain is only found in remote parts of the east, but both white men and natives are killed by it occasionally in the east, for the plant grows in with the rice crops and can scarcely be told apart. but that the dried grain is of a reddish color.

Of course falling into a vat of boiling metal, as unfortunate workmen sometimes do, sounds bad enough, but it is mercifully quick. There is a South American vine called the "knotter," which is far worse. It twines around any living thing that comes within reach, twisting its long tentacles about a man as a devilfish might. These tentacles sear and burn into the flesh like white hot wires, and the victim is dragged into the heart of the foliage and his juices slowly drained, as a spider sucks the blood of a fly.

All say that the pain is worse than they could have believed it possible for a man to feel. The "knotter" is well known to scientists, and is, in fact, a sort of huge flytrap plant. Those who have strong instincts of cruelty, coupled with curiosity, sometimes force a dog into the grip of the "knotter" to watch the effects, which are too horrible to describe in detail.

Again, there is nothing very much worse than hydrophobia, when genuine. The patient often lives for days in the acute stage and in his last hours is simply tied up in knots and bent backward and forward like a bow. It is a very rare disease with human beings, for most people bitten by rabid dogs, a small number at most, escape it. In extreme cases the patient actually snarls and bays like any hound, and, next to experiencing it, the worst thing is to watch a case. It is as distressing a spectacle as any man could witness.

There is a snake called the "lancer," which lives in South America, and is very ready with its fangs. It is a small, brown, insignificant beast, but its bite induces a sort of imaginary swelling all over the victim's body. He feels as if every inch of him were being strained to breaking point, and the agony which results is too awful for words. Generally, however, the excess of pain drives the bitten man mad before very long, and in four hours he dies—a senseless imbecile.

Little Civilities.

If, as the old saying has it, civility costs nothing, it certainly gains much, both in the way of liking and of kindness; therefore it seems a great pity that so many people dispense with it in small matters of daily life. There are no doubt very few people who are actually and actively rude and uncivil, but there are, on the other hand, many who are, if we may use the term, passively impolite. They do not—that is, commit a downright rudeness, but they omit a vast number of little civilities.

If it is manners that "maketh man," it is most certainly woman who both makes and mars men's manners, for there is no man, however rough and uncouth in manner, who is not influenced and to some degree softened by contact with a courteous and gracious-mannered woman.—Detroit Free Press.

THE BETTER TIME.

Could young days last for all our time,
And change and chance be clever,
Could what we have keep pure and prime,
Nor fade our fortunes ever;
Could joys that once like summer smiled
Still every burden lighten,
And lovely scenes, that once beguiled,
Along our way yet brighten;
Could budding hopes in beauty bloom,
Ere comes the time of dotage,
Could every stalk, with tassled plume,
But have an ample fruitage;
Could all the seasons bring us good
And only good be given,
It well might then be understood,
That here on earth is Heaven.

But this we know can never be,
The fact needs only stating,
For even blinded eyes can see
The need we have of waiting;
The happy birds in early spring,
Back from the south come flying,
But soon again are on the wing,
And summer time is dying;
A little while, with softened skies,
The earth grows warm and mellow,
And then the beauty fades and dies
And flowers and fields are yellow;
A little while and we are blessed,
And every joy has greeting.
But soon, with grief and care oppressed,
We find that all is fleeting.

And so the seasons onward run,
And here is much of sorrow,
Our hopes must wait "the world to come,"
And blossom there tomorrow;
Tomorrow, that glad day and wide
With bliss and blessing crowded,
And peace and joy on every side,
Shall never be be-clouded;
There all our hopes, on lofty wing,
Shall rise from death's dark portal,
Exulting with delight to sing
The glorious song immortal;
No blighting frosts shall chill that day,
Nor climes nor changes sever,
The friends that there, enrapt, shall stay,
Forever and forever.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

"When coercion is introduced into any sacred work, at that moment it loses its sacredness and is no longer the work of God."—James Freeman Clarke.

The Salt Lake Tribune says:

"Ben Rich tells the people in Tennessee that he stumped the state of Utah against Roberts. Perhaps that will give the people of Tennessee a new idea of how, possibly, Roberts was elected."

That's very pretty, but during the campaign Ben Rich was talking about Roberts was defeated and Hon. C. E. Allen elected. Now will the Salt Lake Tribune please go off and hangs itself?

CHRISTMAS TIMES.

Once more we approach the day that brings both happiness and commiseration. Happy indeed will be the proud grandparents who will welcome the two or three generations 'round their hearth to spend this day merry making. And happier yet will be the scene where those ruddy faces, curly heads and beaming countenances will surround the board that for a year has been spared the special duty of bearing such a burden of good things. The happiest and most delightful scene of all is where the tots meet and dance in childish glee around the gay and brilliant Christmas tree, where grandpa and grandma delight in telling how they spent Christmas when they were children. Everyone is enthused with the spirit of conviviality.

Yonder we notice one vacant chair in this pleased assembly. Who is absent? Where is the absent one? What will his surroundings be? are all questions this one sad place seems to ask, on this day above all others.

They will meet, but they will miss him, There will be no vacant chair.

Many are the causes for this vacant chair. One only we wish to mention—"The Soldier of the Cross, who, during this season of festivity, as at all other times, continues with unyielding effort to bring "Peace on earth, good will to men."

Never was pie, nor cake, nor pudding made as sweet as the manna that God provides, and we ask will all these delicacies exceed in sweetness the morsel of corn bread and bit of bacon that many an humble Elder who has left father, mother, wife, yes, all, for to engage in the Master's cause, will of necessity eat this day with thankfulness. The light of the Spirit of God that the followers of the Lamb constantly have will far outshine the most dazzling features of any Christmas feast. The consciousness of duty performed is a balm that only "those who are called to labor" can enjoy fully. Were those at home half so happy it would indeed be a merry Christmas.

The God of us all is preparing a feast, and those who are now deprived of this pleasant association will be present. No vacant chairs will be seen there, and what a blissful reunion where an hundred fold will be given to all who have labored, and here they will feast with Christ the Lord.

Our prayers go out to our King, our Deliverere, our All, that a "Daddy Brown,' an "Aunt Jane," a Marley or a "Myriel" will visit every home, be it ever so humble, and there leave some tiny token to make all happy.

To the Elders of the Mission who have so faithfully and honorably done their duty during the past year, we, from the bottom of our hearts, wish you a merry Christmas, and pray God that your pleasure may be unbounded.

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD.

The following is copied from a religious paper:

Please explain I. Cor. xv.:29.

What we see in that verse is this: The wages of sin is death. Man, being a sinner, is doomed to death. Christ took our sins and died for us. When we believe on Him, we show our faith in His death, burial, and resurrection by baptism. We are "baptized into His death," "buried with Him by baptism into death." (Rom. vi.:3-4.) We are to reckon ourselves "to be dead indeed unto sin." Our hope is in Christ and His resurrection. So they are baptized unto this death in the hope of the resurrection in Christ.

The verse here referred to is as follows: "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?"

We are not greatly surprised at this explanation of the scripture, when those who try to explain it have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof; but from people who claim Jesus as their Savior, their pattern and friend, we are disappointed.

No man can understand the things of God unless they have the Spirit of God. (I. Cor. ii.:11 and 14.) Then if we would know concerning this why not take the testimony of those holy men who spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost?

We will notice for a few moments the explanation given above. The thought there conveyed is, that, man being doomed to death by reason of sin, is baptized to show his faith in the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus Christ. "So they are baptized unto this death in the hope of the resurrection of Christ." Now, is it not a fact that we are baptized for a remission of sins and that the old man of sin is not resurrected? If he were, would the baptism be effectual? Would we be clean and have a new heart and a new spirit? This verse asks what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?

Here it gives us to understand that the object for which they were baptized was to rise, else the baptism would be of no effect.

Baptism is necessary as suggested here to show our faith in the ordinance and to put on Christ. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, says Paul.

Dare we gainsay the words of Christ and say a man can enter into Heaven without being born again? We answer an emphatic No! One other quotation should suffice on this (I. Peter iii.:21), the like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us.

Now, if no man can enter into Heaven without being born again and baptism was the ordinance instituted by Jesus Christ for us to follow, to enter therein, what will become of the millions who have never been baptized?

Oh, you will say you are trying to make us think that a person living can be baptized for one who is dead, and that it will be effective, and you are right. God is not the hideous nothing that many say He is, but is long-suffering. not willing that any should perish, but that ALL should come to repentance. If only the sons of perdition, or the sin against the Holy Ghost will keep us out of the kingdom of God (and all sin will be forgiven save the sinning against the Holy Ghost, and sin is what separates us from God.)

Then if this is the only thing that will keep us out and we cannot enter unless we are born of the water and the Spirit, how are the millions who never heard Christ's name going to enter? We answer that this passage referred to explains this.

I know many will raise their hands in holy horror at such a thought, but if they will but think of God's love we think they can see that He will provide some way. We suppose that many people were righteously indignant when they were taught that Christ was going to do a vicarious work whereby all could be saved and could have their sins taken away, even those who were dead.

According to Peter (I. Peter iii.:18 and iv.:6), Christ went and preached to the disobedient spirits that "they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the Spirit." And there they will have the chance to either accept or reject the Gospel. For every man must hear the Gospel. The world knows nothing of this glorious principle and when they read "why are ye baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all?" they can give no reasonable explanation. Why? Because they try to make some big mystery out of the Gospel. Not believing that God can reveal His will to man in these days. All these beautiful principles that were in the primitive Church are lost to them, and they try to appease their spiritual appetites by reading of the sumptuous Gospel banquet that the Saints once enjoyed.

God is no respector of persons we are told, and He was so merciful that His only begotten Son went and preached to the spirits of the same people to whom the prophet Noah preached the Gospel for 120 years. The "Thief on the cross" was also there no doubt and listened to and had a chance to embrace the Gospel. O! if so-called Christianity would only be reasonable.

Tantalizing Talmage.

On the Sunday previous to the meeting of Congress, a number of sermons and speeches were delivered in the churches at Washington, D. C., among which was a discourse by Rev. DeWitt Talmage, which elicited some pungent comments from Congressman Bailey. These were published in part, being sent in regular press dispatches to the papers of the country. The Washington Times, however, gave them in full, with some comments. The article is worthy of reproduction, and we therefore here append it in full, as it appeared in the Times of Dec. 9th.

It has often been remarked, by observers of human affairs, that one thing usually leads to another, and this truth has received a fresh illustration within the last few days. In view of the recent agitation over the Roberts case, the ever-ready and always remarkable Dr. Talmage saw fit to preach a sermon on the subject; this sermon inspired sundry reflections in the mind of a gentleman who read it and analyzed it by the ordinary processes of logic; and these reflections are embodied in a letter to a local newspaper, over the signature of G. M. Bailey. Mr. Bailey reasons, by a series of steps which are as obvious as the multiplication table, that, supposing Dr. Talmage's position to be sound, that reverend gentleman is confounded with a most distressing problem. He says:

"1. Polygamy is an abhorrent thing, and Roberts should be hung.

"2. Dr. Talmage's sermon published last Monday was the most eloquent arraignment of polygamy the country has ever seen.

"3. Dr. Talmage has charmed the people in years gone by with the thought that the good will meet their loved ones on the other shore.

"4. Hence in the next world, the elect will know the bliss of family reunions.

"5. This is a blessed thought for the pure in heart who travel through this vale of tears.

"6. If this is true, the programme on earth is necessarily different from that in heaven.

"7. Roberts is said to have three wives, two too many for earth, at one time.

"8. Dr. Talmage will cross the divide having lived in consecutive manner with four earthly wives.

"9. This is lawful, and it is civilization on earth.

"10. But there must be reunions in heaven.

"11. Dr. Talmage may have the same trouble in the next world that Roberts has in this."

What the next step in this chain of deduction may be it is a little difficult to say. If Dr. Talmage can be brought to reflect seriously on the question presented for his solution, it may give him a broader human sympathy with Mr. Roberts, or it may drive him insane. There seems to be nothing that he can do in the matter, from a practical point of view. He cannot unmarry himself, nor can he refuse support to earthly wives who are dead. It is barely possible that he may admit having made a slight mistake in his calculations, but that, in the light of his past career, is a little more unlikely than the other two things.

If there is one subject on which Dr. Talmage has always been especially fluent, even more so than on his travels in the Holy Land, it is the conditions which will obtain in heaven. He could not have known more about it if he had been a special correspondent of a yellow journal, commissioned to write a "feature story" about the New Jerusalem. He has described the climate, topography, politics, social customs, language, amusements and architecture of heaven so exhaustively that one could almost find one's way about in the light from his minute descriptions. He has described the way in which the city is laid out, how the Saints are given homes according to their occupations—some in Apostle Square, some in Missionary street, some in Martyr's Row; and how the heavenly musicians, sitting at long and well-laden tables, pause now and then in their feasting to wipe their mouths and give a melodious blast on a sublimated harp, to express their utter content and joy. This may seem irreverent to the devout reader, but it is what Dr. Talmage says. He has apparently pictured heaven as a glorified realization of the kind of city in which he would like to live on earth, with the people sorted out according to their different degrees of piety, and all the gilding real gold, and good things to eat scattered about promiscuously.

It seems a little strange that in all this information there is no description of Dr. Talmage's own home, where he will sit, surrounded by those who have shared his lot on earth, and present exactly the same tableau now presented by Mr. Roberts. Following out this argument to its conclusion, we find that other inhabitants of the heavenely city will be found signing bulky petitions to have Dr. Talmage consigned to outer darkness. And that would be sad, but interesting.—Deseret News.

Middle Tennessee Conference.

The Middle Tennessee Conference met Dec. 9 and 10 at Nashville. There was present from the office President Ben E. Rich, his wife, L. R. Anderson and J. W. Carruth.

Saturday was spent in priesthood meeting, where every Elder had the privilege of expressing himself. The inspiring expressions were much enjoyed by those assembled during the three meetings held.

Sunday the 10th, Presidents Rich and Allred and Elders Stewart, Forsyth, Budge and Parkinson addressed those assembled at the morning service.

At the afternoon session President L. R. Anderson and Elder J. W. Carruth addressed the assembly. They invited all to investigate thoroughly the doctrine taught by the Latter Day Saints as it was a very important message.

President Ben E. Rich discussed briefly the personality of God. He showed what manner of being the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob was, in contradiction to the mystified nothingness of the something which many people now teach to be God.

Evening Session.

President Ben E. Rich was the speaker. His text being Gal. I :8. In a plain, simple, yet forcible manner, he demonstrated how very different was the Gospel taught by those commissioned by Christ, when He (Christ) labored in the ministry, and what men now preach and label Gospel. Also the fallacy of the doctrine of "One big Heaven" and "One big Hell," quoting freely from the Bible to substantiate what he had said.

Monday the Elders met and were assigned to various fields of labor. With a hearty handshake and a "God bless you," the Elders left the city two by two, determined to do all in their power for the advancement of truth.

Signs Following the Believers.

To the Southern Star.

Being a constant reader of the Star and much strengthened and much comforted by the testimonies there recorded, I thought I should be happy, if allowed space, to bear my testimony.

I am thoroughly impressed with the divinity of the Gospel as taught by the Latter-day Saints, and find it to agree in every respecet with the teachings of the Apostles of old.

I can truthfully testify that I have been raised from a bed of sickness to health by the laying on of the hands of the Elders, and this to me is one testimony that Joseph Smith was a Prophet, for, as recorded in the doctrine and coveenants, he told the servants of the Lord, who went forth in the name of the Lord, that such could be accomplished. All or most every denomination that I have heard of deney the signs following the believers now as anciently, Joseph Smith said they should follow the believer, and I am a witness that he spoke the truth. Therefore, he, in this respect, as in many others, told what could be accomplished in the name of the Lord, and this is evidence to me that he must have enejoyed heavenly communication. I am thankful that the Elders came to our home to bear the glad message of great joy, and although it brings persecution upon me for being a Saint, yet I can endure it cheerfully, as I know that God will bless me if I am faithful to the end.

Sincerely your sister in the cause of truth, Carrie McKnight.

Ackerman, Miss.

IMPORTANCE OF GENERAL CONFERENCES.

The Sphere and Regulation of Temporal Affairs—Need For Efficient Elders in the Missionary Field.

[DELIVERED BY ELDER MATTHIAS F. COWLEY, AT SALT LAKE CITY, OCT. 6, 1899.]

My brethren and sisters, I am gratified for the privilege of being with you at this conference, and especially for the opportunity of being instructed by my brethren. I recognize the fact that I am always in need of instruction and admonition. I believe that this is the case with all the Latter-day Saints. That we may be fed with the bread of life, particularly with that portion of it which is adapted to the immediate wants of the Saints, is the object of this general conference. The Church is sixty-nine and a half years of age today; and while the congregation does not entirely fill this tabernacle, it is very large compared with the membership of the Church on the 6th day of April, 1830. Soon after the organization of the Church, we are informed, by the Doctrine and Covenants, conferences were inaugurated and it was enjoined by revelation that the various branches of the Church should send representative men to the conference, that they might, if called upon, represent the condition of the work of the Lord in their respective branches, and also that they might partake of the spirit which actuated the Prophet of the Lord and his associates.

The importance of these conferences should be impressed upon the Latter-day Saints throughout the Stakes of Zion; and I believe that the spirit of them is extended to the various nations of the earth. I know that when I have been abroad preaching the Gospel, and a conference has occurred during my absence, I have felt the spirit of the occasion. Though I have been absent in body, I have been present in spirit. I have rejoiced in occasions of this character, though thousands of miles away from them.

When Brother Rudger Clawson read from the scriptures this morning, I was reminded of a statement made in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, which I will read. It is in Section 59:

"Behold, blessed, saith the Lord, are they who have come up unto this land with an eye single to my glory, according to my commandments."

This was revealed to the Prophet Joseph at the time the Saints were assembled in Jackson county, Missouri, that land having been designated by the Lord as the great central gathering place of the Saints of God in this dispensation; and the expression in this paragraph: "Blessed, saith the Lord, are they that have come up unto this land with an eye single to my glory," is very indicative. The importance of it is demonstrated in subsequent history of the efforts of the Saints of God to establish Zion in Jackson county; for in the inception of this work the Lord communicated to the Prophet Joseph Smith all the keys and authority and every essential for the complete establishment and accomplishment of the work of God in the last days, and this included the principle of union. Brother Woodruff has been speaking to us this morning relative to the necessity of our having material interest in the work of God. I believe, indeed, I know, that if we confined our worship to the mere singing of hymns and the delivering of religious sermons, the Saints of God would die temporally; and if it were all temporal, they would die spiritually. That which is esteemed temporal and which is deprecated in the estimation of the religious world is sanctioned in the Gospel of Jesus Christ from the fact that all things are spiritual with God. We read in the revelations of God, to the Prophet Joseph, this saying of the Lord:

"Wherefore, verily I say unto you, that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which is temporal."

In the establishment of this work the Lord designed to communicate to the Latter-day Saints those principles which should control and govern them in all the temporal transactions of life. Every Latter-day Saint who has the spirit of the Gospel can understand the necessity of this. I maintain that it is an impossibility for men to be engaged for six days in the week in the business transactions of life and to be controlled by the principles which obtain in the world, and enjoy the spirit of the Gospel upon the Sabbath day and to worship Almighty God acceptably. The trouble with us is to a certain extent, we are Latter-day Saints religiously, but Gentiles financially. We are not controlled in the business affairs of life by that spirit of the Gospel which blesses and sanctifies all temporal transactions and makes them spiritual in the sight of God. In my travels among the people I have felt that the Sermon on the Mount, delivered by the Messiah, was the choicest sermon that ever fell from the lips of any earthly being. It is found in the 5th, 6th and 7th chapters of Matthew and also in the third book of Nephi. The injunctions He there gave are practical, essential, and adapted to the wants of the people of God, in every dispensation and in every part of the earth. The Lord revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith the principles upon which the Zion of God could be established and perpetuated. He made known unto him that there should be a common interest in the things of God: that every talent should be blessed and sanctified to the establishment of the work of God upon the earth; that no matter what might be the peculiar gifts bestowed upon the individual, they should all be used in the accomplishment of the purposes of God. As a people we are diversely gifted.

I remember reading a revelation in this Book of Doctrine and Covenants, wherein the Lord says that He would not make the Prophet Joseph mighty in temporal things, because his work was in another direction. He was entrusted with the keys and the revelations of God, many of which had been kept hid from the foundation of the world, and He laid the foundation of this work and gave revelations which would enable his successors and the people of God for many years to build upon it. The Lord revealed to him what we call the United Order, by which all the time and all the talents of all the Saints of God should be employed for the general benefit of the cause. I remember reading in this book of a branch of the Church that had come up from Colesville, in the state of New York, and they had made a solemn covenant with the Lord that they would consecrate their property to His cause, but they broke that covenant, and it was a very serious sin in the sight of God. They had broken a solemn pledge, and they were made to realize the fulfillment of the saying that God would not be mocked, although it may not have been so serious and swift a judgment as that pronounced upon Ananias and Sapphira in the days of the Apostles. The effort was made then to establish the United Order. Jesus sought to establish the work of God more fully than the house of Judah would accept it. You remember that He said to them:

"Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not.

"38. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate.

"39. For I say unto you, ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

The day is coming when they will be willing to accept the principle of gathering which they then rejected. But, as I have said, the effort was made to establish the principles of the United Order subsequent to the ascension of Jesus. They, had, it is said, all things in common. On one occasion Ananias came to the Apostle Peter ostensibly to consecrate all that he had received under the blessings of the Almighty. The scriptures inform us that he and his wife had sold a possession and he brought a certain part of it and laid it at the feet of the Apostle Peter, who was the Presiding Apostle of the Church and who had received the keys not only to baptize for the remission of sins, to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost and to administer the sacrament of the Lord's supper, but also to administer in those things that pertain to the celestial kingdom here upon this earth. Now Peter, under the influence of the Holy Ghost, discerned that the man was not honest in his offering, and he said unto him:

"Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land?

"While it remained, was it not thine own? And after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? Why hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart? Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God.

"And Ananias, hearing these words, fell down, and gave up the Ghost."

Shortly afterwards his wife came in, and she also lied in relation to this business. These are principles, my brethren and sisters, that are attended by the power of God, if they are observed. But they are attended by the judgments of God if they are violated. These principles were carried out in the city of Enoch until the city was translated. They were carried out for a few generations upon this continent by the Nephites, and the Book of Mormon tells us that not one of that generation was lost, because they were equal before the Lord and labored for the same end. The Lord revealed to the Prophet Joseph the same principles. The Saints of God failed to carry them out because of selfishness. The Lord revealed that Zion never could be redeemed, only by the law of consecration. Because the people were not prepared to receive and obey it, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery besought the Lord to know what He required at their hands as a tithing. As a result of that condition, He gave the law of tithing wherein is required a tenth of all the interest of the people annually. The Lord specified what the tithing should be used for, and that it should be disbursed under the direction of the presidency of the Church.

Now, my brethren and sisters, the people who came to Zion without having an eye single to the glory of God lost their right to an inheritance. When they came up with sinister motives, and their hearts were not devoted to the work of God, they suffered the disapproval of the Almighty. The same statement will apply to us in these valleys of the mountains. We have been led here by the inspiration of the Almighty. The same inspiration has controlled and guided the presidency of the Church in locating these Stakes of Zion, these cities and towns, throughout the length and breadth of this inter-mountain country.

God has blessed us with abundance. The great majority of the Latter-day Saints own their own homes. If you were to ask them how many of them owned their own homes in their native lands, possibly four-fifths of them would say that they did not. If you were to ask them how many of them conducted a profitable business of their own before they came here, four-fifths would perhaps have to give the same answer. Yet in the prosperity that has attended us in the establishment of our cities, towns, and in the building up of the Stakes of Zion in this country, we have not manifested the gratitude to God for His choice blessings which we ought to have done. We have an abundance of blessings, especially of a temporal character, and we ought to be willing to comply with the requirements that are made of us, and honestly and completely pay our tithing and our offerings.

I rejoice in this work. I rejoice in bearing testimony to the truth of the Gospel and that we have a Prophet of God standing at our head today—President Lorenzo Snow—who enjoys the inspiration of the Holy Spirit and whose counsel to the Latter-day Saints comes from the Lord. May God help us to carry it out, and to exemplify in our lives the principles which we testify God has restored to the earth in these last days. I wish to urge the Latter-day Saints to teach their sons and their daughters the principles of the everlasting Gospel. There is a great necessity today, in the various missions abroad, for efficient men to preach the Gospel and to represent the people of God. Many of our young men that go from our Stakes of Zion to preach the Gospel have not studied it. They have not taken advantage of the opportunities afforded them in the Mutual Improvement Association, in the Sunday school and in other organizations. I am sorry to say that some of them have been grossly neglected by their parents. I have found Elders who did not believe in some of the principles of the Gospel. They said they had not been taught to them and they had been neglected by their parents. They had been engaged in herding sheep and other avocations, and had not taken pains to prepare themselves. The result was there was one principle of the Gospel, at least, that they did not understand, and consequently they did not teach or defend it. To my mind this was a very sorrowful condition, and it cast reflection upon the parents and teachers of those Elders. I do not suppose that there is a mission upon the earth that would not desire to have more Elders than they now have, especially Elders who are better qualified and more thoroughly indoctrinated in the principles of the Gospel and more thoroughly imbued with the inspiration of the Holy Ghost before they leave their homes and shoulder the responsibility of carrying the message of eternal life to the nations of the earth. I know this is the case in the United States. I have recently had the privilege of visiting with President Kelch the conferences of the Northern States Mission, and I found the Elders laboring earnestly to spread the Gospel among the people of that region.

Brethren and sisters, let us heed the instructions that are given to us at this conference and endeavor to apply them to our lives, that we may profit thereby. God help us to do so, is my prayer in the name of Jesus. Amen.

Edison's Religion.

This is what Thomas Edison said in reply to a question addressed him by an Agnostic:

"Why, after years of watching the processes of nature, I can no more doubt the existence of an Intelligence that is running things than I do of the existence of myself. Take, for example, the substance water that forms the crystal known as ice. Now, there are hundreds of combinations that form crystals, and every one of them save that of ice sinks in water. Ice, I say, doesn't. And it is rather lucky for us mortals, for if it had done so we would all be dead. Why? Simply because if ice sank to the bottom of rivers, lakes and oceans as fast as it froze, those places would be frozen up, and there would be no water left. That is only one example out of thousands that to me prove beyond the possibility of a doubt that some vast Intelligence is governing this and other planets."

THE PRESENT CRISIS.

BY ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

You will remember how he was taken before Felix and Festus for the Gospel's sake. No guilt or crime, in him having been found, he next appears before King Agrippa. Just take a retrospective view of this poor lone disciple of the Master. See him as he stands in the presence of the monarch, bound in chains, surrounded by the aristocrats and nobles of the land, while the Jews, his accusers, are there also, to invent calumy, to pervert the truth, and hiss in vile derision. Does he fear the face of man? Does his knees shake or heart quake for fear? No! but he is bold in his defence of the Gospel, fearless in his declaration of the truth! He has received his knowledge by revelation; he proclaims his testimony with power and simplicity!

In the course of his vindication, after having explained his manner of life from his youth, and the power and glory of God manifest at his conversion, he goes on to say: "Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come." Acts 26:22. Now we see from his own words, and understand from his own lips, why he was persecuted and for an account of his sufferings it would be well to read the eleventh chapter of his second epistle to the Corinthians. One might say "It hardly looks reasonable that these people who seemed to fairly idolize Moses and the prophets should persecute and strive to slay those who declared unto them 'None other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come.'" But no matter how unreasonable it may appear to the finite mind, it is nevertheless true, and history, secular and Biblical, deals in surprises and paradoxes quite as startling as this!

Now, in our search, we have found that our Lord and the apostles stood upon a scriptural basis, that is, they quoted as authority the written word their hearers were in possession of, and which they professed to place implicit confidence in. We have also discovered that for so doing, they were persecuted, put to death by the edge of the sword, nailed to the cross, and tortured in various ways, (and here it would be well to state that for the most part they were afflicted by professed religionists, who went oft to worship, offered long prayers, and appeared before men with long sanctimonious countenances), by those who should have been their friends. Having gone thus far, in order to fulfill our contract, it now remains for us to turn our attention unto the existing conditions of the present crisis and see if they are analogous with those of the past.

Today, the Elders of Israel go forth armed with God's holy word—the Bible, preaching the "gospel of the kingdom." They take up the Book (Holy Bible) the people claim to believe in—the book their ministers preach from—the book their righteous parents admonish them in infancy and early life to study, and from its sacred pages, by the assistance of God's holy spirit, they prove the doctrines they promulgate to be devine. As a result, they are persecuted and opposed. Some of them have been mobbed, whipped, beaten and stoned; some have suffered incarceration, while others again, like the faithful ones of old, have sealed their testimonies with their blood.

With these truths before us, cannot the oft repeated axiom, "History repeats itself," be declared with increased emphasis? Have we not before us sufficient proof upon which we may register a verdict that the events of this present crisis are but analogous with the scenes of early Christianity?

Is it not remarkable that the experiences of these Latter Day Saints should so exactly coincide with the trials of the saints of God in former ages? Is it not remarkable that these "Mormon Elders" preach from the very book which Christians kiss and call divine? Is it not a remarkable fact, that the persecutions heaped upon these "Mormons," comes from a professed religious source? "Yes," we say, "these are remarkable truths." They are unimpeachable facts! Paul declared that he had taught "none other things, than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come;" we also declare that we have taught none others things than those which the prophets and Moses, and the apostles and Christ did say should come. We say to mankind, "If ye believe the Bible, how can ye reject our teachings? for we bring no new religion to you, conjectured in the mind of man; but the 'Old Time Religion' revealed from God above of which your Bibles return again and again in confirmation of its divinity." But still the conflict goes on between truth and error, between virtue and vice. Need I remind you of the fact that "the offence of the cross" has not ceased, and cannot cease while wickedness is rampant? Many sneers and much reviling is the common heritage of the faithful in this university of experience.

In conclusion, let me say, we, like the prophets of old, standing upon a scriptural basis, declare to all the world that we do know of the divinity of this work. Our testimonies are no less forcible than theirs, whose words confirm our teachings as divine. To those whose hearts are not cankered with prejudice, we would say, "Treat these things as matters worth investigation," and to those who will not listen, but who, hoodwinked and blinded by tradition and error, fly in the face of these incontrovertible proofs, and madly rush on to the consummation of devilish plots, we would raise a warning voice, and say: "Beware ye sons of men who by mob violence, and brute force, are engaging your diabolical schemes to crush the innocent and trample the Gospel under your feet! Your reward awaits you and justice will claim his own. Beware ye professed "Truth Reflectors" whose satanic enormity incites the ignorant to arms against the righteous! Ye have One who judgeth you, even the Lord Jesus, in whom ye trust, but by your actions Him deny!

I part from you with the words of the poet ringing in my ears:

"God's ways seem dark, but soon or late,
They touch the shining hills of day;
The evil cannot brook delay,
The good can well afford to wait."

Chattanooga Conference.

The Elders of the Chattanooga Conference arrived in the city of Chattanooga on the evening of the 15th of December—the evening before the appointed time of convention. All were feeling well—anxious and pleased to see each other. They were pleased that God had honored them with the privilege of being a pruner in this part of His vineyard—and well content and satisfied with their lot.

President Rich was not expected from Ohio until the morning of the 16th, the appointed time of meeting, but since all the Elders were present, the Presidency of the Conference thought it advisable and profitable to hold a meeting of general counsel together. Accordingly at 3:30 p.m., the 16th inst., they met together for that purpose at the Mission headquarters under the direction of President Christo Hyldahl. After the devotional exercises of singing and prayer the meeting was turned over into the hands of the Elders to advise, counsel, or question as they desired.

They expressed their love and charity for the southern people and felt not to complain of the occasional ill-treatment to which they are subject, because they realize that it comes only from the ignorant, bigoted and credulous classes who, by a little excitement, are persuaded to commit any crime that is vicious and ignoble.

The Spirit of God was manifest, the meeting one of joy and benefit.

At 10 o'clock on the morning of the 17th all met in the Congregational Hall at 708 Market street. There were not as many people present as would be expected in a town of this size, but the meeting was a success notwithstanding.

"Redeemer of Israel" was the opening hymn. The invocation was given by Elder Jeddie Stokes, followed by the song "O ye mountains high."

Elders David H. Elton, Jeddie Stokes and George E. Maycock were in turn called on to address the people. They spoke in brief upon matters pertaining to the salvation of man, after which President Ben E. Rich spoke at some length, dealing upon the great failure of so-called Christianity to accomplish a unity of the faith. "This deplorable division of the Christian world," said he, is a sufficient and just excuse for Infidelity, for if Jesus Christ be true, and He was and is, then His house would continue to be one of peace and unison, 'for God is not the author of confusion but of peace.'" He closed by inviting all the ministers to come out to the afternoon services and hear of Mormonism from a Mormon standpoint. The services closed by the Elders singing "We thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet."

Benediction was offered by Elder Albert Arrowsmith.

At 2 p.m. the meeting was resumed. Many more citizens were present at this assembly than at the forenoon services, and among them were not a few of the most prominent people of the city.

"Our God we raise to Thee," was the opening hymn. Prayer was offered by Elder E. M. Lee. A selected quartette from among the Elders then rendered most commendably the hymn, "Do what is right."

President L. R. Anderson was the first speaker. He dwelt upon the fundamental principles of the Gospel as taught by Christ and His disciples, and showed the beautiful harmony that exists between them and the doctrines of the Latter-Day Saints.

He was followed by President Ben E. Rich. After reading the words of John ii, John ix, he began a discussion of the principles taught by Jesus.

He said: "In the age in which we live there are multitudes of different faiths, all pretending to be the Gospel of Christ, and all drawing their doctrines from the same record, wherein the Apostle Paul declares that there is 'one Lord, one faith and one baptism,' and that the curses of God are pronounced upon any one, even an angel from heaven, who teaches any other Gospel or principles than He had preached. Christ said in His last prayer, 'Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on Me through these words that they all may be one; as Thou, Father, are in Me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me.'

"It should be the duty of every one who professes to believe in Christ to ascertain what that one faith and that one baptism is."

He referred to many passages of Scripture wherein God had placed officers—Apostles, prophets, pastors and teachers—in His church, for the perfection of the Saints, for the work of the ministry and for the edifying of the body of Christ; that we be not tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine, like a ship upon the sea without a rudder. He called attention to the first Gospel sermon preached after Christ's crucifixion; showing that faith, repentance, baptism and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, were and are still the principles of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He related Peters' business to Samaria, in substantiation of the declaration that the Holy Ghost came by the laying on of hands. "These," said he, "are the doctrines of Christ, and whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrines of Christ hath not God. It has been the sin of every generation to worship the dead prophets and kill the living ones. The Devil don't care how many dead prophets the children of men believe in, because their tongues are silent, and under this condition he can easily blind and mislead the multitude; it is his great work to keep the people from believing in the living oracles of God, and so long as he can do this his work is successful."

He closed his remarks by extending to the ministers of the city a cordial invitation to visit the Mission Home and converse freely with the young men of the Mormon church who are here engaged in missionary work.

He said: "Let us not hate one another, but let us reason together; if you have a truth that we have not, we will gladly accept it, and if we have an error that you can point out, we will gladly abandon it and be thankful for your aid in showing it to us. Many of our Elders have suffered from the hand of violence and many times these mobs have been headed by those professing to be ministers of the Gospel; a palm leaf of peace looks better than the shotgun in the hands of one who claims to be a minister of Christ, so come and let us reason together."

He closed his remarks by quoting from an old familiar hymn:

"Freedom and reason make us men;
Take these away, what are we then?
Mere animals and just as well
The beasts may think of heaven and hell."

The quartette rendered another selection, after which President Hyldahl offered the benediction.

At the Elders' meeting after the public services the following business was transacted:

President Hyldahl, on account of added responsibilities, was honorably released from presiding over the Conference, and Elder David H. Elton appointed and sustained in that position. He postponed the selection of Counselors until a later date. Elder Riley Dixon was released to return home. The Conference concluded by some timely and beneficial instructions from President Rich, after which the Elders were assigned to their various fields of labor.

HUMANITY.

From all the war-worn world they cry for light;
I hear their voices through the silent night;
The people, they who suffer, they who bear,
The weight of the world's labor and its care.
They cry aloud for justice and for peace;
They beg their portion of the world's increase.
They're tired of unremunerative toil;
Tired of producing for another's spoil;
Tired of the load of armies and of forts;
Tired of the kings, the conquerors, the courts;
Tired of the hypocrites who masquerade
As Christ's disciples, but whose wage is paid
From Mammon's coffers, and who hold their place
With the oppressors of the human race;
Tired of the husks of creeds and dogmas old;
Tired of the hard, unfeeling rule of gold;
Tired of the politician and his lies;
Tired of the knaves who walk in Virtue's guise;
Tired of the want, the hunger, the distress;
Tired of the whole world's hate and selfishness;
And yearning in a blind, uncertain way
For something nobler, for a better day,
To see a juster era come to birth,
To see, O Lord, Thy kingdom upon earth.
My heart goes out to them; my hopes and dreams
Are all for their uplifting, but it seems
My efforts are so feeble and so few,
What can I do, O Lord, what can I do?

The fields are white to harvest; all the world
Is waiting till Thy banner is unfurled;
Is ready, at the signal, to march on
To the New Times, that now begins to dawn:
Is listening until some voice of power
In clarion accents shall proclaim the hour;
And at that magic and inspiring call
Men shall arise and to .s headlong fall
Shall hurl the outward Old, the reign of caste,
The evils we inherit from the past;
And from the heights of Progress they have won
Shall hail the light of Freedom's rising sun.
This is my dream—to make that vision true,
What can I do, O Lord, what can I do?

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Elder Heber S. Olson was born Sept. 9, 1872, in Fairview, Utah. His parents embraced the Gospel in the old world, and true to the spirit of gathering they emigrated to Utah in the early sixties, settling in Sanpete county.

His youthful days were spent on a farm, and while young many responsibilities were placed upon him, while his father was preaching the gospel of peace in a distant land. Until eighteen years old his education was very limited, but at this period he resolved to go to school. In order to carry out this resolution he at once set to work, laboring on the mountains in the summer. By so doing he was able to attend school during the winter months, three years of which he attended the Brigham Young Academy. At the age of twenty he took charge of his father's saw mill, which he successfully managed for several years. In the year 1896 he commenced teaching school. In November of the same year he was elected justice of the peace for Fairview precinct, being re-elected in 1898.

As teacher in school he developed a great love for children, and they in turn loved him. He laid special stress on the moral side of education.

Early in life he manifested a strong religious feeling, and as he grew older various ecclesiastical duties were placed upon him, all of which were ably discharged, and reflected credit to his character. He was for years a worker in the M. I. Association, two years of which he was first counsellor. In the latter part of March, 1899, a letter from "Box B" informed him that his service was wanted as a Missionary in the Southern states. On the 15th of May he left his home, to face a cold world, and assist in spreading the true and everlasting Gospel. On reaching Chattanooga he was assigned to labor in the Virginia Conference. On the 6th of November, 1899, at an annual conference held in Richmond he was called to succeed Joseph F. Pulley as President of said Conference.

January, 1894—

At the opening of this year all Elders are well and hard at work. Very little opposition is manifested at this time, and a spirit of toleration seems to prevail. In North Carolina several of the newspapers published hateful articles that had a tendency to inflame the prejudiced minds of some of the people. One paper, the Webster Weekly, invited some "Mormon" to defend his faith, "if he could," and stated that he would publish any such communication. Elder George A. Smith eagerly accepted the invitation and wrote an able exegesis of the "Mormon" doctrine, but the editor refused, after reading the article, to publish it, saying that he did not intend to advocate "Mormonism" through the columns of his paper.

Elder Hyrum Carter, of the South Carolina Conference, was severely burned by the application of carbolic acid, wrongly applied, by him.

During this month fifteen Elders arrived from the west and were appointed to labor in the various Conferences of the Mission.

February—

Elders Nebeker and Jones were forced to leave Wilkinson county, Mississippi. A mob waited on them, led by John Cobb, supervisor, and informed them to that effect.

Feb. 5.

Elders Berry and Curtis were stopping at the home of Brother Sloan in South Carolina. Brother Sloan's sons were not very friendly disposed toward the Elders and determined to "run them off." They were not living with the father, but at Columbia. Mounting their horses they rode to the father's house, at which place the Elders were stopping, armed with an ugly looking gun and a blackwhip. As they neared the house the father took his shotgun and met the sons at the gate. What was said the Elders never learned, but the sons left and the Elders were not molested.

Word was received that Elder Walter Barton was very ill at McComb City, Miss. George A. Smith went immediately to his bedside and did everything possible for Elder Barton's comfort and convenience.

On the 16th he rallied and seemed so much improved that Brother Smith returned to the office. The apparent improvement was but the beginning of the end, for he passed peacefully away on the 18th, although everything possible had been done for him.

Elders Phelps, Haycock, Holt, Doxey and Lechtenburg were constantly attending Brother Barton, and deserve special mention for their faithful efforts in behalf of their prostrate brother.

The family of John Cram also deserve much praise for their kindness to the Elders during this sad experience, who deprived themselves of every comfort, also going to their neighbors' to sleep, that the Elders might remain with Elder Barton.

To Extirpate the Elders.

The statement in a dispatch from Charleston, S. C., that the state legislature has been asked for a law against the Saints of South Carolina, is worthy of more than a passing note. In the petition to the lawmakers, the hands of jealous ministers are plainly visible. A law is asked for—so says the dispatch—to "extirpate the Elders," and unless such an act is provided, threats of lynchings are made.

The fact proves conclusively the absolute truth of the view that it is enmity against the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which is the moving force in the latest crusade, as it has been before. With great flourish and loud trumpet blasts, the instigators of it have proclaimed to the country that they were absolutely innocent of the abominable charge that they were engaged in religious persecution. They have maintained that they were only fighting "lawlessness." In this South Carolina specimen of the crusade, the true nature of it is revealed, however. It is bigotry. There are no "polygamists," and no "polygamy" there except, perhaps, outside the Church, and yet the gentle ministers of Christ are clamoring for a law to "extirpate" the Elders.

How this can be done, remains to be seen. If legislatures are as bigoted as ministers, a way will be found whereby to satisfy the hunger and thirst for persecution that has been kindled in this country. And when the Church has been "extirpated," the next logical step will be to establish some one of the sectarian churches; to give it state support, special privileges and rights. With the spirit of the constitution thus violated, there will be no end to religious trouble.

Is that what American ministers are laboring for? Do they want mediaeval Europe revived in this country, with its "heresies," and trials, and drivings, burnings at the stake, and massacres? Where is the shore towards which the monster-stirred currents are drifting? Are there breakers ahead? And will they be seen in time to be avoided? It behooves the American citizen to keep a good lookout. —News.

THE DARK AGES.

BY ELDER A. ARROWSMITH.

THE FOURTH CENTURY.—In the last century we found the Christians in a very bad spiritual condition, and the great opposition they had met by Rome had almost obliterated every vestige of goodness from them. In this century we also find the same power exercising temporal sway over all the known world, and impregnating the countries they subdued with their Paganistic ideas.

The Emperor Diocletian was a weak and ignorant fanatic, who felt incapable of conducting his vast empire alone, and he selected Herculeus, Constantinus, Chlorus and Galerius as his aids and counsellors, and finally divided the empire among them, which caused jealousy, intestine trouble, war and bloodshed.

Under the advice of Galerius (who was a worthy son-in-law of the tyrant), Diocletian caused a terrible persecution to rage against the Christians, wherein many were put to death; but the worst thing that happened was the almost total destruction of the Christian records and books, which to this time had multiplied greatly, and had been preserved with great reverence and devotion by the poor deluded fanatics, who posed as Christians and claimed to follow the precepts therein written, but who had become so illiterate and worldly that the Scriptures were not comprehended in the spirit in which they were written, as "the things of God are only understood by the Spirit of God," and the understanding Spirit of God could scarcely be found at this time.

But the time had come when Christianity and Paganism amalgamated and united as one.

Constantinus died in England, and left a worthy (?) son to succeed him, by name Constantine, who was a great success as a warrior and statesman. Subduing his brother Emperors, he united the great Roman empire, and was instrumental in bringing peace and popularity to the former persecuted sect called Christian, by adopting their religion.

It can be said of him, as of Napoleon, that "he had a heart of savagery, and a head equipped with all the science and resources of the most advanced nations, at the time of his appearing. He had the ambition of Lucifer, the power of Belzebub and the wisdom of Satan; his rapacity was unappeasable by the spoilation of a world; his lust of empire surpassed the wildest dreams of a Tamerlane or Alexander."

Constantine's ambition appeared to aspire to nothing less than ruling civilly and ecclesiastically over this vast empire; and he accomplished all he set his heart upon. He ruled over the Bishops and their counsels, and made Christianity exceedingly popular, by offering beautiful gowns and giving money prizes to all who would turn Christian and adopt his faith, which had been the faith of his mother.

He was a murderer, having choked his wife to death while in her bath; being unmerciful to all who aspired to his throne, he slew his son-in-law. Many other malicious and wicked acts were committed by this man, who has been honored and worshipped as a Saint these many years. He claims to have accepted Christianity through reading a superscription in the heavens over the sign of the cross, upon the eve of going into battle, which read, as translated from the Latin, "By this conqueror." However, he was not duly baptized until just before his death, when, desiring immunity from his many crimes, he was absolved from sin through immersion, Eusebius, Bishop of Nicomedia. Eusebius, as a church historian, singularly fails to record the vision of Constantine in his ecclesiastical history, but recounts it in the life of that man written many years after the occurrence. He played a prominent part in moulding the character of Constantine, and was a remarkable writer in this century.

Mosheim, the reliable historian, speaking of this period, says: "It is a notable fact that in this century the Greeks and Romans differed very little in their external appearance from the Christians. They had both a most pompous and splendid ritual, gorgeous robes, mitres, tiaras, wax tapers, croisers, processions, lustrations and images. Gold and silver vases were to be seen equally in heathen temples and Christian churches; and the ministers were applauded by the clapping of hands when delivering their discourses.

Athanasius was a renowned character at this time, especially in his defence against Arius at the counsel of Nice in Bithynia, in his great argument on the Godhead, which has been so universally accepted to this day. His ideas, as copied from the Church of England prayer book, reads as follows—The Creed of St. Athanasius:

Whosoever will be saved; before all things it is necessary that he hold the Catholic faith. Which faith, except every one do keep whole and undefiled; without doubt, he shall perish everlastingly.

And the Catholic faith is this: That we worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in unity; neither confounding the Persons nor dividing the substance. For there is one Person of the Father, another of the Son; and another of the Holy Ghost.

But the Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is all one; the glory equal, the majesty co-eternal.

Such as the Father is, such is the Son; and such is the Holy Ghost.

The Father uncreate, the Son uncreate: and the Holy Ghost uncreate.

The Father incomprehensible, the Son incomprehensible; and the Holy Ghost incomprehensible.

The Father eternal, the Son eternal; and the Holy Ghost eternal.

And yet there are not three eternals; but one eternal.

As also there are not three incomprehensibles, nor three uncreated; but one uncreated and one incomprehensible.

So likewise the Father is Almighty, the Son Almighty; and the Holy Ghost Almighty.

And yet there are not three Almighties; but one Almighty.

So the Father is God, the Son is God; and the Holy Ghost is God.

And yet there are not three Gods; but one God.

So likewise the Father is Lord, the Son is Lord; and the Holy Ghost is Lord.

And yet not three Lords; but one Lord, and so forth.

Thus Athanasius, the Bishop, supported by Constantine, manufactured a God without body, parts and passions, which has been universally adored these hundreds of years. His creed was considered by all, even Athanasius himself, as incomprehensible, and not to be reasoned upon, while others considered it the work of a madman. Yet the enlightened nineteenth century will accept it beyond question, embodying all these points. The first article of religion of the Church of England, the dominant church of that country, reads as follows: "There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body, parts, or passions; of infinite power, wisdom and goodness; the Maker and Preserver of all things, both visible and invisible, and in unity of this Godhead there be three Persons, of one substance, power and eternity; the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost."

The Roman Catholics quote Him as an "incorporeal" being, and the Christian world generally carry God in their heart, without any general conception of Him or His attributes; and don't seem to realize that the resurrected Savior had a body of flesh, bone and sinew, the same body eating fish and honey on the banks of Gallilee. The same material substance ascending to heaven in the sight of many of His disciples from Bethany; later He was seen by Stephen sitting on the right hand of His Father in heaven; and from what the angels told His disciples, "He will come again in like manner," and as Paul says, "take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of His Son."

How very material the God of Israel did appear, as embodied in the person of Jesus Christ. And how very atheistic the ideas of the Godhead has become, by following the creeds of the uninspired men of the Dark Ages, who have been worshipping a nonenity for hundreds of years.

At the close of this century the Virgin Mary commenced to be idolized, and was worshipped as a Saint, and by many considered a Goddess; sacrifice being made to her with as much pomp as the Ephesian idolaters would offer their adoration to Diana, their Goddess.

Diana, as worshipped by the Pagans, had been introduced into Ephesus by a man who declared that whilst working in the field, she, the Goddess, descended from her Father, the God Jupiter, and desired the world's adoration. This man forthwith made out of ebony an idol, in the form of a beautiful woman; related his story to the Ephesians; and, strange to say, he was believed by these credulous people, who built a beautiful temple to Diana, and worshipped her with much display. The first and second temples in Ephesus were built of wood, and were consumed by fire. However, the Goddess was rescued from the flames each time. The third temple was built of stone, massive and beautiful, and was one of the seven wonders of the world; the pillars surrounding it were each the gift of a prince, and for workmanship and grandeur it was unexcelled. It took two hundred years to build this structure; and in Paul's day many gold and silversmiths were employed to keep in repair the multitude of silver and gold statues that surrounded and adorned this magnificent building (built to an ebony idol). No wonder that Demetrius, the silversmith, rebelled at Paul's denunciation of this idolatrous people, and cried, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." His craft was in danger.

As I before state, the Christians, in their adoration of Mary, were but imitating the Pagans who worshipped Diana, and they were introducing an innovation that was not known in the days of Jesus; having degenerated and adopted the Pagan customs almost intact, they worshipped with great pomp and show, which was extremely fascinating to the plebian. Thus the century closed, with the Christians in a magnificent condition, from a worldly standpoint, as they had become popular and were much sought after.

HISTORY OF THE TOBACCO PLANT.

"There is an herb," says an old writer, "which is sowed apart by itself and is called by the inhabitants vppowoc. In the West Indies it hath divers names, according to the several places and countries where it groweth and is used The Spanish call it tobacco. The leaves thereof being dried and brought to powder, they used to take the fume of smoke thereof by sucking through the pipes, made of clay, into the stomachs and head. This vppowoc is of so precious estimation among them that they think their gods are marvelously delighted therewith, wherefore sometimes they make hallowed fire and cast some of the powder therein for a sacrifice."

The habit of smoking was first noticed by the crew of Columbus in November, 1492, who thought the Indians were perfuming themselves. The smoke was inhaled through the nostrils by means of a hollow forked cane about a span long. The primitive pipe was like a Y in shape: the two forked ends were placed in the nostrils and the other end over a heap of the smoldering powder, and then the smoke was drawn up into the nose. This pipe was called "tobago." On his homeward voyage Columbus discovered an island, Y-shaped like the Indian pipe, and he therefore called it by the same name—Tobago. From this island the herb was called "tobacco." Thus the word tobacco is not the name of the herb—which was called cohiba, petun and yoli in different parts of America—but of the first pipe.

Though well known to Europeans visiting America, tobacco was not brought into Europe until late in the sixteenth century. A Spanish doctor, Hernandez, is said to have brought the first tobacco into Europe. Pean Nicot—who has left his name behind in "nicotine"—sent some tobacco in 1559 to the grand prieur of France. He described it as a herb of peculiar pleasant taste, good medicinally in fevers and other diseases. It was, in fact, as a medicine that tobacco was introduced into Europe, and for many years it remained in pharmacopeia. For a long time the fragrant weed had no settled name. It was called by a score of different titles, the most common being nicotina. Ultimately the world returned to tobacco, the name by which Hernandez called it on introducing it into Europe, and, with trifling variations, this is the name by which it is universally known.

Tradition asserts that Sir Walter Raleigh was the first to smoke tobacco in England. This honor is also claimed for several other gentlemen, but it is a point impossible to be settled. Capts. Price and Koet were, however, the first to smoke tobacco publicly in London. They used "segars," or twisted leaves, and many people assembled to see them smoke or drink tobacco, as it was called at that time. Pipes were not invented in those days. At first they were made of silver, and the poorer classes, unable to buy these, used a walnut shell for the bowl of the pipe, and a straw to suck up the smoke. This primitive pipe was passed from man to man round the table in taverns, where smoking was chiefly indulged in. Smoking leaped into popular favor, and the habit was practiced everywhere, churches not excepted.

Urban VIII. issued a bill excommunicating all who used tobacco in churches, and Elizabeth thought proper to add to this penalty of excommunication against those who filled their nostrils with snuff during divine service, and ordered the beadles to confiscate their snuff boxes. Later another pope excommunicated all who took "snuff or tobacco in St. Peter's" at Rome. Later the American puritans followed the example of the European Catholics and forbade smoking in church, as the service was greatly disturbed by the clinking of flints and steel to light the pipes, and the clouds of smoke in church."

Hence a law was made enacting that "any person or persons that shall be found smoking of tobacco on the Lord's day, going to or from the meetings, within two miles of the meeting house, shall pay 12 pence for every such default." Under this law five men were fined "for smoking of tobacco at the end of Yarmouth, Mass., meeting house on the Lord's day." Like everything else, tobacco by its popularity awakened opposition. The anti-tobacconists were headed by James I, who characterized the custom as "loathsome to the eye, harmful to the brain, dangerous to the lungs, and in the black fume thereof nearest resembling the horrible Stygian smoke of the pit that is bottomless." This royal condemnation of smoking called forth similar effusions to the British Solomon's "counterblaste," and for many years the tobacconists—as the smokers, not the sellers, of tobacco were then called—came in for severe criticism.

All classes indulged in tobacco, nor were the ladies squeamish in partaking of the fragrant weed. In those days smoking was a more expensive habit than it is today. Tobacco cost 75 cents an ounce, equal, according to present values, to $4.50. It was sold for its weight in silver, and our ancestors were accustomed to reserve their heaviest shillings for buying tobacco.

Much as the Englishman likes his glass of beer, he prizes his pipe much more, and one can easily imagine the storm which would arise if the house of commons took steps to stop smoking. Yet, in 1621, Sir William Stroud moved in the house of commons that he would "have tobacco banished wholly out of the realm, and not brought in and used among us." Sir Guy Palmes said that if tobacco be not banished, it will overthrow 100,000 men in England, for now it was so common he had seen men take it at the plow.

Among the Puritans tobacco was at first abhorred, but it gradually gained ground. Quakers smoked, and their friends were requested "to partake of tobacco privately and in their own houses, in order not to encourage smoking and make the use thereof excessive." In the American colonies tobacco took the form of coin. For harboring a Quaker or bringing one from England a fine of 5,000 pounds of tobacco was inflicted.

A cargo of young women was brought from England for wives for the settlers, and these were disposed of at 120 pounds of tobacco a head. The use of tobacco today is universal. The Americans consume nine pounds a head, while the Englishmen smoke only eighteen pounds a head per annum. To the habit of smoking is attributed by some the irritable ill-health and nervousness of today.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

We will appreciate very much, the kindness, if Elders recently appointed to preside over Conference will forward to us at once their photograph and autobiography.—Editor.

Elder Christo Hyidahl, who has had charge of the books of the office, and until recently was President of the Chattanooga Conference, has been selected as counsellor to President Rich, to fill the vacancy caused by the release of President George A. Lyman. President Hyldahl has been very closely connected with the business of the Mission ever since he came to Chattanooga, having occupied several positions in the office and being well acquainted with all the affairs of the work in the south. He is a safe counselor and the selection was a good one.

MODERN PHARISEES.

The Christian Observer of December 20, in an article entitled Judas Iscariot, among other things says:

The Pharisees watched Jesus closely to find fault with him. The real character of Judas could not have been altogether unknown or unsuspected by them; and the chief priests "were glad" when he came to them. The Pharisees and chief priests doubtless thought that they made a good point when they whispered that one of the apostles, the treasurer of the band, was a rogue.

Even though this world is "advancing" and becoming "enlightened" all the time, and people are becoming generally better; yet this one class (Pharisees and chief priests) seem to be just about as nasty and low now as in the days of Jesus. At all times we can see men who are said to be good, and who belong to the church, sneaking about, trying to find some fault in those "high in authority," and then when successful enlist the services of all similar people to condemn a whole church, because one, or two, or a dozen, do things that to them is not exactly right. If hell is a "bottomless pit" and it is four billion miles to the first turn; twice as far to the next, and ten times as far to a resting place; and in this resting place are billions and billions of filthy snakes to hiss, and "fire and brimstone" to burn; such would be indeed too good for such curs.

HOW MINISTERS ARE CALLED.

The Chicago evangelist, French Earl Oliver, while holding a revival in one of our western cities said:

"Preachers want revivals for many different reasons. One comes to me and says, 'Brother Oliver, I want a revival.' I ask him why, and he says, 'Well, speaking confidentially, Brother Oliver, if I have a revival it will mean a better attendance at my church and my salary will be increased.' Another preacher comes and tells me that he wants a revival so that he can make a blowhard of a report before the conference, 'and, Brother Oliver,' he whispers, 'I may get a better charge as a result.' * * It is remarkable how a preacher can hear the voice of God in a call to a charge that means $300 or $400 more salary. They hear the voice the more clearly as the salary is larger. They scent the Lord's beckoning hand as a hound scents a fox—when the salary's larger. Preachers are afraid to preach the gospel on Sunday night because they fear that they will lose their crowds."

If he did not receive "a salary" or remuneration in some way, how long would French Earl Oliver preach? We will give the class until 2 o'clock next spring to answer this question. Mr. Oliver has undoubtedly had some experience with "modern divines" and their methods of being "called" to preach, else he could not have "guessed" so accurately how most preachers get their authority.

AFRAID OF WOMEN.

A special corrospondent sent a western paper the following from Washington:

"He's not on the floor, Miss." "Why, how is that? I saw him in his seat, from the gallery, not five minutes ago." The speakers were a young woman who had sent her card in to a member of the House, and the doorkeeper, who took the card in and brought it back to her. As she turned away with vexation stamped on her pretty, if rather too bold face, the doorkeeper remarked to a companion: "Wonder how long it will be before they catch on and stop trying to card members out?" Members are no longer seen in the corridors or in restaurants in conversation with young women, as they have been at every session for lo, these many years; they no longer make eyes openly at the pretty girls in the galleries. In short, the gayest Lothario of them all is now a very monk in his deportment towards women in and around the capitol. The Roberts case is responsible for this seeming reformation; the average member is afraid of the women who are at the capitol daily, looking after the work of the Roberts committee, and determined not to let them catch him in any mischief.

Brigham Roberts bought more toys than any other Congressman.—Chattanooga News.

Guess the Chattanooga News is about right; not because Roberts has more children than any other Congressman, but because he acknowledges all he does have.

Faith and Works One Thing.

"Faith" and "works" are not two separate things, but two phases or aspects of the same thing. Faith is the inner spirit that links a soul with Christ, and thus secures to the soul power to do for God and man. Works are the manifestations of that linking, evidencing to man and to God that the current of power is complete. Faith is the fire, works are the heat which the fire gives out. Fire without heat is dead; it may look as if it were warm, but it is only a show, like colored tinsel in a summer grate. There is such dead fire as this, and such dead faith. Let the show not deceive us.

LITTLE SLIPS IN ENGLISH.

A teacher in a famous eastern college for women has prepared for the benefit of her students the following list of "words, phrases and expressions to be avoided." Set a watch on your lips; and if you are accustomed to making these "slips," try to substitute the correct expression. But don't be content with that alone. Learn why the preferred expression is correct, and this of itself will so fix it in mind that you will soon use it unconsciously:

"Guess' for "suppose" or "think."
"Fix" for "arrange" or "prepare."
"Ride" and "drive" interchangeably.
"Real" as an adverb, in expressions such as "real" good for "really" good.
"Some" or "any" in an adverbial sense; for example: "I have studied some" for somewhat;" "I have not studied any" for "at all."
"Some" ten days for "about" ten days.
Not "as" I know for "that I know."
"Try" an experiment for "make" an experiment.
Singular subjects with contracted plural verb; for example: "She don't skate well" for "she doesn't skate well."
"Expect" for "suspect."
"First rate" as an adverb.
"Right away" for "immediately."
"Pary" for "person."
"Promise" for "assure."
"Posted" for "informed."
"Depot" for "station."
Try "and" for try "to" go.
Try "and" do for try "to" do.
"Funny" for "odd" or "unusual."
"Above" for foregoing;" "more than" for "beyond."
Does it look "good" enough for "well" enough.
'Feel "badly" for feel "bad."
Feel "good" for feel "well."
"Between" seven for "among" seven.
Seldom "or" ever for seldom "if" ever or "seldom or never."
Taste and smell "of" when used transitively.
More than you think "for" for "more than you think."
"These" kind for "this" kind.
"Nicely" in response to an inquiry.
"Healthy" for "wholesome."
Just "as soon" for just "as lief."

Easy To Please.

A prominent San Josean reached the Third street depot of the Southern Pacific depot in an inebriated condition, and asked for "a first-class ticket, please."

"Where do you want to go?" said the ticket clerk, somewhat pointedly.

There was a pause, while the inebriated one muggily reflected, and then he blandly and politely asked:

"What trains have you?"—San Francisco Wave.

OBSEQUIES OF PRESIDENT RICHARDS.

Funeral Services of President Franklin D. Richards, in the Tabernacle, Ogden, Tuesday, December 12, 1899.

The obsequies over the mortal remains of Franklin D. Richards, President of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, who died on Friday, December 9, 1899, shortly after midnight, were held in the Tabernacle at Ogden, December 12. At 1 p.m. the cortege formed at the family residence and a long procession of carriages followed the hearse and mourners to the Tabernacle, which was appropriately decorated for the occasion. The casket was white, the stand was draped in white and white festoons were looped from the ceiling. The front of the stand was adorned with splendid floral offerings, intermingled with ferns and palms.

A full choir was present, and after the family were seated the immense building was quickly filled to overflowing, hundreds being unable to gain admission. There were numerous visitors from Salt Lake City, special rates for the occasion being given by the R. G. W. railway. Many prominent ladies and gentlemen were among them, including several non-"Mormon" friends. A great host crowded into the doorways and gathered outside the entrances. The stand was fully occupied by members of the Priesthood. Of the First Presidency of the Church, President Lorenzo Snow, George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith; of the Twelve Apostles, Brigham Young, F. M. Lyman, John Henry Smith, George Teasdale, Heber J. Grant, John W. Taylor, Anthon H. Lund, Matthias F. Cowley and Rudger Clawson; Patriarch of the Church, John Smith. Of the First Presidency of the Seventies, Seymour B. Young, Geo. Reynolds, Rulon S. Wells and Joseph W. McMurrin; Assistant Church Historians John Jaques and Andrew Jenson; Presidency of the Salt Lake Stake of Zion, Angus M. Cannon, Joseph E. Taylor and Charles W. Penrose; Church Reporter Arthur Winter, also Le Roi C. Snow; a number of local Bishops and Elders. From the Historian's office there were Bishop O. F. Whitney, Elders A. M. Musser, D. F. Collett, Martin Lindsay and Mrs. Willard Weihe; many leading churchmen and citizens were in the congregation. The pall-bearers were eight sons of the departed President, viz.: C. C. Richards, Ogden; George A. Richards, Salt Lake; Albert D. Richards, Salt Lake; Myron J. Richards, Boxelder county; George F. Richards, Tooele county; William P. Richards, Kamas, Utah; Ezra Richards, Farmington, Davis county; Wilford W. Richards, Georgetown, Ida.

Bishop Robert McQuarrie conducted the services.

The choir, with the organ, rendered "O, My Father," the solo by Fred Tout.

Prayer was offered by Apostle F. M. Lyman.

The choir then sang "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

President L. W. Shurtliff.

I am requested by the President to say a few words upon this occasion. I will assure you, my brethren and sisters, it is an occasion when I would be pleased if I could give utterance to a few of the feelings and thoughts that have passed through my mind during the last illness of this noble and worthy Apostle. All Israel, and the world—those who knew him—will miss this great and noble man; and especially will we in this county and in this Stake of Zion, where we have known him so well, and where his fatherly counsel and advice has been heard for the last thirty years or more. We feel that we have lost one of our choicest men, not only in the Church, but also in this county as a citizen. It affords me great pleasure to meet the Saints upon this occasion, but I am so deeply impressed that I feel I will not be able to occupy any time here today in the presence of the dead—this worthy and great Apostle, and in the presence of these Prophets and Apostles who have lived all these years to lead and guide Israel. I feel that all I can say is, God bless these brothers and sisters, and wives and children of this worthy man; and may the Spirit of God be upon our brethren who are here, that we may be instructed and blessed. Amen.

Bishop Robert M'Quarrie.

I am requested to say a few words, and I am thankful for the privilege, although I feel that I cannot say much, and in justice to the congregation and visiting brethren, I should say but very little. I scarcely realize what has happened. I feel that there is something lacking through the departure of this great and good man. I have been acquainted with him for thirty years. I might say much longer than that, but I was intimately acquainted with him for that length of time. We lived in the same ward, and we have been associated together considerably; and the longer we became acquainted with each other the better we loved each other. His moving to Ogden was a blessing to me, and I presume to others. He was a man of fine example, a very refined man, and all his actions full of kindness and love, and overflowing with affection for his brethren and sisters. I have read a little of his history, but that gives a poor idea of what the man really was. I remember when I went on my mission in 1872, I found people inquiring after him in Scotland. One man in particular comes to my mind just now. He was living in the suburbs of Glasgow. He wanted to know if I knew Apostle Franklin D. Richards. I told him I did; we lived in the same ward together, and I ought to be acquainted with him. He told me that he got acquainted with him while he was on his first mission to Scotland, and said he: "Remember me kindly to Apostle Richards when you go home, and tell him that —— was inquiring after him." He said he had never been acquainted with a more gentlemanly man. That is verily true. Apostle Franklin D. Richards was a gentleman in every sense of the word. When I came home I said to Brother Richards that —— had been inquiring after him. He replied: "Well, I cannot remember him; but there is one thing I do remember well, and that is, my heart overflowed with love and kindness to that people." He remembered that all right, but the individual he could not remember. This was the feature of his first mission in Great Britain; his heart was overflowing with loving kindness. The Saints in those early days were but young, and they were very tender, and he was very tender to them. This represents Brother Richards in every particular. I never knew a time but he was full of kindness. No matter how gloomy and downcast I have felt, I always came from associating with him pleasant and cheerful, buoyed up and strengthened. This is as I have found him. I pray God to bless the mourners, who are called upon today to part with this great and good man. The Lord bless you, every one of you, my brethren and sisters, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Elder D. H. Peery.

Brethren and sisters, having been called upon, I stand before you. This is a very trying ordeal for me; but, thank God, I have been considered worthy to stand here and say a few words in behalf of one of the noblest men I have ever known. I have seen Webster, have seen Clay, have seen all the Presidents from Gen. William Harrison down; I have seen a vast number of good men, and I have seen more good men here than any place on earth; but I will say to you, of all the men I have ever known I place Brother Richards at the top—him and Brother Woodruff. They rose above money, above speculation. Their whole heart and soul was with the Gospel. Brother Richards was baptized in 1838. He has preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ for over sixty years. He has now passed through the final ordeal—the only road by which you or I can reach the eternal kingdom of God. I say above all the men I have ever known, save less than half a dozen, his heart was near to God; and of all the men I have ever known he has done more work. Almost to the very last he would go back and forth daily to Salt Lake City. I warned him, and told him it was too much; but his heart was with it. As he would go down, somebody would advise with him, and when he would come back they would come to him to ask questions, until sometimes he was nearly frozen. Why, if he will not get into the celestial kingdom, if he will not pass by the angels and the Gods, and have eternal glory, I do not know who will. This is my opinion. He chose the "better part," as Mary did. When Christ was there, instead of being out cooking and fussing around, Mary wanted to hear him talk. A man that could not say anything in behalf of Brother Franklin D. Richards has not a tongue, has not a spirit. When I went on a mission to Texas in 1875, and when I went to Virginia—in fact, I never went on a mission without asking Brother Richards to bless me, and I felt when he was blessing me that it came from a man of God, and that it would be verified—and it was.

I could stand here and talk of Brother Richards for hours and hours, with all my heart. Now he has passed through the final ordeal. We will hear that warning voice no more. His eyes are closed in death. The bonds that bound him to this earth are loosed, and henceforth and forever he will get the reward, even the highest that God gives to any man, in my opinion. F. D. Richards' name is known all over this world. I heard his name before I ever joined the "Mormon" Church, and I have never heard a man speak to his prejudice. Almost every man, you know, gets criticised, and people are ready to tear him to pieces; but Brother Richards chose the better part. He was not with politics: he was not with speculation, which he felt and knew to be the curse of this earth—speculation on borrowed capital.

I pray God that his children may take after him; that the blood which ran in his veins may be in every one of his children and grandchildren. I say that this county is far ahead of what it would have been if Franklin D. Richards had never lived here. We have been blessed nearly above all the Stakes of Zion, with having such a man in our midst. But we never showed him any favors, scarcely. Is it not strange that the hardness of man's heart is such that he cannot give any praise till the man dies? and then the whole world turns out. I have lived here for thirty years and more, and I never saw such a crowd as this at any of our conferences here. I will say that, in my opinion, no other man could have done it. I believe if these services had been held in Salt Lake the Tabernacle would have been filled to overflowing.

God chose him for a great and mighty purpose, and his works will go down through the ages. His name will go higher and higher, higher and higher; and his children will be blessed because they sprang from such a source. I pray God to bless his wives, his children and his grandchildren, each and every one of them. Where in all Utah will you find children that surpass his? If we would pick out any to go and defend our cause in Washington City, before the supreme court, or before the parliament of England, I say where would we find any better? He has left offspring second to none. May God bless them, and may they grow in peace, knowledge and understanding unto the perfect day, is my prayer. Amen.

A quartette composed of Miss Wensguard, Miss Mary Driver, Edwin F. Tout and Albert Anderson, accompanied on the violin by Moses Christopherson, rendered a selection entitled "The passing of the sweetest soul."

Elder Brigham Young.

This is truly a solemn occasion. Usually I have felt that it was more than I could do to speak on an occasion of this kind, but I am thankful for an opportunity to say a few words today, that my voice may be heard in connection with my brethren in speaking of him who has died. It seemed to me that we needed President Franklin D. Richards; that he was necessary to the wellbeing of his brethren and of the work of Christ; but God knows, and we must yield our own feelings that His purpose may be accomplished. It reminds me much of the funeral of my father; my own feelings are something similar. I have known President Richards all the days that I can remember upon the earth. I have known him to be the man whose character has been described this morning by his brethren. He seemed to me to be a part and portion of the society that I looked upon in connection with my father, as of men who could never die; men who were sent forth in this dispensation to bring the people along, to buoy them up, to counsel, to console, to direct, and in times of trial and danger to stand firm and point the way by which the Latter-day Saints were able to escape all the snares that were laid for them. I have known President Richards as a good man, a great man, a humble man, a father, a brother, and a friend. I have known him intimately all the years that I can remember, and I have never in my heart found fault with that man.

I mourn with his family. I rejoice with the people that he has accomplished this work; but I mourn his loss. The great object of the life that God gave him is accomplished. He has won the fight, he has gained the race, and he is with the brethren that have gone before. God bless his family and comfort their hearts; for I know that they have great reason to be thankful for the leader, the husband, the father, the Apostle, whom He gave unto them to stand at their head in the last dispensation. We have reason to rejoice that we have known him. I look upon him now as being in the presence of my father—with my father and my mother, and loved ones. He has gone to them, and our feet are treading fast in the same direction. Years are coming upon us, and the dearest wish of my heart is that when I get through it can be said of me that I was faithful in all my life, as we can all say of President Franklin D. Richards. He was faithful to the end. The crown is his; the glory is his. No power can rend it from him. He is safe with his Maker, with his Redeemer, and with his friends.

I had the pleasure of being with him on Friday afternoon for several hours. I could not reconcile myself to the thought of giving him up. I felt like clinging to him, praying for him, exercising faith for him; still I was willing to bow to the will of my Maker. "O, Lord, spare him to the Church, his brethren, and to his family," was the prayer in my heart constantly. I talked with him a great deal that afternoon. True, he was helpless. His body could not act. In fact, he was incapable of moving his head much, if any. But the mind was there quite clear, and his eyes looked into my eyes with all the intelligence that I ever saw in Franklin D. Richards. To answer my questions he would press my hand. In speaking with him I saw that the mind, the immortal, the spirit, was as full of light and intelligence as ever I saw it in my life, and I was thankful for this. He knew everything that was going on around him, and every word said he heard and understood, and I rejoiced that he retained his full powers of mind to the last. I left him at 5 o'clock on Friday afternoon to return to Salt Lake City, and he looked at me, and I could read in his eyes, "Oh! how I wish I could talk with you, and speak the feelings of my heart to you before you go away!" When bidding him good-by he pressed my hand and clung to it, and he looked with his eyes exactly as if he were talking. I could see in them that he wanted to say something to me in my taking leave of him.

God has taken him to Himself. We have nothing to regret. We mourn his loss; but I do feel thankful that I have been associated with this man all the days that I have lived upon the earth. I feel thankful to God, because I looked upon him as I looked upon my father, as I looked upon the brethren who have been our leaders all these years, so many of whom have passed away and gone to their rest. Their bodies are resting, but I doubt not their spirits are active. Franklin D. Richards stands before me as a pattern of a Latter-day Saint, and a perfect gentleman. Every Latter-day Saint who appreciates that title and lives up to it is a perfect gentleman or a perfect lady. I congratulate the Latter-day Saints that they have had his association in this state for so many years. He has been a blessing to me and mine, to this people, and to all with whom he associated. I have traveled with him a great deal in this country and in Europe. We have been associated together in missions in Europe, and I found him precisely what you have found him, a man of God, with the interests of the Church of Jesus Christ in his heart. Our Father's will it was the pleasure of Brother Franklin to do, both day and night. Wherever he was he loved his religion, and was in perfect harmony, as far as I ever knew, with the Spirit of the Lord.

Brethren and sisters, God help us. God bless this family, and bring these sons and daughters to the front, where their father stood. Emulate his example, live as he lived, and win a crown similar to his, and what joy there will be when we meet him and the others that have gone before! This takes away the sting of death from me. I mourn the loss of his society, but the feeling of death is not here. No spirit of death is with me, because it is light, it is beautiful, it is glorious to know that he has won this fight. I pray that God will comfort us, that He will buoy us up and strengthen us, that we may be stronger in carrying out our desires to build up Zion; not weakened by his loss, but strengthened by his example. That God may be merciful unto us and give us power to fill up our creation as he has done, is my humble prayer, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President Lorenzo Snow.

Brethren and sisters, I do not intend to occupy but a short time, but I wish to mingle my voice with those of my brethren who have talked here, in reference to President Franklin D. Richards. Perhaps I was as familiarly acquainted with him, or more so than anyone that has spoken this afternoon; but I do not think I ought to take time to relate the various interesting scenes, private and public, that I have experienced with Franklin D. Richards.

Over fifty years ago he and I were ordained Apostles in the Quorum of the Twelve. At that time there were together all the Apostles then living, with President Brigham Young and his two counselors, Brothers Willard Richards and Heber C. Kimball. There were four vacancies to fill. Brother C. C. Rich filled one of those vacancies, I filled another, Brother Erastus Snow filled the third, and Brother Franklin D. Richards filled the fourth, and was the youngest Apostle then. Every Apostle that was present at that time, and President Young and his two counselors, have passed away into the spirit world. Brother Richards and myself were the only ones left of those Apostles and Presidency. Three Apostles, I think, that have been ordained to fill vacancies since then are dead also. Brother Richards, whose remains lie here in this casket, has outlived four Presidents of the Church—President Joseph Smith, President Brigham Young, President John Taylor and President Wilford Woodruff. Therefore, no one ought to complain and feel that injustice in this respect has been done to President Richards, since he has outlived these Presidents of the Church, and most of their counselors, and so many of the Apostles. And certainly this long period of his life has been filled with good works that he has accomplished.

All that has been said in reference to him by my brethren this afternoon has been well said; and all perhaps that really need to be said, anyway, is simply this: Did Franklin D. Richards discharge the obligations that he took upon himself before he left the spirit world? Has he accomplished this since he came into life, according to the best abilities that he had, and according to the light of the Holy Spirit that was given to him from time to time? I doubt not that every person who has been at all acquainted with President Richards can say they believe, most perfectly, that he has accomplished the labors for which he came into this life. He was intimately acquainted for years with President Joseph Smith. He has testified of him as being a servant of God; that he knew by the manifestations of the Holy Spirit that Joseph Smith was a servant of God, sent into the world for the salvation of the honest heart; that he had a divine right to baptize for the remission of sins and lay on hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost, and that he conferred this right upon others. He testified of this from the day the knowledge was revealed to him from the Lord until the day that he passed out of life, so far as he had physical ability to do so. He has accomplished the business for which he came into life, and has gone back covered with eternal and everlasting glory.

That which we most should think of is in reference to ourselves. Here is an example well worthy of our imitation, and we should follow it. All perhaps that we need to say to the large family of President Richards is, that they have a blazing example before them of a good man, a noble man, a grand man, and a man who has accomplished his salvation, exaltation and glory, and for them to follow in his path. I cannot mourn and say that there has been a very great loss sustained; and yet we might say this. I am not surprised at the calling away of President Richards at this time; but had the idea of President Richards passing away been presented to me about the time when he went with us to St. George, some five or six months ago, I should have been surprised, because in looking upon Brother Richards, at that time, and for many years before, my idea was that he was just as likely to live as any member of the Quorum of the Apostles, and more so, I might say, than one or two whom I might mention.

God bless the family of President Richards, and may they be inspired to follow the example of their illustrious husband and father. May the friends of President Richards feel a gratefulness and express it in the interest of this family as they may have an opportunity from time to time—a gratitude for the benefits they may have received from their intimacy with Brother Richards. God bless you, brethren, and sisters. May we all be blessed and walk in obedience to the principles of light and glory, and follow the example of this illustrious man.

Never let it pass from our memory that we are in the world for the accomplishment of certain purposes, having obligated ourselves in the other life to carry out these purposes; and in doing this we have to make sacrifices from time to time, because of the ignorance of our brethren and sisters, the children of God. It is not merely for Latter Day Saints that we are expending our time, but it is for tens of thousands that are scattered among the nations of the earth whom the Lord has prepared to receive the principles that we have received. These people who are worrying us, and who would like to see us persecuted to that extent that we should be driven to live in the caves and rocks of the mountains, as they were in former days, would be our friends today, did they know us as the Lord knows us, and as we know ourselves. They would have to admit that the Latter Day Saints are the best friends they ever had, and that we are sacrificing daily, as it were, in their interest, though they do not know it. I ask the Lord of Israel to bless the Latter Day Saints and that we may be prepared for the events of the near future, with our hearts right before the Lord.

I want to relate one circumstance, however, before I close. I would not tell it if it concerned myself alone. In the days of the "reformation," when President Young was aroused to call upon the people to repent and reform, he talked very strongly as to what ought to be done with some people—that their Priesthood ought to be taken from them, because of their failure to magnify it as they should have done. The brethren who lived in those days will remember how vigorously he spoke in this direction. Well, it touched Brother Franklin's heart, and it touched mine also: and we talked the matter over to ourselves. We concluded we would go to President Young and offer him our Priesthood, if he felt in the name of the Lord that we had not magnified our Priesthood, we would resign it. We went to him, saw him alone, and told him this. I guess there were tears in his eyes when he said, "Brother Lorenzo, Brother Franklin, you have magnified your Priesthood satisfactorily to the Lord. God bless you." The man that lies in that casket did this, and we both honestly felt it. We knew that he was a man of God, that he lived near to God, and that he had the word of God. God bless you. Amen.

President George Q. Cannon.

If I had my choice this afternoon, I believe I would rather sit still and listen to the brethren talk than to attempt to speak myself; but I suppose I should feel condemned if I were to let this opportunity pass without saying something with the rest of the brethren in relation to this sad event.

I have listened with great interest to all that has been said. I can heartily endorse every word. I have entered into the feelings of every speaker, and been much interested in all that has been spoken. I am sure that it is not necessary to indulge in any eulogy, after what has been said in the presence of this congregation, all of whom are so well acquainted with Brother Franklin D. Richards, have known his life, have heard his teachings, have witnessed his walk and conversation, and have been under his influence for so many years. Still it would not be proper and it would not satisfy our feelings if we did not say something concerning his characteristics, his life and labor, and our associations with him.

I think I ought to appreciate Brother Franklin D. Richards more than anyone else. There are many reasons for this. I was his junior in the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. Some years ago I was called upon to stand in the First Presidency. This brought me into relations with the older members of the Quorum of the Twelve that were very peculiar. Now, I cannot recall any incident where Brother Franklin ever showed any feelings but that of great respect to me. I have many times felt humbled in my feelings by the deference that he paid to the office which I held. I have gone before the Lord in thankfulness, because of the kind and brotherly feeling and spirit which Brother Franklin D. Richards always manifested towards me. I need not mention the other brethren now and their conduct, but I can dwell upon his, and it has left an impression upon me that can never be eradicated.

I think Brother Franklin D. Richards was as meek a man as I ever was brought in contact with. He was unassuming, gentle, full of kindness. There was one feature in his character that always filled me with admiration: I never heard Brother Franklin D. Richards indulge in any criticism of his brethren. I never heard him sit down and talk over their faults. I think he was very remarkable in this respect. All the leaders of this people are free from that to a very great extent; but none surpassed Brother Franklin D. Richards. I never heard an unkind word from his lips. Men's names would come up, their characters would be reviewed, and, of course, criticism would be indulged in; but I cannot recall an instance where I ever heard Brother Franklin D. Richards utter an unkind word or express a criticism unfavorable to anyone. I have noticed this a great deal in my association with him, and I think it was a lovely feature in his character. I never saw him out of temper, either. In all the scenes through which we have passed, I do not recall a single instance where Brother Franklin D. Richards displayed temper or lost control of himself in the least degree. He was always even. He was so urbane, so mild, so kind, that no one could find fault with him. If there was any fault in his character, probably it arose from this: for sometimes it becomes a fault in a man; but it was a remarkable feature in his character. He was not naturally an aggressive man, though if his priesthood was called into question, he could assert himself with a great deal of vigor.

Brethren and sisters, it is not well to occupy very much time this afternoon, so many have spoken; but I could not help thinking while I sat here contemplating the scene, of what the Lord has in store for men of this character, and what the promises of the Lord are to all who will be faithful as this, our brother, has been. Is there anything that can be thought of by the human mind that will not be within the reach of this our beloved brother who has gone before? The Lord tells us concerning the Savior that by Him, and through Him, and of Him the worlds were created and the inhabitants thereof begotten sons and daughters unto God. All this glory is His. And we are promised that we shall be heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. Brother Richards will share in all this. He is an heir to all this power and authority. Jesus tells us that He and the Father are one; the Father is in Him and He in the Father; and that we should be in Him and He in us as He is in the Father—giving us an idea of the oneness that He desires His disciples to attain unto, even unto the Godhead, being swallowed up in the power and authority belonging to the Godhead. This our brother will share in all this, as all will who are faithful to the truth. We cannot conceive in our mortal condition, unless God reveals it unto us, the glory that awaits this faithful servant of God. Yet the revelations we have received from the Lord plainly foreshadow the great glory that is in store for those who fight the good fight of faith, who are full of integrity and courage, and whose knees never tremble and, whose hands never shake when it comes to the defense of truth and the advocacy of righteousness. Men of that kind—and they are very numerous among us—will receive great reward; and not the men alone, but the women too, will receive great glory at the hands of our Father and God.

There is everything, therefore, to encourage us to be faithful and to be spotless in our lives. What is the advantage of committing sin? It soils our souls, it defiles us, it brings sorrow and remorse, and gives no real pleasure. Worse than this, it brings a forfeiture of the favor of God and the promises He makes unto us. What a pleasant thought it is to think of a man faithful in the midst of temptation, a man who walks through life undefiled, who maintains his integrity and keeps all his covenants unto the close of his career Will such a man not be received into the presence of God and the Lamb? Will he not associate with the noblest that have ever been born on the earth? He certainly will; and there is open before him a career, a never-ending career, progressing in light, in knowledge, in truth, in power,—in everything, in fact, that makes our Father and God great glorious and adorable. This is promised unto us. The Gospel is given to us, by which we have the power to attain unto all these great blessings. If we do not accept of it and use it righteously, the sorrow will be ours.

I feel to pray the Lord for His choice blessings to rest upon the family of President Franklin D. Richards, upon all his kindred, and also upon all the Latter Day Saints, which I humbly ask in the name of the Lord Jesus. Amen.

President Joseph F. Smith.

I had really hoped that the other brethren would occupy the time allotted to us on this memorable occasion. I feel so inadequate to the task of attempting to speak and to express my feeling, that it would have been a relief to my mind to have been permitted to sit still and listen to others.

To say that the Lord loved President F. D. Richards would be only to express that which you all know. And it would seem unnecessary for me to say that I loved him, and that he was beloved by all his brethren. I do not know a man anywhere who does not love or has not loved President Franklin D. Richards. I do not see how it would be possible for any man who knew him not to love him, and not to feel for him the kindliest and the deepest respect. He has been a comfort and a strength to me all my life. As Brother Brigham Young has said here, he has known him all his days; so have I. I do not know one of the Apostles who has been more familiar to my mind or with whom I have been better acquainted all my life, than Brother Richards. There always seemed to be something about him that drew me towards him, and that drew out my affections for him. I never felt when I was in his presence, or when absent from him, that I would receive any but true brotherly and fatherly consideration from him. I had the utmost confidence in him. I believed in him, and I believe in him still, as a man of God, a man of truth, of virtue and of honor before the Lord. To say that he, or that I, or any other man had not human weaknesses and imperfections, or to say that he or any other man was, or is perfect in judgment, in knowledge, and in the exercise of wisdom, would be to say that which should not perhaps be attributed to mortal beings. But I know of no man of all my acquaintance who so completely won my love and my confidence and respect as my brother whose remains lie before us here today. I always felt when he arose to speak, that he would say something good, and that he would not say anything that would grieve the Spirit of the Lord or give unnecessary offense to any living being. I felt always that he was in perfect accord in his spirit with the Spirit of the Prophet Joseph Smith; and I know no man who, I believe, was a truer man to the Prophet Joseph Smith than was Franklin D. Richards. Every fibre of his soul seemed to be in accord with the divine mission of Joseph Smith. I have listened to his testimony concerning that Prophet of God when it has just simply filled my whole being almost beyond my power to contain. I have rejoiced in hearing his testimony of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

I might mention another trait in his character that has seemed to me to shine out beyond that of almost any other man I ever knew. He exemplified the spirit that was expressed by Job, and he has done it for many, many years,—"Though he slay me, yet will I trust in Him." I know no man on this earth that has manfested that spirit equal to this man. And that example which I have seen in him has helped me to be humble, and to yield in my spirit at times when perhaps I might have been so brittle otherwise, that I should have flown to pieces probably. The thought of the experience and example of Brother Richards, what he has endured, how he has bowed to the rod and submitted to the will of providence, has given me courage, strength and humility, and I have been blessed through him. I thank God for my associations with Brother Franklin D. Richards. With such as he I would love to be associated not only through the remaining few days I have to live upon this earth, but throughout the countless ages of eternity. You may count me one with him. I want to be where he is. I want to be associated with him and with men like him—men who would die for the truth; men who would suffer anything for the truth's sake; men whose testimony is and has been unwavering and unshaken, firm as the rock of ages. No matter what circumstances he was called to pass through in life, his testimony was just the same. As I said before, in the language of Job, they could slay him, yet would he put his trust in the Lord. Whatever difficulties he had to encounter, he was for Zion, for the building up of Zion; he was with his brethren, true, steadfast and faithful. I could not help but notice the remark of one of the brethren that if such as he are not exalted ("saved" was the word used, but I will use the word "exalted") into the presence of Almighty God, to inherit the crown of glory in store for the faithful, who then on earth will ever gain exaltation?

We are not here, of course, to speak altogether of the dead, and yet it is because of the departure of our brother that we are gathered together today. Certainly this is not the place to speak of the weaknesses, imperfections or failings of men. I am proud to know and to be able to say that I have not waited till this moment to express my love for that man, nor for President Snow, nor for others of my brethren; neither have I waited till this moment to speak praises of them. While he lived I had pleasure in telling him how I loved him; I had pleasure in saying how I felt toward him as a man of God, and how I honored him in my heart, and how I would uphold and sustain him in my faith and prayers. I have done it repeatedly while he was living. I have said in days past that Brother Franklin D. Richards was one of the noblest of God's children in the range of my knowledge.

Here are his brethren who have been associated with him in the councils of the Holy Priesthood, who have been striving to follow in his footsteps and emulate his good example, and who have been trying to abide and endure the tests that he has been put to. I want to say it, as my belief, that when a man can bring himself to endure the tests that that man has been brought under, there will be no chance for him to lose his reward, inasmuch as he is faithful to the end. I do not know of a man that has proven this more than Brother Franklin D. Richards, in days gone by. I can look back to the time when I have thought in my heart, O God, if I had to pass through what he is passing through, I could not endure it. And I could not have endured it then. The Lord was merciful to me, and has preserved me until now; and now I hope, by the blessing of his acquaintance and of the example which he has set me, no matter what test may be given to me in the future, that I may be able to endure it as faithfully, submissively and humbly as he did. If everyone of us can do this, all will be well with us.

May the Lord bless his sons and his daughters. I know some of them, too; and I want to say that Brother Franklin D. Richards has some of the best boys that ever lived in this world. I would like to say that right here, while they are present. I know them to be some of the best, purest, brightest and most faithful young men that are to be found in the ranks of the people of God. May they continue in this steadfastness, faithfulness and worthiness before God and His people, is my humble prayer. I believe they will. Some of them are young men that have had to endure hardships and trials, and they have come up through suffering and disappointments in many respects, but they have been faithful, and are still faithful, and have the testimony of the Gospel in their hearts. I feel in my heart to say, God bless every son and every daughter of Brother Franklin D. Richards. And if any have strayed away at all through misunderstanding, I trust and believe, and would predict if it were necessary, that the spirit and power of God will yet work upon them to bring them back to the fold and to their father's house. God bless the memory of this good man, and all his family—his wives, his children, and his children's children unto the latest generation, with the power and blessings and privileges of the Holy Priesthood, that there may never come a time when President Franklin D. Richards shall not have sons to represent him in the house of God. This is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus. Amen.

The choir sang, "Farewell all earthly honors."

Benediction by Elder John Henry Smith.

The congregation remained seated until the remains and the mourners left the Tabernacle. Then a long cortege of carriages followed with many friends on foot to the cemetery, where the mortal part of the venerated Apostle were deposited in the family grounds. The grave was dedicated by Elder Geo. Teasdale of the Apostles and decorated with flowers. There the body of the faithful servant of the Lord will repose in peace until the morning of the resurrection day, when those who are in Christ shall rise to greet the millennial dawn, and shine in the celestial glory of the Son of Righteousness.

FROM THE HEART.

Madeline S. Bridges, in Woman's Home Companion.

A tear or two, a prayer or two,
For the dead that have gone before us;
Pure thoughts that stray from the world away
To the sweet Heaven bending o'er us.

Strong hopes that thrill with a noble will,
For the work that may choose and call us;
Deep soul-content, that but good is meant,
In whatever may befall us.

A song, a smile, and a pulse the while
That throbs with the joy of living;
A kiss or so from dear lips, and lo!
This is the heart's thanksgiving.

MY HERITAGE.

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

I unto life so full of love was sent,
That all the shadows which fall on the way
Of every human being, could not stay,
But fled before the light my spirit lent.

I saw the world through gold and crimson dyes;
Men sighed, and said, "Those rosy hues will fade
As you pass on into the glare and shade!"
Still beautiful the way seems to mine eyes.

They said, "You are too jubilant and glad;
The world is full of sorrow and of wrong.
Full soon your lips shall breathe forth sighs—not song!"
The day wears on, and yet I am not sad.

They said, "You love too largely, and you must Through wound on wound, grow bitter to your kind."
More cause for love, and less cause for distrust.

They said, "Too free you give your soul's rare wine:
The world will quaff, but it will not repay."
Yet into the emptied flagons, day by day,
True hearts pour back a nectar as divine.

Thy heritage! Is it not love's estate?
Look to it, then, and keep its soil well tilled.
I hold that my best wishes are fulfilled
Because I love so much, and cannot hate.

History of the Southern States Mission.

February, 1894.

On the 28th Elders Alder and Nelson undertook to canvass Pine Level, Montgomery county, Ala. They had canvassed a number of families and were passing by the postoffice, where a party of six or seven men had gathered. One of these men ordered the Elders to leave the town. Another of the same crowd produced a gun and marched the brethren out, threatening to shoot them if they returned, or even if they looked back.

March.

This month opened with all the Elders well and hard at work.

A spirit of fairness seems to be growing among the people of the south. The lives of the Elders are safe now wherever they labor, and they feel secure wherever they are at work.

April.

On the 16th of this month Elders Griffin and Smith, laboring in Caborus county, Virginia, were assailed by a mob, led by a justice of the peace. They marched the brethren about a mile from where they were stopping when the mob called to see them and told them to leave the county. The Elders left, but went to another part of the county, where they labored unmolested.

Some threats were made in various parts of the Mission, but the Elders remained in their fields and were not harmed.

The following report will give an idea of the work being done. It is for the four months ending May 1, 1894:

PRESIDENT ELIAS S. KIMBALL.

Miles walked, 42,194.
Meetings held, 954.
Families visited, 16,576.
Baptisms, 71.
Tracts distributed, 22,329.
Refused entertainment; 3,211.

May.

Elders A. S. Campbell and F. M. Belnap, while canvassing Birmingham, Ala., approached a man and woman sitting on a porch to offer them a tract. Elder Campbell was abused and severely kicked and ordered off the premises. He remonstrated at being treated thus, but he received the usual courtesies (?) extended to "Mormons" by some fanatics.

On the 23d these same brethren were arrested in the city of Birmingham on a charge of vagrancy, sworn to by one of the aldermen of the city, McNight by name. The Elders were fined $5 each and were charged $1.25 as costs of suit, or $12.50 all told. Not having money, they were sent to jail, where they had to remain but an hour, as Brother C. M. Hauser paid their fines and they were liberated.

After the Elders had been arrested for vagrancy, the complainant, learning that he could not prosecute the Elders under this charge, had the complaint changed, charging them with trespass, based on a city ordinance prohibiting the circulating of circulars, etc., and for this they were fined.

On the 23d President J. Golden Kimball, accompanied by Elder Elias S. Kimball, who had been appointed to succeed to the Presidency of the Southern States Mission by the Church Presidency, arrived in Chattanooga. President J. Golden Kimball had been President for three years, during which time many innovations were introduced pertaining to proselyting.

Elder J. Golden Kimball filled a great and glorious mission, accomplishing much in many ways.

A letter of instructions, dated Chattanooga, May 25th, 1894, and signed by Presidents J. G. and Elias S. Kimball, was written and sent out to the Presidents of Conferences, informing them of the change. Also commending the Elders for their faithful work in the past, and for their zeal.

Man must work. That is certain as the sun. But he may work grudgingly; or he may work gratefully; he may work as a man or he may work as a machine. He canont always choose his work, but he can do it in a generous temper, and with an up-looking heart. There is no work so rude that he may not exalt it; there is no work so impassive that he may not breathe a soul into it; there is no work so dull that he may not enliven it.—Henry Giles.

Truth is obeyed when it is loved. Strict obedience to the truth alone enables people to dwell in the presence of the Almighty.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Sylvester Low, Jr., was born Dec. 22, 1862, at Providence, Utah. His parents were Scotch, and embraced the Gospel in Scotland.

They emigrated to Utah in 1855. In 1860 they settled on a farm in Cache Valley.

In 1863 they were among the number who were called to colonize the Bear Lake Valley, where they remained for two years, returning at the end of this time to Smithfield, Utah.

Here, at this place, Brother Low attended school during the winter, and worked on the farm in the summer. In 1883 Elder Low chose "one of those sweet spirits, which grace true womanhood," and from this time dates his success. Elder Low was an interested worker in the M. I. A. association and was for three years, president of this organization, in the ward in which he resides. He was also an aid in the Sunday school, and held several positions in the ecclesiastical organization of Smithfield.

SYLVESTER LOW, JR.
President South Carolina Conference.

A call came to him in August 1898, requesting him to go on a mission to the Southern states, where he arrived Oct. 24, 1898.

He was assigned to the South Carolina Conference, where he has met with the "ups and downs" of missionary life, being "rocked" and mobbed, derided and hissed.

Elder Low has been a very faithful and energetic laborer in the cause and in his appointment as president of the South Carolina Conference a better selection could not have been made.

THE DARK AGES.

BY ELDER A. ARROWSMITH.

THE FIFTH CENTURY witnessed a continued apostasy from the true order of the Gospel, as taught by Christ and His Apostles in their ministry; and many innovations were introduced at this period of worldly glory. It appears possible for a people to retain considerable freedom from sin and impurity, when undergoing persecution and opposition. But so soon as a people become popular and of the world, they become carnal minded; verifying the words of Christ, (John, 15-19,), "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." The world loved its own, and Christianity at this time was of the world, popular, necessarily corrupt, and full of polllutions.

The Bishops of Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, Jerusalem, Carthage and other large cities had their followers, who contended for the respective supremacy of their Bishops, who at this time delighted in the homage paid them. In the many discussions under consideration, appeals would generally be made to Rome; thus the Bishop of Rome gradually gained the pre-eminence, and became the great Patriarch, Pontiff, Pope, or Father, of the western part of the Empire, while the patriarch of Constantinople held the power in the eastern part of the Empire, under the name of the Greek Church. Thus the factions formed in this century largely determined the future of the two dominant factions, the Greek and Roman Churches.

Constantinople became prominent from the fact that Constantine had made the place his headquarters, and he showered special favors on the Bishop of that city during his lifetime, which strengthened the eastern church, or faction, as the great division and ultimate split did not occur until the ninth century, when the Greek and Roman Churches excommunicated each other.

So much for the Bishops, who held the highest ecclesiastical positions and who governed a clergy that was full of pomp and arrogance, revelling in luxury and voluptuousness, and as for the monks, their licentiousness had become a proverb; so that corruption in high places had a terrible influence in debasing the laity, who had become very ignorant and illiterate; their religion had become a mere superstition, salvation depending on the Priest, who had power to absolve from sin, through the confessional, this being one of the many innovations introduced in this century.

Image and relic worship increased as the church grew, the Barbarian converts readily accepting anything in the shape of idolatery, and the Christian worship was truly congenial with their tastes. Thus this form of godliness spread over the whole civilized world; also among the tribes of barbarous people inhabiting England, Ireland and Scotland; being administered to suit the tastes of Sage, and Savage, and palatable to all the distressed nations, that were pillaged and robbed, being forced into the adoption of these heresies by the Romans, who still controlled the world.

There were many good and noble spirits, that tabernacled in the flesh even at this time; men who lived up to all the light and understanding that they were able to comprehend. Of such was St. Patrick, so-called, a noble man of good repute, born in humble circumstances in Scotland, taken captive into Ireland, where he came in contact with much degradation. He finally escaped, and being of a religious turn of mind, educated himself and entered the Priesthood, under the Bishop of Rome, who in the year 430 gave him a mission to preach to the Barbarians in Ireland. He succeeded Palladius, the first missionary, and established a stronghold for Catholicism, that has existed ever since in Ireland. His self-sacrifice is worthy of emulation, and it is a pity that he taught such false theology, but God will reward him, as his intentions undoubtedly were good.

Amid the prevailing corruptions, there were many self-sacrificing martyrs, who verily believed that they were the true Priesthood, in an unbroken chain from Peter, and labored assiduously for the redemption of the world and to bring the world to a knowledge of Jesus Christ, and thus far they were successful, but the principles of salvation, or the doctrines which Jesus taught, were not taught by them, and were woefully neglected by the children of men. Converts were made by force, and the attractive display of splendor, as exhibited in this age, was truly a form of godliness.

A learned man, Vigilantius by name, spoke against the many prevailing superstitions, especially image worship, and was immediately denounced as a heretic, being excommunicated, and so remains to this day.

The richness and magnificence of the churches exceeded all bounds, and beautiful images adorned all the temples of theology. The Virgin Mary, holding the infant Jesus, being particularly conspicuous. The altars and chests where relics were kept were mostly of solid silver, which betokened wealth, opulence and splendor.

Confessions, which formerly had been made before the congregation, were now arranged to be made before the Priest appointed for that purpose, and thus an order of things was established that we find at this day.

I am reminded of a circumstance that came under my observation when a boy in England. In the city where I lived was a little rubicund Roman Priest, who was rather short-sighted. One day in visiting his flock he came hurriedly upon a half dozen large raw-boned Irishmen, who were playing the innocent game of hand ball. He said, "John, are you playing at pitch and toss?" (which meant are you gambling). Th reply came very meekly from one of these large, humble fellows (who could have crushed the life out of the little Priest), "No, Father." Nevertheless, the Priest ordered these half dozen brawny fellows into the house and soundly thrashed them with his stick, and they took it as meekly as lambs, confessing their faults to this little piece of arrogance, and humbly asked for forgiveness. I can readily understand that this state of things came from the Dark Ages, as this obsequious submissiveness is opposed to liberty and truth, and consequently is not of God: and Mosheim speaks of the same order of things existing in the fifth century.

Undoubtedly those of my readers that have followed me thus far have at many times in their life come in contact with the variety of rites (that I have tried to depict briefly) in the varied forms of religion now extant upon the earth, and it is hardly any wonder that Isaiah in his 24th chapter, in prophetic vision, saw the earth defiled under the inhabitants thereof, because they had transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, and broken the everlasting covenant; and the earth was to be devoured with a curse, and in consequence of its many pollutions, is to be burned with fire, and few men are to be left. How thankful we should be that before that great day of the coming of the Lord He again honors the earth with His Priesthood, who are warning the nations of the impending judgments that will surely be poured out upon the wicked.

HOW TO STUDY "MORMONISM"

"I have been making a study of the Mormon question;" "Rev. So and So is in Utah studying Mormonism on the spot." "We have sent a special correspondent to Salt Lake City to investigate Mormonism." These are some of the statements we find in different newspapers published in the east and in the south. This would be both interesting and encouraging to the "Mormon" people, if the pretended investigations were conducted with any degree of fairness, and a desire to obtain facts and correct information as to the doctrines, spirit and intent of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, commonly called the "Mormon Church."

It depends a great deal upon the state of mind and the purpose in the heart of an individual who makes a study of any religious, social or political question. If he begins with a settled conviction that the system he is about to pry into is wrong, and his object is to discover, if possible, evidences of its falsity, he will no doubt find many things which will fit into his design and confirm him in his original position. Nearly everybody who comes to Utah for the nominal purpose of "investigating Mormonism," takes it for granted that the whole concern is either a fraud or a delusion, and he does not look for anything but what will establish one or the other of those propositions.

In nearly every instance, too, the pretended inquirer goes to sources from which flow only misrepresentation, abuse, burlesque and caricature. These fall in with the desire of the querist and he adopts them at once. In making out his communications to the journal or magazine which he represents, he sets forth these distortions as "Mormonism." If he quotes from Mormon literature he does not take the trouble to go to the standards of faith of the Church, but accepts from its enemies garbled quotations from works that are not recognized as authoritative, or isolated sentences from old sermons without giving the explanatory context. In relating "Mormon" history, he cites anti-Mormon stories as though they were authenticated facts, and in depicting "Mormon" society he repeats absurd and monstrous tales told by reprobates who revel in everything salacious and who delight in scandal.

That is how "Mormonism" is usually studied by newspaper representatives and clergymen who pay a brief visit to this city, and have the sublime egotism to assume either that they knew all about it before they came, or have imbibed a complete understanding of the many questions involved in its theology, its remarkable organization and the practical questions involved in the system, by a forty-eight hours' or week's sojourn among its most vigorous and subtle opponents. It is rare indeed that any of them go to the fountain head for information. If they do mingle with people who can give them light, it is merely that they may be able to say that they had interviews with prominent Mormons.

How often one may read in magazines and eastern newspapers about what is in the Book of Mormon, and find that the alleged quotations are either not in the book at all, or so changed as to be the opposite of what the book conveys! That work is frequently denounced from the pulpit as "a religious romance," or condemned as a blasphemous and ridiculous counterfeit of the Bible. Ask the Rev. preachers if they have ever read the book, and when pressed into a corner for a direct reply, they have to acknowledge that they have never seen anything but alleged extracts from it. The most extravagant and nonsensical notions that could be invented and called religious opinions, are commonly presented to the public as "Mormonism."

Some of the very worst of the defamers of the Mormon people and their doctrines, are among the ministers of the "Christian" denominations. They are deserving of all the denunciations heaped upon the pharisees and scribes and doctors and lawyers by the Savior of the world, when He ministered among men. They are engaged in a similar occupation. They will be entitled to the same reward. Men of their class were the chief cause of the persecutions and bloodshed that came upon the Latter Day Saints in the early days of the Church. They are following in the same course, but with other weapons, today. They will fill up the full measure of the cups of their iniquity and then go to their own place.

We warn our contemporaries at a distance, that it is useless to send clerical or journalistic representatives to Utah to gather up anti-Mormon pabulum to dish out to their readers. It is a waste of time and money. They can glean all the kind of stuff they want from anti-Mormon literature. If they desire Mormon works, they can get them from Mormon sources. They can also be visited by missionaries who are out among them for the purpose of diffusing correct information.

We notice in the Chattanooga, Tenn., News, that an invitation was recently extended from the President of the Southern States Mission to ministers and others, to meet with the Elders and learn what they have to offer to the public. That paper gives a fair report of a conference held in Chattanooga, and after stating what was preached by Elder Ben E. Rich, adds the following:

"He closed his remarks by extending to the ministers of the city a cordial invitation to visit the mission home and converse freely with the young men of the Mormon Church who are here engaged in missionary work.

"He said: 'Let us not hate one another, but let us reason together; if you have a truth that we have not, we will gladly accept it, and if we have an error that you can point out, we will gladly abandon it and be thankful for your aid in showing it to us. Many of our Elders have suffered from the hand of violence and many times these mobs have been headed by those professing to be ministers of the Gospel; a palm leaf of peace looks better than the shotgun in the hands of one who claims to be a minister of Christ, so come and let us reason together.'"

That is the spirit in which all who want to know "Mormonism" as it is, should make their investigations. We are not ashamed of the Gospel we believe nor of any principles of our faith. We hold them all as divine. It is our mission to proclaim them to the world. They are not to be hidden in a corner or shut up in the closets of our souls, nor are they to be expounded by those who take pleasure in ridiculing and distorting them. Let those who want light refrain from plunging into darkness to find it. Let all who desire information about Mormonism come or go to its authorized representatives, "Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find."—Deseret News.

The eloquence of angels never can convince any person that God lives, and makes truth the habitation of His throne, independent of that eloquence being clothed with the power of the Holy Ghost; in the absence of this, it would be a combination of useless sounds.

Chastisements are grievous when they are received; but if they are received in patience, they will work out salvation for those who cheerfully submit to them.

The people of the United States drink, smoke and chew up $2,000,000,000 every year, and then curse hard times. "What fools we mortals be."

ABSTRACTS FROM CORRESPONDENCE

Elders D. Bagley and William T. Gale, writing from Clark county, Alabama, mention in very comendable terms the unity existing among the followers of the Lamb. It is strange how the feeling of brotherly love is imbibed by all who put on Jesus as quickly as they come out of the world. The Spirit of God will bestow love, joy, etc., when it is truly received, and those who a few months previous were warring and contending now submit in humility to everything that is honorable and just.

Elders Wright and Holyoak were met the other day down in Alabama by a man on a mule, carrying a gun. This man as he approached them dismounted, levelled his gun at them and demanded that they should apologize to his wife because they had offered her a tract. He became very abusive and threatened to "get their hats" if they ever passed by his house again, and also told them to "git out of this county and stay out." After pouring his wrath on the Elders he mounted and left them. Poor man, we presume he claims to be an American, too.

Elder Madison N. Fisher, of the Mississippi Conference, relates an unpleasant experience wherein he and Elder M. E. Gifford were the victims of a cowardly assault.

These two brethren were laboring in Hester, St. James Parish, Louisiana. They were returning from holding services, to the house of a friend, when suddenly volley after volley of missiles of various kinds were thrown at them. Elder Fisher was struck, but Elder Gifford escaped. The Priests and people, generally speaking, treated them very cordialy, but, as in all communities, you will find some who have no individual decency and who never respect the rights of others.

President John Peterson, of the East Tennessee Conference, says: The year closes with bright prospects for the East Tennessee Conference. All the Elders are well, and enthused with the spirit of their mission. As a rule fair treatment has been accorded them. More are earnestly investigating than ever before, and we have every occasion to expect a bounteous harvest in the near future. Yourself and counselors have the love, confidence, faith and prayers of every Elder in our Conference, and I voice the sentiments of every Eder when I say God bess you.

Elders Charles Gilbert and W. H. Lowder, of the Virginia Conference, write to us concerning a case of healing.

They had been laboring in Bath county, Virginia, and one night were entertained by a gentleman who was afflicted with rheumatism. "Next morning," writes Brother Lowder, "we taught him some of the ordinances of the Gospel. He signified his belief in the power of God and requested us to ask the Lord to heal him. We did so, and now he can go about performing his daily duties as ably as he ever did. Before this time he had been confined to his bed and was unable to move about."

Brother Lowder also relates another instance wherein a little child had been injured and by his prayer was healed. He concludes with a testimony that the blessings of God can be enjoyed now as well as in the days of Jesus.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

We are placed on this earth to prove whether we are to go into the celestial world, the terrestial or the telestial, or to hell.

Our Missionary Hymn Book will be ready for distribution by Jan. 15th. It has been specially compiled for the Elders and contains all the songs in Cannon's Missionary Hymn Book, and many new songs.

The Sanpete Democrat says:

"The rule heretofore has been that a man charged with a crime was innocent in the eyes of the law until proven guilty. But this law has been changed in relation to the Utah troubles. Here every man is found guilty unless he can establish his innocence."

AUTHORITY.

There is an educational maxim that the mind will interpret according to its experiences. Such being true, we can readily see how it is that so many men claim authority to preach the Gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof, when they, in truth, have no more authority than the sons of Sceva, who thought to do good, by casting out devils; but who were assailed because they presumed. God at no time spake promiscuously and confusedly to his children, but at all times when He has spoken, it has been through one recognized source—His prophets.

If we were to select ten different ministers and ask them how they were called to preach, we venture that no two in the ten would answer the same.

Many years ago an apostacy took place; there was a "famine" for the word of God, and no where in the vast land could it be found. When God ceased to speak—because He had no prophets, they had been stoned and killed and His authority upon the earth was destroyed—men continued to preach, and "divine for money."

From the time that the "Sorcerers" tried to "make money" by the power of God we have had many such men too, who tried to use the Priesthood for their own gain. When "gross darkness" covered the people, and these kind of men were in their midst, to justify themselves in their nefarious work, they must devise some means of pulling the wool over the eyes of the people. We scarce can imagine what excuses were given by them during this time, but we can imagine that the "reasons" given now, by the "hireling clergy" is a relic of the ancient claims.

When a man now claims authority from a commission given to some special individuals for some special work, we readily see the weakness of such thin claims. What would we think at this present time, if some person were to hunt up the commission given to Washington, as he sat astride his horse superintending the work on his plantation, to be commander-in-chief of the American army and claim the right to that position in our army ranks of today? The result can perhaps be better surmised than written. Yet we have hundreds of intelligent men claiming authority from such a standpoint. When the Savior blessed His apostles and sent them out, the particular commission was to them. The result of claiming authority from this commission, of the Savior, is the "man made" systems of today.

Their experience has been such that they have been "educated" to believe this and have been for so many generations undisturbed in this cherished belief that it is blasphemy (considered by them) for men to claim authority in the appointed way of the Lord; and, the devil in them, that has so long led them to believe that they were "all right" when assailed and commanded to "come out," jumps upon the power so commanding, and seeks to devour it. It is but reasonable to conclude that if even the devil would not respect those seven sons of Sceva, in their supposed good work, the Lord surely will not, and if they were not recognized in this one respect would they be recognized in any other of the ordinances? If one part fails, all must be spurious, for not one jot nor tittle of the word of the Lord will fall unfulfilled. Now these men claim authority from this commission. Can they cast out devils? Such was promised in the same commission. Can they heal the sick? This same promise was made. Can they perform any of the works that are spoken of in this commission? If not, why not? Some day, possibly, they will find themselves among the number who will say to Jesus: "Have we not done many mighty works in thy name, etc.," and will hear the Savior say, "Depart from me ye that work iniquity."

We have been requescted to announce that returning Elders should not call at the President's office, Salt Lake City, on Saturday afternoons, as at that time the banks and railroad offices are closed and it is very difficult for them to do business, especially to secure clergy rates to the respective homes of the returning Elders.

Brethren thus reporting are sometimes detained in Salt Lake until the following Monday for these reasons.

Farewell Address to a Departing Elder.

By P. S. M.

Ever since the birth of time, many a hero has gone to his grave unnoticed and unsung. His was the hero's heart, his the hero's deeds, yet his heroism was known perhaps only to himself and to his God; for the world rarely knows the whole truth, and not always gives honor where honor is due. He indeed is a hero who drives the wild beast to its den, and rescues from it its human prey. Let the world justly praise him. He, too, is perhaps a greater hero who, rushing into the flaming front of shot and shell, fights foremost for his beloved country, and falls. God will let none such lose his abundant reward. But there are other heroes besides these—not indeed as the world estimates heroes, but as the Judge of all the earth knows them. I mean those who in obscurity sacrifice their efforts and their lives, perhaps, that others may live; who give their entire love and energy to the teaching of others the way of life, and the training of them to walk therein; who help succor those under affliction, and give heart to those who despair. I know there is little fascination in such a heroism; for we like not only that we should be heroes, but that we should be appreciated by the world as such. But when we shall have ascended higher into the regions of truth and reality, so that, being above the mists of fond prejudice and traditional ideas, we shall see with a clearer view and judge with a more even judgment, then we shall call him hero who toils that others may be raised higher in the scale of worth and happiness. Such heroes are they who, in the cause of their Master, leave all that they have learned to know as dear, and go forth to strive for the elevation of others. Thus you will go, as others have gone; and as for them, so abundantly for you, we hope and pray that you will wear the laurel wreath of devoted faithfulness.

But though we are apt to emphasize the hardships of a Missionary's life, yet we must not fail to realize that such a life exemplifies the true life of man. We live, when we live rightly, not for ourselves alone, but for others; indeed, he who lives for himself has very little to live for. Some one has said that to know the truth yourself is to live, but to help others to know the truth is to live doubly. Thus to help others is to feel that there is some reason for your being born into the world; that there is something more in life than labor lost.

Then it is that you thrill with the sentiment that life is joyous and full, and "worth living, after all."

Indeed, in helping others to know truth, you enlarge your own soul to include the vast possibilities of life that selfish souls never dream of. You yourself are developed—developed as God would have you—in striving to develop others. "Thou that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself."

The Missionary comes to know as perhaps few other men that the Savior was something more than an ordinary sermonizer when He proclaimed the great altruistic law that he who loses his life for others finds it in reality. By the giving of one's life, I do not mean necessarily the spilling of the heart's blood; I mean rather the giving of one's time, one's thought, one's anxiety, one's effort, in a word, one's love—"for the happiness of love is in action; its test is what one is willing to do for others." These things constitute our real lives, and if they be sacrificed to exalt mankind, then the real life, the divine development is achieved by him who sacrifices. One who thus gives himself for others, and thus in turn gains his own soul, may not command the applause of the world; he may not be a financier to control the stock market, nor a statesman to direct the great affairs of a nation; he may not be an authoritative scientist, nor one of the literati; but he will be more than all these; for however obscure his reputation, however humble his attainments, he will be one of God's noblemen.

There is another phase of development of the soul, which a Missionary pre-eminently gains—I mean the power to forgive even enemies, a power which grows out of the great love developed for every child of God. It is true that the abhorrence of sin becomes stronger in the Missionary, but the solicitude for the sinner becomes stronger also. The sin is hated; the sinner is loved. The Missionary learns that the noblest vengeance is to forgive. Many a time, before going into the world as a representative of the Master, on hearing of the ill-treatment to which some Elders are subject, he burns with indignation, and with all the dignity of a youth reared in our beloved land of liberty, he declares that he will yield his life before he will budge from the maintenance of his rights. But when once infused with the spirit of his calling, he can suffer all such indignities with a bearing similar to that of our Lord when, on that memorable occasion, He exclaimed, "Forgive them, Father, they know not what they do." Insults do not try his soul; hurled stones call up no desire to retaliate; pushes and blows are borne with patience; for he who is subject to these abuses knows that they are but the opportunities for exercising those attributes of soul which, when developed, make us perfect, as our Father in heaven is perfect. I repeat that he indeed feels in all its force the meaning of the words that the noblest vengeance is to forgive. He will learn to love those for whom he toils and suffers; his very toil and suffering for them will develop his love for them. For love is like faith—without works or acts for the object thereof, it dies.

In your work, as in the work of all successful Missionaries, there are some principles specially to be followed, one of the most important of which is to put yourself in the places of those whose course of life you seek to change. You must imagine their mode of thought, their traditions and prejudices, and then adapt yourself to these conditions. You must respect that which they hold sacred, even though it appear supremely ridiculous to you. Be sparing of sarcasm; be rich in charity. Try to change the ideas and the ideals of men—those ends at which they aim—and then you can convert them. Do not ruthlessly tear down old beliefs, but with sympathetic effort build for them nobler and loftier structures than they already have. As we often say in homely phrase, do not tear down the dwelling of a man, however vile it be, without first building a better for him. Work to change men's ideals, I repeat, for remember that what a man desires and strives for with all his heart, that he will be.

Now, there is a practical suggestion or two that I want to offer. Dark days will come in your life, as even now, and crises will have to be met. But remember that the remedy for all forms of despondency, or as we call it in colloquial phrase, the "blues," is hard work. Work at your duties, work at study, and the clouds will soon rise. The happy man and the man safe from the hurtful influence of Satan is the busy man. "God calls men when they are busy; Satan when they are idle; for idleness is the hour of temptation, and an idle person is the Devil's tennis-ball, which he tosses at pleasure."

Pray often and devoutly. Prayer, in connection with work, will be your source of strength. Yes, call on God, and He will show you that He is your shield and exceeding great reward. Indeed, when the sense of responsibility rests on you heavily, and the cares of duty disturb the heart, then you will find that the prayer of a righteous man availeth much.

Above all, court the companionship of the Spirit of God. Keep your thoughts pure and your actions righteous, that the Spirit of God shall be pleased to dwell with you. Submit yourself to its dictates. Learn to know its promptings, study under its inspiration. Preach under its influence. Do good as it gives you intelligence and strength.

Do these things, and then your years of special service in your Master's cause will be, in one sense, the happiest of your life. To be sure, these years will not be happiest in the ordinary meaning of the word happiness. You will miss the comforts and the solace that only a home can offer; you will miss the fond associations of loving friends; your fare will perhaps be scanty, and your conveniences few; you will feel keenly, if you have never felt before, the divinity and sweetness in such words as home, mother, father, loved ones. But still your soul will thrill with joy; you will achieve that peace that is above all earthly blessings—a sweet and quiet conscience; you will gather in such abundance as you have never known before that truest happiness that springs up along the pathway of duty in God's cause. Yes, you will realize that loved ones are far away, but you will also feel your God in such blessed nearness as to make up for all other losses.

You will no doubt enjoy many an experience that would now seem ludicrous to you. You will tramp from door to door almost without hope, for apparently no one will want to hear you. Your heart will get faint, perhaps, when all at once, as if arranged by some good angel, you will meet at some humble door perhaps a poor old widow who will be willing to listen to your story. Immediately she will become the most interesting person in the world for you. How you will prize that old soul! You will be anxious to go again and again to her hovel to bring the words of life. You will praise her to your companions, and feel that she is of greater importance than all the rich and great. You will then have caught the true spirit, the Spirit of God, which rejoices in the saving of souls.

Well, do you duty. Be wise as a serpent, but without guile. Be faithful in whatever you are called to do. Be willing to do whatever your superior calls you to. Then, I promise you, your days abroad will be truly happy and your experience valuable. And though while you are in service, your home, even if not forgotten, will not draw your thoughts too much away from your duties, yet when you are given honorable leave to go, your home will become the most attractive, most sacred and blessed spot on earth.

Tell me, gentle traveler, who through the world has gone,
And seen the sweetest roses blow,
And brightest gliding rivers flow;
Of all thine eyes have looked upon
What is the fairest land?

Child, shall I tell where nature has best and fairest flowers?
It is where those we love abide;
Though small that space, it is more wide
Than Kingdoms; though a desert bare,
The river of the gods is there,
And there are the enchanted bowers.

Mixed Marriages.

Archbishop Corrigan has transmitted to the clergy of the diocese a decree from the Vatican, bearing on the celebration of the jubilee of the Holy year. One effect of the decree will be to make difficult the marriage of a Catholic to a Protestant by a priest in 1900. Mixed marriages, as they are commonly termed, are customarily allowed only by dispensation of the bishops, but for the Holy year this power is suspended.

In his circular Archbishop Corrigan says that the Pope suspends special faculties to ordinaries of dioceses, "so that at this season particularly, Rome should be the greater fountain of mercy and spiritual favors of the Catholics of the entire world."

This is understood in Catholic circles to mean that only by applying direct to Rome shall dispensations be granted during the year 1900.

Appalling Brutality.

Miss Slessor, Scotch missionary, who has been 24 years in Africa, has herself saved the lives of over fifty twins.

When twins are born, they are at once taken from the mother, and if no one intercedes they are at once taken by the feet and head and have their backs broken across a native woman's knee, in the same manner as one would break a stick. The bodies are then placed in an earthenware receptacle and taken to the bush, where they are devoured by the flies, insects or animals. Sometimes the little victims are put into these receptacles alive and are then eaten alive in the same way.

The mother becomes an outcast. If she does not at once take her own life, she has to flee to the bush. If she ventures near the town or village, she must see that she does not remain on the path when any other native is coming. Her presence, according to their superstition, would defile the place for others. She must not drink from the same spring, must not touch anything even belonging to her own relatives—Missionary Review of the World.

The test of real affection is patience.
Work is a great panacea for a sore heart.

NATURE OF THE LAW OF TITHING.

Its Requirements have been Widely Ignored—Effects of Obedience to It—Forgivness Comes Through Repentance—Offerings of the Saints—The Obligation of Obedience—That Which is Temperal and Spiritual Inseperable—How Eternal Inheritances Are Obtained.

BY ELDER FRANCIS M. LYMAN.

My brethren and sisters: I pray that the Spirit of the Lord may be with us this afternoon, as it has been so abundantly with our brethren, and that we may have the liberty of that Spirit in speaking and in listening, and profit by what the Lord may please to give us. Time is very precious, and this is a very large congregation, and without the help of the Lord, it is not possible for an Elder to edify this intelligent audience.

We have been listening to the instruction of President Snow and his brethren in the various Stakes of Zion, particularly upon the law of tithing, in such a way, possibly, as it has not been brought before the people in the past. There is a time for all things, and it appears as though the time has come when the Latter Day Saints should give particular attention to this important law. The condition of the people individually, as well as the condition of the Church, has made it necessary for the Lord to anonunce through His servants that we must put ourselves right with regard to this principle. Like all other principles of the Gospel, it is vital and very important, and it is not alone that the foundations of Zion may be laid and the obligations of the Church be met, as they needed to be met in 1838, when the Lord was besought by the Prophet Joseph to know how much was necessary of the property of the people for a tithing. It is not an unusual thing for the Prophet to approach the Lord in times of necessity and when it appears plain to the mind of the Prophet that something needs to be done. We could not tell without the inspiration of the Lord what resources there were for the Church to rely upon, but how simple and plain it is when the Lord announces that if Israel will bring in all their tithes and offerings, that there may be meat in the storehouse of the Lord. He will open the windows of Heaven and pour out a blessing that we shall hardly be able to contain. The necessities of the people today in these valleys, the things that we are suffering, the early frosts that have destroyed quite a percentage of the crops of the people in the higher valleys, the loss in the fruit crop, all admonish us that we need a blessing from the Lord.

It has been discovered, as the records of the Church abundantly show, that quite a percentage of the Latter Day Saints have entirely ignored this law of tithing. Twenty-five per cent. have neglected it altogether. What right have we in the Church if we are not willing to obey the laws of the Church? As well might we think of being members in good standing and fellowship, if we had failed to receive baptism of the water and of the spirit, or if we refused to gather together or to preach the Gospel. Without the law of tithing, as we heard from the President this morning, these temples could not have been built. What has been done towards the laying of the foundations of Zion could not have been accomplished without the revenue law of the Church. And it is a most reasonable law. I believe that I have discovered, as well as my brethren, why the Lord has determined that one-tenth of our interest annually should be required for a tithing. I understand it to be for the reason that that amount is just exactly what is necessary to accomplish the purposes of the Lord. Less than that is insufficient. Tithing has been known among the people of Israel from the early ages. It has been proven not only among the people that have occupied this earth, but among people who have occupied other earths than this. It is a law that has been demonstrated in the experience of the children of God through all past ages, and it is understood that one-tenth is just the amount necessary to meet the requirements of the Lord. How much allowance the Lord has made, in His reckoning, for those who, being without faith, will be negligent and will not have the strength and power of character to endure, I am not able to say. But He has no doubt established it as the very amount that is absolutely necessary for the purposes of the Lord. It is also just exactly the amount that is necessary to try the souls of the children of men and to prove them. Men who can observe that law and live it properly will be prepared to graduate unto a higher plane, which they must do before the redemption of Zion. Before we enter upon the law of consecration, which is the celestial law of God in finance, it is necessary that we should take the training that we are now having under the law of tithing.

You may be certain, my brethren and sisters, that any person who is not able to observe this law faithfully and well will never, worlds without end, be able to observe the law of consecration. The law of tithing is a stepping stone, and it is a law that will abide forever, because a great majority possibly of the children of God will not be able to reach the higher law.

Since President Snow has been talking so plainly upon this subject, there have been a class of people who have undertaken to take advantage of his promise to the Latter Day Saints in regard to this law, that if for the future they would observe this law faithfully the past should be forgiven. There have been men guilty of breaches of the laws of morality and honesty who have claimed that if they now pay their tithing all their sins will be forgiven them. President Snow never announced any such doctrine as that. He could not announce such a doctrine as that. But the Lord is perfectly able to say to us that if we will observe this law of finance, which we have been under now for over sixty years, for the future and keep His commandments our past negligence of the law of tithing will be forgiven. He is competent also to say that if we will repent of our sins and serve God with all our hearts for the future, our sins will be forgiven us; but not otherwise. The forgiveness of sins is predicated upon faith in God, repentance and reformation and baptism. Sins are not forgiven through the payment of tithing, nor through the partaking of the sacrament, nor observing the Word of Wisdom, or prayer. There are blessings attached to each of these important requirements of the Gospel; but if a man would have his sins forgiven, and be allowed to enter into the Church, he must have faith in God, and in His Son Jesus Christ and in the Holy Ghost, he must repent of all his sins, turn unto the Lord with full purpose of heart and sin no more. Then God will forgive him and redeem him from his sins; but not by paying tithing. By the payment of tithing the foundations of Zion are laid, and up to the present time our tithing has been paid to accomplish what we now see done in a temporal way. The offerings also have been generous enough to perform a great work, for we have paid offerings as well as tithing. We have made offerings of our time, in preaching the Gospel to the world without purse or scrip. We have made offerings for the building of temples, for the erection of meeting houses and for other public works that have been accomplished among the Latter Day Saints. By our offerings the poor have been reasonably cared for, and if our offerings were as generous as they ought to be, no poor person among the Latter Day Saints would ever have to cry for relief without receiving it freely. But we want our names recorded in the Lamb's Book of Life, and it is not done by the observance of any one principle alone, but to every principle there are special blessings promised. There are, in the records of the Church today, the names of every man, woman and child who has given of their means for tithing. Those records can be scanned and our faith and works can be understood by the Presidency of the Church. And we ought to be known; we want to be known. We want to be recognized, not alone as having a name among the people, but as being faithful, devoted, humble and obedient.

Obedience is the first law of God. It is most important that we should be obedient to the word and will of the Lord. It was that which entitled the Son of God to be anointed above His brethren; for He was in all things most perfect and obedient. He put not forth His own will, but He submitted to the will of the Father in all things, even to the laying down of His life, in order that He might be indeed the Son of God, the Savior of the world. He has earned that important position, and through the shedding of His blood and His atonement we are redeemed. By humility and faith and repentance we obtain the forgiveness of our sins, and are entitled to have our names upon the records of the Church as members of the Church. But that fact does not demonstrate particularly any very important work that we have accomplished in sustaining the work of the Lord. By it we are entitled to enter in, but after we have been recorded members of the Church we must then work out our salvation and earn eternal life, for it is not obtained without earning it.

The Lord is not going to give us everything without our doing something. He requires of us a broken heart, a contrite spirit, an obedience to the mind and will of the Lord. And this is reasonable. How generous the Lord is to us when He declares through His prophet, "if from this time forth you will do my will with regard to the law of tithing, the past shall be blotted out." It is not only generous, but it is reasonable and philosophical. The object of the Lord is the salvation of the people, and if He should come out with a revelation today, saying that the Latter Day Saints must square up all their back tithing, do you think they could do it? No. It could not be done, any more than a man could gather up the sins he has committed and blot them out. They are committed, and we cannot change the fact that they are committed. We may be forgiven, we may be redeemed, they may be finally blotted out, if our repentance is genuine and we do not return to our sins again; but it is done through the atoning blood of the Lord Jesus. No man can forgive his own sins, no man can redeem himself from his sins. Neither can any man pay his back tithing, if he has been a member of this Church forty or fifty years and been paying only part of his tithing all that time, and possibly paying none at all. The Lord would not require such a thing, because He knows the Latter Day Saints could not do it. Why, it is all they can do to pay their tithing today. Sufficient for the day is the tithing thereof; sufficient for the day are the offerings thereof; sufficient for the day are the labors thereof; sufficient for the day is the repentance and reformation required of men. They cannot do two days in one. Yesterday has gone forever. We cannot recall it, any more than we can bring to us tomorrow; tomorrow will always be ahead of us. Today is the day of salvation, and the day in which all our labors must be performed. Therefore we want to remember that He hath forgiven the past, thank the Lord. But do not let you or I regret if we have been among that number who have paid their tithing reasonably well, and feel sorry that we did not keep our tithing back so that we could be forgiven. For there is an advantage, there is a blessing and an enlargement of the soul that comes to the man who obeys the word and will of the Lord. It is better that we have done God's will than that we should have need to be forgiven for neglecting it. It is better not to have been a sinner. It is better that our sins should be very light, and not of a serious nature than that they should be deadly sins. It is better that we should live without sin, and be like the Son of God. It is not necessary that we should be sinners. God has designed that we should not be sinners, but that we should live lives of purity and righteousness and walk in obedience to His will, as the Savior did. The Lord desires, just as you desire, every one of your children to be obedient, honest and pure. You do not want them defiled and dishonest, in order that you may forgive them. Therefore I say to my brethren and sisters who have paid their tithing and have little or nothing to be forgiven for in that respect, thank the Lord, and only wish that there was nothing that you had need to be forgiven for, and that you had done the will of the Lord most perfectly.

A great many of the Latter Day Saints have done very well. Thank the Lord for what has been accomplished since last May; thank the Lord that the people have listened, and that you have had testimonies in your hearts, as well as President Snow. You are entitled to know for yourselves. Every one of these Apostles knows that President Snow's testimony is from the Lord, for He has told us. We comprehend it most thoroughly; so does every Latter Day Saint who has done the will of the Lord. Every Latter Day Saint who has now decided and determined to do the will of the Lord also knows it. Those who do the will of the Lord in the future shall also know that God has spoken through President Snow. It is his particular mission and ministry to set right the Latter Day Saints in regard to this particular law—not to neglect any other and not to say that men's sins will be forgiven them if they pay their tithing. That is a mistake, and only transgressors have concluded that Bishops and the authorities of the Church have no right to handle them now for their transgressions, because President Snow has said that the past should be forgiven. He has only said that the past should be forgiven, so far as the payment of tithing was concerned. Thank the Lord that we may be forgiven for that.

Do you remember when the Salt Lake Temple was dedicated in 1893, how everybody was allowed to go in there, transgressors and all, because their names were upon the record and they had not been dealt with? The Prophet Wilford Woodruff announced then that the sins of the Latter Day Saints were forgiven them; but who are Latter Day Saints? Who are the men and women to whom President Woodruff referred? Any man who had not repented? No. Any man who had not made satisfaction? No. He was only announcing that the work you and I are engaged in is genuine, and that in our repentance and reformation there was vitality and virtue, and that we were forgiven so far as we had complied with these laws. He never meant that a man who was an adulterer, or horse thief, was to be forgiven because he went into that Temple, without having made satisfaction or having repented. President Woodruff could not say that; no Prophet could say it. The Father could not say it, only upon the principles of repentance, reformation and righteousness—not a repentance for a little season, but to obtain forgiveness for our sins we must sin no more. We must not turn like the dog to his vomit or the sow to her wallowing in the mire, but we must reform and then labor as the Lord directs, then He will gladly forgive us, just as He will now cancel our obligations in regard to tithing, if for the future we will do the will of the Lord.

Let our names be recorded upon the book of the law of the Lord, where they can be seen and known, and let the conscience of every man, woman and child be clear and free. Why, when we look over the records now, we find men in high positions in the Church who have been very careless and censurable in regard to the law of tithing. No doubt may have entered into the Temples of the Lord who have never done a single thing to help erect or maintain them. We want to repent of these things. We need not be afraid in regard to the Church; we have no need to be disturbed or worried in regard to the obligations of the Church. What should disturb us is our individual obligations to the Lord and to one another. Deal honestly and squarely with the Lord, and you will very readily be able to deal honestly and squarely with your brethren. Let us meet our obligations to the Lord, for to Him we owe life and everything we possess. He has entrusted us with it as stewards, and we want to make good our stewardship. The talents that He has entrusted us with let us turn them over and double them. Do not bury them, nor hide them up, but invest them so that they will increase. The Lord requires this of us. The man who pays his tithing by the thousands or by the hundreds is not the only one that is acceptable to the Lord. The one who pays his fives, his tens, or his fifties—the tithing on whatever the Lord blesses him with—is acceptable to the Lord also. The Lord does not expect a man with one talent to turn over ten. If he returned two he is doing wonderfully well. He does not expect a man with two talents to turn over ten, but four. He expects men to employ their talents and to make good use of them. He does not look with favor upon a slothful servant, because it is wicked to be slothful and idle. We want to be industrious and persevering and see how much we can do in this life with the talents that God has intrusted us with; then we will be acceptable to Him. The widow's mite, thank the Lord, is as large as the millionaire's great amount of means that he may turn over; for out of her little she gives whatever she possesses in order to assist the work of the Lord.

Let the Latter Day Saints remember that we have undertaken to strive for the celestial kingdom. We desire an inheritance on this earth when it is celestialized. We expect an inheritance in Zion, but in order that we may have this inheritance, we are not only required to come into the Church by baptism and confirmation and to receive our ordinations and blessings, but we are expected to be a prayerful people, a people who will observe the Word of Wisdom, who will live pure lives and keep the commandments of the Lord. We are expected to bear the burdens and responsibilities of the kingdom, temporal as well as spiritual. We are in a temporal world, and this is a church of material things as well as spiritual things. We cannot divide the temporal from the spiritual, the body from the spirit and stay here. They go unitedly, hand in hand, and will do throughout mortality, and then throughout all the ages of eternity. Men are not perfect without immortality and eternal life. They cannot meet the design of God without accomplishing what the Lord has laid before us. This is the Lord's work. It is not the work of our brethren who have passed away. They have finished their work here. They have gone to their reward, having earned eternal life. We remain, and we are to prove our faithfulness and devotion and our endurance in the principles of righteousness. The Lord will sustain us; this work will continue; and we will gain in strength and numbers all the time. We are spreading abroad and becoming more numerous in every ward, in every stake, and in every nation where we live. The Lord is working with us, and is handling the nations. He is handling this nation and directing it in its operations to extend liberty among the people of the world. The Gospel will be in the track of religious liberty, and will be carried to every people.

I desire to read the 7th verse in the 85th Section of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. The preceding verses speak in relation to the duty of the Lord's clerk in Zion. At present the Lord has clerks in all the Stakes in Zion and in all the Wards in Zion and the history of our faith and works is being kept. It is important that these records should be kept and correctly kept. A singular thing that I have noticed here (perhaps you have noticed it as well) is that it is not only necessary that our names should be found on record, but it is necessary that our fathers' names should also be found on record, as well as the names of our children. It seems that when the inheritances in Zion are divided out, those whose names are recorded with the names of their fathers and of their children—three generations—are to be entitled to inheritances in Zion:

"And it shall come to pass that I, the Lord God, will send one mighty and strong, holding the sceptre of power in his hand, clothed with light for a covering, whose mouth shall utter words, eternal words; while his bowels shall be a fountain of truth, to set in order the house of God, and to arrange by lot the inheritances of the Saints, whose names are found, and the names of their fathers, and of their children, enrolled in the book of the law of God."

I have felt it important, not only that I should be faithful, but that my children should be faithful, and also my progenitors, as an evidence that there is stability, virtue and integrity in that line of blood; that there is fidelity and faithfulness at least in three generations, who shall be found recorded in the book of the law of God. I am anxious for my kindred and my posterity. I am not satisfied to be alone. I want my family, my kindred and my friends with me; hence I desire to be exemplary and to use my influence with them, that they also may have a worthy record, and not be cast out for apostacy or any other reason, but that together the three generations may be found recorded and be entitled to an inheritance in Zion. If, however, our names are not found recorded in the book of the law of God, we shall not be entitled to an inheritance in Zion. We want an inheritance on this earth. We want a part of the earth for our celestial home and we want to earn it. We cannot get it otherwise. As the President said today, Zion cannot be redeemed but by purchase. Let me say to you that your redemption and mine cometh only by purchase. We must earn what we expect to enjoy. We must redeem our part of Zion, and as the whole people we must redeem the land of Zion. We are promised an eternal inheritance in the land of Zion, but we cannot get it by any one law alone. We cannot get it by tithing alone. A man cannot say that he has paid his tithing generously and freely, and now he has liberty to do just as he pleases. He must not only keep the law of tithing properly, but he must also keep his repentance genuine and eternal. His devotion and faithfulness to the Lord in every other respect must be maintained in addition to the payment of tithing. We have but a little time to live on this earth. Why can we not endure just for a few fleeting years, that will be less than a day to us hereafter? Fifty, seventy, eighty, or a hundred years, we will look upon as but a span when we shall have entered into eternity, the depth and height of which cannot be known in mortality. The suffering and the little difficulties and evil which beset us in this life, and which try our very souls, will be counted as naught hereafter. We will only wonder that we were ever shaken or disturbed at all by the little things that afflicted us.

Brethren and sisters, you have our testimony in regard to this principle. We know that it is important. It is not a new thing that the Lord should be robbed in His tithes and His offerings. It is not a new thing that the word of the Lord should come through a Prophet. It came through the Prophet Joseph when the law of tithing was revealed. It came through him when the law of consecration was revealed and on a hundred other occasions. Many revelations the Lord gave through him, and they have been written. Hundreds of times has the word of the Lord been given through President Brigham Young, the Prophet and lion of the Lord, and through President John Taylor and through President Wilford Woodruff. There is nothing that the Lord requires of His people that the Prophet of the Lord will hesitate to present when it is necessary. He is the chief man upon the towers of Zion to warn the people, and when a warning comes there is a reason for it; there are conditions just confronting us that we know not of, and perhaps they are not told to us. We cannot tell you what is coming just now, but there are important conditions just in front of us as the people of God, and it is necessary that the Prophet should take the very stand that he has in regard to this law, for our safety, for the redemption of Zion, for the accomplishment of the purposes of God in the last days. Thank the Lord that we have a prophet; that we can approach him and learn what his mind and will is and receive it as we have received it in all plainness. And when the Lord speaks to His servant the Prophet, He speaks to all the Prophets. President Snow is not alone, but he is surrounded by prophets of the Lord, and they have the very same testimony abiding in their souls. They know that this is God's work, and they have not been mistaken. They have been leading the people all the time, and the Lord has directed them. He will do so to the end. Thank the Lord that we have Prophets; thank the Lord that this congregation is full of men of prophecy and of revelation. And they are in the missions abroad, as well as at home. The world is enlivened today with men of inspiration from God. They speak revelation. They give forth the word of the Lord, they bear testimony, strong and powerful, to the nations of the earth. In this way the purposes of God are progressing and advancing, and His work will be accomplished. No power on earth can stay it, for it is God's work. Man has not originated it. It is the work of our Eternal Father who dwells in the Heavens. There is power and virtue in it for the salvation of men, and it is true and vital.

God bless you, my brethren and sisters. Let us be faithful and endure but for a little season, and our day of rest and peace and welcome into the presence of the Father and the Son will be sure. Amen.

DEATHS.

Sister Cherry Graham departed this life Dec. 25, 1899, at the age of 73 years, 7 months and 20 days. Sister Graham was a member of the Red Hill branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, located in Green county, Miss. She joined the church in June of 1899, being baptized by Elder Benj. Ritchie.

The Covenanters

An exchange tells a somewhat remarkable story about a religious sect called Covenanters. This sect, it says, excludes from its membership, all lawyers. The reason given is that this unfortunate class of citizens, before being admitted to practice law, are required to take an oath to support the constitution and other laws of the country and state.

The constitution, they hold, is an abominable instrument, because it contains no official recognition of God. The government they consider objectionable, too, because it allows divorces, Sunday mail service, and the sale of intoxicants. And thus the lawyers are, in their view, particularly excluded from the blessings of a "Christian" community.

We have heard of no other "Covenanters" than those with whom all readers of Scottish history are familiar, and who were the mighty champions of Presbyterianism, against popery and prelacy. But it is said that these American "Covenanters" are a branch of the reformed Presbyterian body.

The fact is of interest because Presbyterians are now, and have often been, busy charging the Latter Day Saints with disloyalty to the government. Is it true, that from their own body has sprung a branch—a division of the church, to which those who swear allegiance to the government are never admitted?

There is a form of hypocrisy that attacks others to hide its own defects. It is often found among religionists and is then exceptionally hideous—News.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF THE PROPHET JOSEPH SMITH.

BY APOSTLE M. F. COWLEY.

Joseph Smith, the great Prophet of the nineteenth century, and the head under God, of the glorious dispensation of the Gospel, designated as "The Dispensation of the Fullness of Times," was born in the little town of Sharon, Windsor county, Vermont, Dec. 23rd, 1805. Like the parentage of the Messiah and the ancient Prophets, his were poor, in the riches of the world, yet rich in the possession of those noble traits of character which go to make men good and great in the sight of Him "who judgeth not by the seeing of the eye nor the hearing of the ear," but knows the heart of all His children. Joseph Smith was a descendant on both sides of the house, of the early founders of New England, and indeed of the government of the United States.

He imbibed from his progenitors a love and veneration for God, and human liberty. During his entire career he upheld two great truths, which have ever since characterized the Latter Day Saints. One was that all mankind should have the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences, "let them worship how, where, or what they may;" the other was that the constitution of the United States was framed by the inspiration of the Almighty which rested upon the patriots who founded our government. Throughout life he maintained this doctrine by precept and example, and impressed his people so strongly with these views that they have become the household teaching of parents to children in all the Stakes of Zion and branches of the Church.

The example of the Prophet's parents taught him to be industrious, temperate, virtuous, God-fearing and honest in all the transactions of life. Those who knew him intimately from youth to the time of his martyrdom in 1844, testify that these noble qualities characterized his life without variation from childhood to the grave. He had five brothers and three sisters, all well disposed, honest, industrious, and upright people. When Joseph was about 10 years of age the family removed to Palmyra, New York, and four years later they moved to Manchester, same county. He was now 14 years of age, old enough to think and reason for himself. It was a time of religious enthusiasm and Joseph became greatly interested in matters of religion. He began to inquire relative to the salvation of his soul. In this condition of mind he attended a joint sectarian revival, held by Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, etc. He listened attentively with a prayerful heart, the inclination to criticise being farthest from his thoughts. During the proceedings of the revival, he became keenly impressed with two great facts, one was that while they all professed Christ, they entertained conflicting views relative to the doctrines which Jesus and His apostles taught as being essential to salvation; the other important lesson which he learned was that the ministers of the denominations represented, were jealous and envious of each other in relation to the converts which came forward and joined the respective churches represented on that occasion. He concluded that God was not the author of this confusion, and that he could come to no certain knowledge of the truth from men preaching conflicting theories, yet each saying of his own denomination: "This is the way, follow me." Under these circumstances of uncertainty Joseph betook himself to a careful reading of the Scriptures. His heart was prayerful. He was honest to God and man. He wanted to know the truth. He knew, as all right thinking people must know, that all conflicting creeds could not be acceptable to God. For He is "not the author of confusion" but peace, and perfect order. In his perusal of the New Testament he came to the 1st chapter and 5th verse of James, which reads as follows: "If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him," etc.

Joseph was deeply impressed with this sacred promise, he knew that he lacked wisdom. He could not obtain that wisdom from uninspired men whose theories of God and the plan of salvation were a plain contradiction. He must therefore remain in darkness or take the advice of the Apostle James and ask of God. This he determined to do, and the following account of the exercise of his faith, is in his own language:

"It was on the morning of a beautiful, clear day, early in the spring of 1820. It was the first time in my life that I had made such an attempt, for amidst all my anxieties I had never as yet made the attempt to pray vocally. After I had retired into the place where I had previously designed to go, having looked around me and finding myself alone, I kneeled down, and began to offer up the desires of my heart to God. I had scarcely done so, when immediately, I was seized upon by some power which entirely overcame me, and had such astonishing influence over me as to bind my tongue so that I could not speak. Thick darkness gathered around me, and it seemed to me for a time as if I were doomed to sudden destruction. But exerting all my powers to call upon God to deliver me out of the power of this enemy which had seized upon me, and at the very moment when I was ready to sink into despair, and abandon myself to destruction, not to an imaginary ruin, but to the power of some actual being from the unseen world, who had such a marvellous power as I had never before felt in any being. Just at this moment of great alarm, I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me. It no sooner appeared than I found myself delivered from the enemy which held me bound. When the light rested upon me, I saw two personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said, (pointing to the other), "This is my beloved Son, hear him." (Pearl of Great Price, pages 59 and 60.)

As soon as Joseph recovered himself he asked the personages which of all the denominations was right. The answer was that none of them were right, and none of them had been founded by the Almighty . He was commanded to join none of them. "They teach for doctrine the commandments of man, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof.' This was his first vision, and oh, how glorious. After centuries of spiritual darkness, the heavens are again opened, the Father and the Son making their appearance and giving commandments unto man. Soon after this glorious vision Joseph related his experience to a preacher, when, to his great surprise, the professed minister treated it with great contempt, and like the Pharisees of old, said it was all of the Devil, but Joseph knew, like Paul, that he had seen a vision, and he knew that God knew it, and that he must bear witness of it to the world.

From this time on, the youthful Prophet became the subject of bitter persecution, yet he wavered not, but faithfully testified that he had seen a vision, and none could truthfully deny it. God has a right to show Himself to whomsoever and whenever he pleases. Furthermore Jesus Himself taught "And no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the father is but the son, and he to whom the son will reveal him." Luke x:22. Instead then of such a manifestation being unreasonable or unscriptural, it was an actual necessity in the establishment of the "Dispensation of the Fullness of Times." Joseph kept the commandment to join none of the sects. He says: "I continued to pursue my common avocations in life until the 21st of September, 1823, all the time suffering severe persecution at the hands of all classes of men, both religious and irreligious, because I continued to affirm that I had seen a vision." (Pearl of Great Price, p. 61.)

Those who should have been his friends if they believed him wrong, instead of trying in kindness to show him his error, ridiculed him, and without reason or charity heaped upon him persecution in various forms. After retiring to his bed, Sept. 21st, 1823, he was calling upon God in all humility for forgiveness of all his weaknesses and imperfections, when suddenly the room was filled with light and in the light appeared a most glorious Heavenly Being. This personage said his name was Moroni, and that he was sent of God. The messenger proceeded to inform the young man that he was chosen of God to accomplish a great work in the interest of human redemption, and that his name should be had for good and for evil among all nations. This prophecy has been and is being remarkably fulfilled wherever the Gospel in purity is preached and the name of Joseph Smith is known among the nations. His name is cast out as evil among the wicked. Those who "love darkness rather than light," who deny the Revelations of God, while those who are honestly seeking for truth and investigate the calling of Joseph Smith, are always led to hold his name for good, and hand it down to posterity as the name of a Great Prophet of the Most High. The messenger quoted many passages of the Bible which he said would be fulfilled in this Dispensation. Among them, Joel, chap. ii: v. 28-29; Mal. chap. iii; Acts iii: 22, 23; Isaiah, chap. ii, and said they were about to be fulfilled. He also showed him where a book was deposited in a hill near by, written upon gold plates, and giving an account of the ancient inhabitants of America, their origin and destiny. The fact that the Church of Christ had been established among them and that before and after Christ many mighty Prophets wrote and spoke upon the continent. Indeed the ancients of America were they of whom Jesus spake to the Jewish Apostles when he said, "other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." St. John x:16.

The angel Moroni appeared to the Prophet Joseph three times, the same night, repeating each of his preceding instructions, and adding to them, thus preparing the mind of the youthful Prophet for the great work before him. These visions occupied almost the entire night. Sept. 22nd, 1823, Joseph visited the hill where the plates were deposited, and at once recognized the place as the one shown him in vision the night before. "On the west side of this hill, not far from the top, under a stone of considerable size, lay the plates deposited in a stone box. This stone was thick and rounding in the middle on the upper side, and thinner toward the edges, so that the middle part of it was visible above the ground, but the edge all round was covered with earth. Having removed the earth and obtained a lever, which I got fixed under the edge of the stone, and with a little exertion raised it up; I looked in, and there indeed, did I behold the plates, the Urim and Thummin, and the breastplate, as stated by the messenger. The box in which they lay was formed by laying stones together in some kind of cement. In the bottom of the box were laid two stones crossways of the box, and on these stones lay the plates and the things with them. I made an attempt to take them out, but was forbidden by the messenger, and was again informed that the time for bringing them forth had not yet arrived, neither would arrive until four years from that time; but he told me that I should come to that place precisely in one year from that time, and that he would there meet with me, and that I should continue to do so, until the time should come for obtaining the plates." (Pearl of Great Price, p 66.)

The Prophet obeyed this injunction and each successive year, Sept. 22nd, met the angel Moroni on the sacred spot, and received from him many preparatory instructions. The angel had previously told him that because of his indigent circumstances he might be tempted to obtain the plates for worldly gain. If he entertained such a thought it was told him that he could not have them. They were to be published to all the world for the salvation of the human family and the glory of God. In the meantime Joseph and family, being poor, he was obliged to work with his hands at daily toil for a livelihood. He was engaged by a Mr. Stoal, of Chenango county, N. Y., to labor with other employes to dig a silver mine. From this circumstance arose the silly story that Joseph was a "money digger." During his employment by Mr. Stoal, Emma Hale, daughter of Isaac Hale, was married to Joseph Smith Jan. 18, 1827. Sept. 22nd, 1827, he received the sacred plates, from which the Book of Mormon was translated. The reader will find evidence that such a record was to come forth by reading the 85th Psalm, 11 verse; Isa. chap. xxix:9-12; and Ezekiel chap. xxxvii:15-21. No sooner had it become known that he had received these plates than persecution become more intense. Several attempts were made to wrest from him the sacred plates.

On the 15th of April, 1829, Olivery Cowdery came to Joseph Smith, having been lead to him by the spirit of the Lord. This was their first meeting. April 17, 1829, Joseph Smith commenced the translation of the Book of Mormon into the English language. Oliver Cowdery acted as scribe. Joseph translated by the gift and power of God, using the Urim and Thummim, an instrument used by ancient seers to translate languages. The following month, while translating the plates, they found mentioned the doctrine of Baptism for the remission of sins. They retired to the woods to enquire of the Lord respecting this subject, when a messenger from Heaven appeared to them, laid his hands upon them and ordained them as follows (May 15, 1829) "Upon you, my fellow-servants in the name of Messiah I confer the Priesthood or Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and the Gospel of repentance, and baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness." (Pearl of Great Price, p 70.)

This messenger was John the Baptist, the forerunner of the Messiah in ancient times. The messenger before his face in latter times. Read Malachi iii:1-4. The man who held the keys of the Levitical Priesthood, the authority to administer in the outward ordinances of the Gospel. He commanded them to baptize each other, and thus was established in the last days, the authority of God upon the earth to baptize in water for the remission of sins.

The Prophet Joseph subsequently moved to Pennsylvania and continued as circumstances would permit, the translation of the Book of Mormon, until it was completed. The first edition of the Book of Mormon consisting of 5000 copies, was published to the world early in the year 1830. Since then the Book of Mormon has been published in Danish, Italian, French, German, Welch, Swedish, Hawaiian and Spanish, and translated into other tongues, but not yet published. The progress in publishing this sacred volume in different tongues points to the fulfillment to prophecy that it should be read by the people of every nation. During the translation Joseph was assisted by Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris, David Whitmer, his wife, Emma Smith and others. While engaged in the work of translation, many important revelations were given to the Prophet, and many important, yet trying events took place which served to test the faith, sincerity, devotion, courage and integrity of this youthful Prophet of God. All these manifestations and the great work accomplished up to 1830, took place before he was 25 years of age. In the meantime, himself and Oliver Cowdery had been visited by Peter, James and John and received under their hands the Melchisedec Priesthood, which holds the keys to open the door of the Gospel to all nations and establish in fulness the church and kingdom of God upon the earth. Before the book was translated, Martin Harris took some characters copied from the plates to Prof. Anthon, a learned linguist in New York . The learned man examined the characters and gave a certificate to Martin Harris certifying that they were correct characters from the Egyptian, and that the translation was correct. He asked Mr. Harris where Joseph obtained the plates. Upon being answered that an angel of the Lord had delivered them, Prof. Anthon asked for the certificate which was handed him by Mr. Harris, and by Prof. Anthon torn up in anger, as he denounced the ministering of angels in this age of the world. He told Mr. Harris to bring him the book and he would translate it. He was answered that part of the plates were sealed. Upon which information, the professor answered "I cannot read a sealed book." Little did he think that in using these words, he was fulfilling the prophecy of Isaiah, chap. 29, and thus presenting to the world a testimony of the truth of the Book of Mormon.

From Prof. Anthon Mr. Harris went to Dr. Mitchell, who also pronounced the characters true and the translation correct. While translating they ascertained that three especial witnesses were to be called by the Lord to witness the plates by the gift and power of God.

Accordingly Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer and Martin Harris were chosen. They were shown the plates by the same Heavenly messenger, Moroni, and they handled them with their hands. Their testimony, expressed in most solemn terms is published to the world on the fly leaf of each edition of the Book of Mormon. Notwithstanding these three men fell away from the Church through transgression or neglect, they never, under any circumstance, denied their solemn testimony of the Divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon. On the contrary, they repeated their testimony time and again, and in their dying hours, when soon to pass to the great beyond, they bore witness that they had seen an angel and the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. In the spring of 1882 the writer of this letter, in company with President John Morgan, visited David Whitmer at his home in Richmond, Mo., and found him firm and unflinching respecting his published testimony concerning the Book of Mormon. It showed how firmly riveted upon his memory and how constant to this testimony this man was, an interesting incident is related by President Ben E. Rich, the president of the Southern States Mission. Elder Rich mailed his autograph album to David Whitner and requested him to write therein, without the slightest suggestion as to what he should write. To the joyful astonishment of Elder Rich, when the album was returned, it contained these emphatic words:

"My testimony in the Book of Mormon is Truth. David Whitmer."

His associate witnesses, Oliver Cowdery and Martin Harris were equally constant to their obligation, and bore witness to the end of their days that they saw the angel and the plates. "In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established."

On Tuesday, the 6th day of April, 1830, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized with six members in the house of Peter Whitmer, Sr., Fayette, Seneca county, N. Y. The six members were Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, Hyrum Smith, Peter Whitmer, Jr., Samuel H. Smith and David Whitmer. No church organization could exist under the laws of New York with a less membership than six. Truly the Church of Christ in the last days, compared with other organizations, was as Jesus prophesied it should be, like a "grain of mustard seed," the smallest of all, and like the "stone cut from the mountain without hands," had no human origin, and was in no sense the outgrowth of any other organization. In this organization Joseph Smith was the chosen head, the Prophet, Seer and Revelator, and continued so when members increased so that the presidency and Twelve Apostles could be organized as in olden times, and subsequently Seventies, High Priests, Elders, Bishops, Priests, Teachers and Deacons, after the ancient pattern.

The organization of the church brought with it more persecution, and as the church grew and prospered, Joseph's life was many times endangered, until finally he was called to seal his testimony with his blood. Healing of the sick, prophecy, speaking in tongues, and all the beautiful gifts in the primative church attended those who embraced the restored Gospel then as they do today, and always will, and as in ancient times were attributed to Beelzebub, the prince of Devils. On one occasion, soon after the organization of the church, a mob swore out a complaint against the Prophet, charging him with being a disorderly person, because he set the country in an uproar by preaching the Book of Mormon, working miracles, etc. The constable who served the warrant was honest enough to inform Joseph that the mob designed to capture him as the constable, with the prisoner, passed near where the mob was congregated. The constable, however, finding the Prophet to be an honest, upright man, fled with him, in his wagon so that the mob failed to secure their victim. Joseph underwent a trial and was honorably acquitted, the evidence showing that he was a peaceable, orderly citizen in all respects.

As it would be impossible, in a brief article, to give, in any detail, an account of the mobbings, trials and persecutions through which this great man of God passed, it may be well to here remark that no less than 39 times was he brought before courts on trumped up charges, tried, and each time honorably acquitted. The last instance of this kind, the mob in attendance made the remark: "If the law cannot reach him, powder and lead shall." How like the experience of our Savior. When Pilate found him innocent, the rabble clamored for his blood, crying out, "Crucify him, crucify him, and let his blood be upon us and our children." How terribly their words have fallen upon them, and in like manner the men who comprised the mob, and the conspirators who brought about the assasination of the Prophet Joseph Smith have come to a miserable end, having suffered the wrath of God in the flesh.

At a conference of the church, Sept. 1, 2, and 3, 1830, Joseph received two revelations, found in Sec. 30 and 31, Doc. and Cov. In one of these revelations the Lord commanded the Prophet to open the door of the Gospel to the Lamanites or American Indians of whom the Book of Mormon is a record of their forefathers.

The brethren selected to perform this great and important mission were Oliver Cowdery, Parley P. Pratt, Peter Whitmer, Jr., and Ziba Peterson. Previous to Elder Pratt's conversion to the Gospel, he was a Campbellite preacher, associated with Sidney Rigdon and others who had established a large following in and about Kirtland O. En route to the west, where they were destined to deliver the glorious message to the Indians, they visited Kirtland, and presented the Book of Mormon, and the mission of the Prophet Joseph to Sidney Rigdon and his associates of the Campbellite profession. SidneyRigdon had never seen the Prophet Joseph Smith, and never before heard the proclamation of "Mormonism." This fact is worthy of note, since the enemies of this work have circulated the oft-repeated falsehood that the Book of Mormon was the combined production of Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon. It is also an interesting fact that the Prophet predicted in the early opening of this Dispensation that if the people would not receive the Revelations from God through him, that Lucifer would give them revelations to their heart's content. Strange to say what is now known as spiritualism was not known in the United States until after the organization of this Church, and then it commenced in the state of New York. Today the spurious Revelations of the adversary are circulated broadcast through clairvoyants, mediums, etc., giving no light, no knowledge, of the great principles of Eternal Life as enunciated by the Lord Jesus Christ. Well did Isaiah speak of these days, saying, "and when they shall say unto you, seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and that mutter. Should not a people seek unto their God for the living to the dead?" Isa. viii:19.

In 1831 the Prophet removed to Kirtland, O., which had now become the headquarters of the Church. On the 6th of June, this year, the fourth general conference of the Church was held in Kirtland. The Saints numbered about 2000 at this date, and constantly increasing. At this conference many Elders were called by Revelation to go forth two by two, to preach the Gospel and baptize as the apostles did in ancient times. They were to journey westward, preaching and baptizing by the way, and all meet in Missouri, where the next conference should be held, and where, if they were faithful, the Lord would reveal to the Prophet the location of their promised inheritance.

Farewell! a long farewell, to all my greatness!
This is the state of man; today he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope; tomorrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honors thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

The cause of human liberty is the cause of God.—Joseph Smith.

Teach men correct principles and they will govern themselves.

Applause is the spur of noble minds, the end and aim of weak ones.—C. C. Colton.

"Our affections should be placed upon God and His work more intensely than upon our fellow-beings."

We would respectfully ask all Elders laboring in the Southern States Mission to keep us informed concerning all parties, Mormon or non-Mormon, who contemplate going west, as we can furnish tickets as cheaply as can be obtained. Notification postal cards can be had on application at this office.

THE REAL HERO.

It is gratifying to note the willingness with which the servants of the Lord respond to every call that is made of them. It is written in the Scriptures that he who is not willing to forsake father, mother, wives, children, etc., is not worthy to be called a disciple of Christ.

The Master, one time speaking, said that the first and great commandment was to love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and that the second is like unto it, to love thy neighbor. He truly is great and noble who seeks the good of others. This is the only motive for which the Elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints leave their homes. They receive no pay; travel about as did our Savior, with no place to rest, and receive the scoffs and jeers of a giddy world. Only a few days ago we received a letter from one of our Elders who has been laboring for about two years in the missionary field, receiving all manner of harsh treatment, and in one instance having to flee under cover of darkness to escape with his life. He writes: "I received notice Dec. 15 that I was to be released to return to my loved ones. * * * This gives me joy, if I can receive from both you and my Conference President an honorable release, and that you can justly say that I have done my duty to the best of my ability. This notice came sooner than I expected, yet I consider it as inspired, for my only son, large enough to work, unfortunately broke his leg, and consequently the work on the farm would have to rest until some one could come to take his place. Seed time is fast approaching in Arizona, and this release, coming now in the midst of these troubles, I consider as providential. Notwithstanding these circumstances, I am anxious to do my whole duty in the missionary field. I have enjoyed my mission and have great concern for the spread of truth. I realize that every individual must have the privilege of hearing the Gospel, and that every knee must bow and every tongue confess that Jesus is the Christ. For this reason I have worked with all the energy I have to preach the Gospel of peace to the people, and have tried to do them good wherever I could."

What spirit actuates men of this kind? No salary; no friends; no luxuries. On the other hand, mockings, ridicule, mobbings, and all manner of persecutions.

Who in very deed has the love of God and their fellow-men in their hearts? Those who forsake all for the Gospel's sake, and preach without pay, or those men who are called to preach for the two or three thousand dollars a year that is in it, and who seldom if ever condescend to visit a poor person because the coin is not forthcoming?

The real hero is the man who lives for others, and when the time shall come that hate, envy, prejudice and the dross of this world has been removed, the sacrifice made for others by the humble "Mormon" Elders will cause thousands, yea millions, to rise up and call them blessed. What star in the firmament could be given greater luster than this? They are the pure in heart and they shall see God.

Repentance is a meritorious condition, precedent to forgiveness; but pretense at repentance is a sin of hypocrisy which puts a darker shadow on the other offenses.—Deseret News.

WHAT IS THEIR MOTIVE?

At this office we receive many letters from people, asking for aid in various ways: for enlightenment on the principles of the Gospel, and a "hundred and one" other things which trouble the writers. Each letter reflects to some degree the conception the author has of us as a people, and occasionally we receive letters from persons apparently well informed, except when it comes to "the Mormons," asking us to find a wife for them, help a belligerent husband get away to a place of safety, or some such other glaringly absurd inconsistency.

No doubt some of these inquirers hope by posing as they do to get us to do or say something that they can use against us and are in the employ of his Satanic Majesty, while others, we believe, are sincere, honest inquirers, but have been misled by the many falsehoods circulated against us almost continually. It must pain the evil-minded to learn the truth, and find, to their discomfiture, that we are not advocating or lending a helping hand to anything contrary to right, and whenever anyone calls on the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to assist in anything that is not virtuous, honest and righteous, he takes cold comfort indeed in the answer received. The Gospel does not tolerate wickedness of any nature, and when the world eventually comes to know "Mormonism" as it is people will cease to ask its aid in nefarious schemes.

We give below a fair sample of letters sometimes received and the answer thereto, which will give Star readers an idea of some of our correspondence. The letters are published by way of illustration, and with no desire to wound the feelings of the party concerned should he see his letter in print:

* * * * Dec. 12th, 1899.

"Mr. Benj. E. Rich, President, the Southern Mormon Mission, Chattanooga, Tenn.

"After mature deliberation I am seriously contemplating presenting myself as an applicant for admission into your faith and religion, and write you for further information on the subject. If necessary I could make a trip to Chattanooga to see you, or, if any of your Elders were in * * * * I could arrange a meeting with them, at which we could talk over a great many things, which, by correspondence, is very unsatisfactory. I would like to know first of all what chance I would have for making a living in Utah. I am fitted by experience and schooling for almost any branch of business, and all that I want is an opportunity to make my way in the world. I am a stenographer, having my own machine, on which this letter is written, a bookkeeper, having traveled three years for a Cincinnati firm, and have had experience in railroad work, as shipping clerk, and, in fact, in almost all branches of business. As to my ability, responsibility, character, reputation, honesty, etc., I can furnish the best of references, including the heads of all corporations for which I have worked, including the one with which I am at present identified. I am not an adventurer, but, as I said before, have come to this conclusion after mature thought, but would like to have a further understanding before taking the step. Should I finally decide to do so, I can take quite a number of reputable young ladies and gentlemen with me, especially ladies.

"As I am not positive as to whether or not this letter will reach you, I would ask that you address your first reply to

* * * * , to which I will give you immediate reply.

"Thanking you in advance for a prompt response, I am, very truly yours,

* * *"

Chattanooga, Tenn., Dec. 24, 1899.

Dear Sir—We beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 12th inst., and in reply wish to say that we hope we are mistaken, but your letter seems a little strange to us. The part of your letter where you say that should you go to Utah that you could take quite a number of reputable young ladies and gentlemen with you, especially ladies, does not strike us just right, and we fear that you have not the true conception of what the world has nicknamed "Mormonism."

"Mormonism" is the Gospel of Jesus Christ in its purity, and is not in any sense of the word a system of lust. It requires those who would enjoy the blessings promised to be honest, upright and virtuous, and we are not seeking for converts except from the pure-minded. We do not beg people to join our Church and let the applicants make the conditions like the churches of modern Christianity. If you embrace the Gospel and live up to its requirements we can promise that you will be hated, despised and persecuted just as were the Former-day Saints and just as are the Latter-day Saints. "Mormonism" is an individual religion, and everyone that embraces it must know for themselves whether it is true or not. If he pins his faith to some one else he will not be able to stand the jeers and scoffs of the world, but the promise of Christ was "keep my commandments and ye shall know of the doctrine."

There is absolute freedom in the Church of Jesus Christ and there is no compulsion in it whatever, and although we look upon our leaders as inspired men, which they are, the cry in the world about us being a Priest-ridden people is as false as the other stories that are told of us, and we are not half as much Priest-ridden as the members of the so-called Christian churches. Every man great or small, will stand before the judgment bar of God and there be judged according to the works done here upon the earth.

Now, as to employment, the Saints help each other as much as they can to get employment, and believe that the best kind of charity is that kind which teaches people to be independent and work for themselves. They also believe in helping others, believing it their duty to help all that they can who are in need. regardless of political or religious belief. Utah is a good state and we believe will eventually become one of the greatest commonwealths in the Union. Honest, upright and capable men are in demand there as well as in other places, and we think, as you seem to have all these qualifications, that there should be no reason why you could not make a comfortable living in Utah. The people of Utah are wide awake and progressive and free to acknowledge worth wherever they find it.

I think now that I have answered your questions, and I will at any time be glad to furnish you with any information in my power. I hope that my idea of your letter is not correct, and that you are honestly seeking for the principles of truth. We have Elders laboring in * * * * and they can be found at * * * *. I will also be in * * * * on Saturday next, arriving on the Queen and Crescent 7:45 a.m. train, and should you desire to talk to me will be happy to meet you.

With best wishes for your welfare, I remain yours very truly,

BEN E. RICH.

Arthur Candland came to the city yesterday from Mt. Pleasant to undergo an operation for ossification of the right shoulder joint, the ball and socket seeming to have grown together, depriving Mr. Candland of the use of the arm. A very painful operation is necessary. Dr. S. H. Pinkerton will have charge of the case.—Herald.

Brother Candland has just returned from a mission to the Southern States, having labored in the Georgia Conference. We earnestly hope that the operation may be successful in every respect.

History of the Southern Stetes Mission.

January, 1894.

On the 4th of this month Elders W. G. Patrick, G. L. Braley and Alvin Smith were arrested by two constables at the home of Brother Sloan in Columbia, S. C., on the sworn complaint of a prominent Methodist, Coughman by name, whom the Elders had never seen, on a charge of vagrancy. They were taken before Justice Taylor, who fined Elders Braley and Smith $10 each. Elder Patrick was released, it being proven that he had been in the neighborhood but a few days. The Columbia papers took up the case and denounced it as an outrage. The columns of the papers were opened to the Elders, and thus they had an excellent opportunity to explain the Gospel. During this same month the Texas Conference as opened. Elders John K. Nicholson and Samuel H. Wells arrived in Hunt county June 18, where they were favorably received.

July.

During this month the Elders were advised to visit the branches of the church to encourage the members. They were also to organize Sunday schools and branches of the church. Marvelous success accompanied this work, as many of the fields had not been visited in a numberof years. Baptisms were numerous, and much good in many ways was done.

August.

During this month President Elias S. Kimball visited some of the Conferences in the mission. The first Conference visited was the West Virginia, where a most enjoyable time was had. From here he went to Virginia, holding conference in Louisa county. A pleasant spirit prevailed throughout this conference, and expressions of gratitude were profuse for the splendid way in which it was conducted. North Carolina was the next Conference visited, where a similarly good time was had.

Aug. 20. Elders E. A. Griffin, G. M. Smith, Thomas Priday, Jr., and W. H. Ingham were mobbed near Colfax. At about 11 o'clock the mobbers came and demanded the Elders. After securing them they departed into the woods about seven miles, where they gave them the choice of leaving the state or being whipped. The Elders chose the latter, preferring to do their duty and obey God rather than man. When they called for the first one to take his place, ready for the lash, Elder Griffin stepped forth, but his courage caused the wretches to weaken. After the Elders consented to leave the county they were allowed to depart. (To Be Continued.)

ABSTRACTS FROM CORRESPONDENCE

We regret that lack of space will prevent us from printing an article we received from Elder John T. Horne. He very plainly shows that it is very necessary that we should have inspired men to lead us. That unless ecclesiastical leaders enjoy the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, their opinions are no better than any other equally intelligent men. They will deny absolutely the need of revelation, and yet Paul says that the natural man without the Spirit of God cannot understand the things of God, and one office of the Spirit was to partake of the things of God and reveal them unto us. Little need we marvel that people are continually "falling in the ditch."

Sister Martha Crutcher, writing from Kentucky, expresses her heartfelt satisfaction with the church. She states that she joined the church about fifteen months ago, and since that time has been persecuted by heartless people, who have heaped all manner of indignities upon her. Continuing, she says: "I am taught in the Bible that all who live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. Also those who endure to the end will be saved. I endure cheerfully these persecutions and constantly pray that I may have strength to endure until I shall be called to the Master."

Sister Leona Pearl Crolley, of Bingham, South Carolina, expresses her happiness at being permitted to live when the Gospel has been restored. She says that even though unjustly persecuted, she can endure with faith, hope and charity, because she knows that the Gospel as taught by the Latter-day Saints is true, and that if she endures to the end she will be saved.

Coming Conferences.

Mississippi and Lousiana Conferences combined will be held at New Orleans Jan. 20-21.

Georgia Conference, Macon, Ga., Jan. 27-28.

South Carolina, Columbia, Feb. 3-4.

Florida, Jacksonville, Feb. 11-12.

The conference of Conference Presidents will be held Feb. 17 and 18, at Chattanooga.

REMARKS BY PRESIDENT GEORGE Q. CANNON.

The Saints the Saviors of Men—The Unfaithful is Like Salt That Has Lost Its Savor—Redemption of Zion May be Deferred by Disobedience—Prophets and Apostles Like Other Men—Responsibility of Parents—Benign Genius of the Kingdom of God.

DELIVERED IN SALT LAKE TABERNACLE SUNDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1899.

I will read a portion of the 84th Section of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants:

"17. Which Priesthood continueth in the Church of God in all generations, and is without beginning of days or end of years.

"18. And the Lord confirmed a Priesthood also upon Aaron and his seed, throughout all their generations—which Priesthood also continueth and abideth for ever with the Priesthood, which is after the holiest order of God.

"19. And this greater Priesthood administereth the Gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom even the key of the knowledge of God;

"20. Therefore, in the ordinances thereof, the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh;

"21. And without the ordinances thereof, and the authority of the Priesthood, the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh;

"22. For without this no man can see the face of God, even the Father, and live.

"23. Now this Moses plainly taught to the children of Israel in the wilderness, and sought diligently to sanctify his people that they might behold the face of God;

"24. But they hardened their hearts and could not endure his presence, therefore the Lord in His wrath (for His anger was kindled against them) swore that they should not enter into His rest while in the wilderness, which rest is the fullness of His glory.

"25. Therefore he took Moses out of their midst, and the Holy Priesthood also;

"26. And the lesser Priesthood continued, which Priesthood holdeth the key of the ministering of angels and the preparatory Gospel;

"27. Which Gospel is the Gospel of repentance and of baptism, and the remission of sins, and the law of carnal commandments, which the Lord in His wrath caused to continue with the house of Aaron among the children of Israel until John, whom God raised up, being filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb;

"28. For he was baptized while he was yet in his childhood, and was ordained by the angel of God at the time he was eight days old unto this power, to overthrow the kingdom of the Jews, and to make straight the way of the Lord before the face of His people, to prepare them for the coming of the Lord, in whose hand is given all power.

"29. And again, the offices of Elder and Bishop are necessary appendages belonging unto the High Priesthood.

"30. And again, the offices of Teacher and Deacon are necessary appendages belonging to the lesser Priesthood, which Priesthood was confirmed upon Aaron and his sons.

"31. Therefore, as I said concerning the sons of Moses—for the sons of Moses; and also the sons of Aaron shall offer an acceptable offering and sacrifice in the house of the Lord, which house shall be built unto the Lord in this generation, upon the consecrated spot as I have appointed;

"32. And the sons of Moses and of Aaron shall be filled with the glory of the Lord, upon Mount Zion in the Lord's house, whose sons are ye; and also many whom I have called and sent forth to build up my Church.

"33. For whoso is faithful unto the obtaining these two Priesthoods of which I have spoken, and the magnifying their calling, are sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies;

"34. They become the sons of Moses and of Aaron and the seed of Abraham, and the Church and kingdom, and the elect of God;

"35. And also all they who receive this Priesthood receiveth me sayeth the Lord;

"36. For he that receiveth my servants receiveth me;

"37. And he that receiveth me receiveth my Father;

"38. And he that receiveth my Father, receiveth my Father's kingdom; therefore all that my Father hath shall be given unto him;

"39. And this is according to the oath and covenant which belongeth to the Priesthood.

"40. Therefore all those who receive the Priesthood, receive this oath and covenant of my Father, which he cannot break, neither can it be moved;

"41. But whoso breaketh this covenant, after he hath received it and altogether turneth therefrom, shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor in the world to come.

"42. And all those who come not unto this Priesthood which ye have received, which I now confirm upon you who are present this day, by mine own voice out of the Heavens, and even I have given the Heavenly hosts and mine angels charge concerning you.

"43. And I now give unto you a commandment to beware concerning yourselves, to give diligent heed to the words of eternal life;

"44. For you shall live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God.

"45. For the word of the Lord is truth, and whatsoever is truth is light, and whatsoever is light is Spirit, even the Spirit of Jesus Christ."

In standing up to address you I do so relying entirely upon the blessing of God, which I hope to obtain by the assistance of your faith and prayers. To my mind, it is one of the most responsible positions a human being can occupy, to address a congregation upon the things pertaining to God and eternity. I feel the weight of this responsibility, and I would not attempt to speak to you, did I not know that it is our privilege to have the assistance of the Spirit of God. During this conference we have heard most excellent discourses, accompanied by the power of God. The Spirit has been abundantly poured out. It seems to me that no man or woman could listen to the words of the Apostles who have spoken without being convinced that God was with them. This is my feeling, and I can bear testimony to the truth of that which has been said. It will be a savor of life unto life or of death unto death to all those who have listened.

We are living in a very important time. The Lord is evidently working with His servants and people. He is manifesting His Spirit in a remarkable manner. I think it has been felt by every faithful Latter Day Saint throughout the Church. Not only has it extended throughout Zion, but it has been felt by the Elders and Saints, so far as we have heard, in distant places. In 1856 the Spirit of God was poured out in great power upon the servants of God in Zion. I was on a mission at the time, as doubtless were very many Elders, some of whom may be present today; and we had the same Spirit where I was laboring. The Lord stirred us up in the same way that our brethren at home were being stirred up. The Spirit of reformation went throughout the entire Church. The people were stirred from the depth of their hearts by the power of God. The effects of that reformation were most excellent. A great many adopted good resolutions which, I am led to believe, they clung to all their lives, and are still clinging to them if they are alive. They have served God with greater diligence than they ever did before. I do not doubt that will be the effect of these meetings. I expect to see a thorough reformation of the people, and renewed determination to keep the commandments of God more strictly than ever before.

In connection with this I will read another portion of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that occurs to my mind. It is a revelation that was given in 1834, soon after the occurrences which President Snow read about yesterday. They took place in Jackson county, November, 1833, and this revelation was given to the Prophet the succeeding February. The Lord says:

"1. Verily I say unto you, my friends, behold I will give unto you a revelation and commandment, that you may know how to act in the discharge of your duties concerning the salvation and redemption of your brethren, who have been scattered on the land of Zion;

"2. Being driven and smitten by the hands of mine enemies, on whom I will pour out my wrath without measure in mine own time;

"3. For I have suffered them thus far, that they might fill up the measure of their iniquities, that their cup might be full;

"4. And that those who call themselves after my name might be chastened for a little season with a sore and grievous chastisement, because they did not hearken altogether unto the precepts and commandments which I gave unto them."

This has been dwelt upon with great fullness by nearly all the brethren who have spoken at this conference. They have called attention to the fact that the Saints were scourged in those early days because of their disobedience. The Lords here explains and describes to the Church very plainly the reasons why they were so grievously and severely chastened:

"And that those who call themselves after my name might be chastened for a little season with a sore and grievous chastisement, because they did not hearken altogether unto the precepts and commandments which I gave unto them."

The Lord continues:

"5. But verily I say unto you, that I have decreed a decree which my people shall realize, inasmuch as they hearken from this very hour, unto the counsel which I, the Lord their God, shall give unto them.

"6. Behold they shall, for I have decreed it, begin to prevail against mine enemies from this very hour,

"7. And by hearkening to observe all the words which I, the Lord their God, shall speak unto them, they shall never cease to prevail until the kingdoms of the world are subdued under my feet, and the earth is given unto the Saints, to possess it for ever and ever.

"8. But inasmuch as they keep not my commandments, and hearken not to observe all my words, the kingdoms of the world shall prevail against them,

"9. For they were set to be a light unto the world, and to be the saviors of men;

"10. And inasmuch as they are not the saviors of men, they are as salt that has lost its savor, and is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men."

There cannot be a doubt in any faithful man's mind concerning the truth of this promise—the promise of victory and deliverance on the one hand, the promise of punishment, disaster and trouble on the other. The Latter Day Saints have in their experience proved fully the truth of these words. They have seen them fulfilled to the very letter. When they have been faithful in keeping the commandments of God they have prospered and they have had deliverance. When they have been unfaithful they met with trouble and serious difficulty. It is necessary that the wicked should have the opportunity to exericise their agency in relation to the work of God; for they have an agency as well as we. It is their privilege to assist in building up the work of God, or they can exercise their agency in fighting the work of God. They have the privilege to do everything in their power to destroy it, and they will be permitted to do this until the cup of their iniquity is full. The Lord deals justly with His children, no matter who they are. Not only Latter Day Saints, but all mankind are the children of our Heavenly Father, and all have their agency. When we quote these sayings of the Lord concerning this work, they are not peculiar to us; the promises are not intended for us alone; they are intended for all who will believe and obey His Gospel. Many people imagine that when we talk about the triumph of the Church of God we mean to confine that triumph to those who belong to our Church. Not so; this is for the whole world. It is for all America, as well as for Utah. God has made most glorious promises to this nation. According to the revelations in the Book of Mormon concerning our own nation, the Lord has destined to make it the head of all nations of the earth, to adopt it as His nation and as His government, if the people would receive the Gospel; and He would make them the means of saving the remnants of His covenant people, and doing other mighty works. This is all foreshadowed in the prophecies contained in the Book of Mormon.

Joseph Smith, prompted by this Spirit—the man whom God has spoken to; a Prophet of God—condescended to proffer himself as a candidate for the Presidency of the United States. Many people thought this was ambition on his part; that he wanted to rule; that he aspired to power, and that he would use it for the carrying out of his own plans and forwarding the interests of his own people. Joseph Smith had no such idea. He was prompted, as a Prophet of God and as a patriot, to step forward and offer himself as a candidate, that the nation might receive the fulfillment of the promises which the Lord had made concerning it. He gave his views on the power and policy of the United States; and any man who will read those views today will see how much salvation there is embodied in the principles he set forth. A bloody war might have been averted; millions of treasure might have been saved; thousands upon thousands of lives might also have been saved, if they had only received him as a deliverer, God having inspired him to take that course. In relation to this we have the same feelings today. Men accuse us of being unpatriotic, of not being friendly, and of having designs inimical to the peace and prosperity of the land. I say to you today, in the presence of God, that no more patriotic people live upon the continent of America than the Latter Day Saints. We want to see the constitution of this country preserved, that every man shall enjoy the rights guaranteed by that grand instrument of liberty which God inspired the framers to make. But we differ from many people in regard to our views concerning the manner in which the government should be administered. And we think, as free men, descended from a free ancestry, we have a right to differ from them, and to express our feelings upon this point with the utmost freedom; that we are not traitors when we do so, but are the friends of the government and of the rights of human beings in the government. You know, my brethren and sisters, that this is our attitude on this question. We would like to see this government so stable that it will never be thrown down. It can only be made so by adhering to the principles which animated the founders of the government, and which they hoped to perpetuate through the constitution and the laws that were enacted.

We are told in this revelation that the wicked, when the cup of their iniquity is full, will receive their judgment. But the Latter Day Saints are called upon to obey the commandments of God. He has revealed himself with power to them. He bears testimony to them all the time concerning His great work that He is seeking to establish in the earth. He wants to make us the saviors of men. He calls us the salt of the earth. We are the salt of the earth. We are not conceited in saying this, because the acts of the faithful Latter Day Saints are such as to bring salvation to those who are connected with them. I wish to illustrate this so that you can see it for yourselves. Look around you and see the men and the women who have proved themselves unworthy of the principles of the Gospel, and have departed from them. Are they not like salt that has lost its savor? We have had hundreds of them; they have got indifferent; they have lost their savor, and are good for nothing. The Saints are compared to salt that has its saving properties. Wherever we go we should be savoirs of men. We should seek for the salvation of the human family to the fullest extent in our power. God has called us to this. He has given unto us the Holy Priesthood, and He has pled with us now for these many years. Think of it! this revelation from which I have read last was given in 1834, nearly sixty-six years ago. The promise was then made unto the Saints that if they would keep the commandments of God they should prevail from that very hour. Is it not true that this would have been fulfilled to the very letter if we had kept His commandments? But we have not done so. We have been a disobedient people, notwithstanding all that God has done for us. We have not honored His laws; and I sometimes think we are like our ancestors, the children of Israel (for God has said that we are of the seed of Abraham) who were led out of Egypt by mighty power. The Lord wrought wonders in their behalf. He inspired Moses to lead the people along so that they could see the face of God, that they could have the Melchisedek Priesthood continued among them, and become a nation of kings and priests; but they were hard in their hearts and rejected the word of God. The result was that for forty years they wandered in the wilderness, and all that generation were buried in the wilderness, except two men. Two men only out of the vast host that left Egypt under the leadership of Moses, ever reached the promised land, and they were Caleb and Joshua. The Lord had a new generation. The fathers had rejected Him, and He took the Melchisedek Priesthood from their midst, with Moses, and He gave unto them the lesser Priesthood, which was confirmed upon Aaron and his seed. They administered the law of carnal commandments. And this because they did not have faith enough to receive all that Moses was willing to teach them!

Shall we be in the same condition? Shall we, through hardness of heart and disobedience to God and His servants, bring upon ourselves the same penalty? I do not believe we will. I am sure we will not reject the Melchisedek Priesthood, its power and its ordinances. But I do fear that we will defer the redemption of Zion indefinitely through our unwillingness to do the things that God requires at our hands. I have not an earthly doubt that this revelation given in 1834 would have been fulfilled to the very letter, had our people obeyed the Lord as He desired; neither do I believe now that the redemption of Zion will be long deferred if the people will obey the Lord and keep His commandments. But the difficulty is, our hearts are hard and almost impenetrable, in many instances. Here President Snow has been preaching for four months now in relation to the payment of tithing; he has been laboring with all his might to the astonishment of all those who know his age; and yet he cannot rest—he has to here preach it again, because he feels that the people need to be stirred up. I tell you that all that is not for nothing. I tell you that the man of God is not aroused and inspired for nothing. There is a meaning to it. And I feel that great condemnation—such condemnation probably as has never rested upon us before, will rest upon this people unless they obey with all their hearts, the words of the Lord that He has given to us through His servant.

We need to be born again, and have new hearts put in us. There is too much of the old leaven about us. We are not born again as we should be. Do you not believe that we ought to be born again? Do you not believe that we should become new creatures in Christ Jesus, under the influence of the Gospel? All will say, yes, who understand the Gospel. You must be born again. You must have new desires, new hearts, so to speak, in you. But what do we see? We see men following the ways of the world just as much as though they made no pretensions to being Latter Day Saints. Hundreds of people who are called Latter Day Saints you could not distinguish from the world. They have the same desires, the same feelings, the same aspirations, the same passions as the rest of the world. Is this how God wants us to be? No; He wants us to have new hearts, new desires. He wants us to be a changed people when we embrace His Gospel, and to be animated by entirely new motives, and have a faith that will lay hold of the promises of God. But the trouble is, the Prophets of God walk around among you, and you see them all the time. "Why, I saw Lorenzo Snow today, and he is just like any other man. I saw Joseph F. Smith, and if I had not known, I might have taken him for anyone else. I saw some of the Apostles, and they are like other men." And because they are like other men, therefore they must be rejected. It is supposed that they have more power than others. That is a mistake that the world has always made. There was Moses, one of the mightiest Prophets that ever lived. Did the children of Israel see anything particularly mighty in Moses? No; he was one of them, and they saw nothing exceptional about him. Then there was Nephi, another mighty Prophet. Brother Grant read to us a description of him. Did Nephi's brethren see anything mighty in him? Why, no; there was nothing to distinguish him particularly; and yet he was a mighty Prophet whom God had raised up. So it was with the Son of God Himself, the mightiest being that ever trod the earth. He descended from the throne of His Father and came to earth; but men saw nothing in Him different to other men, and they crucified Him. Thus it has been in every age. There have only been a few who have ever discovered the power of God as manifested through His servants. It is so today. Who recognized Joseph Smith as one of the mightiest Prophets that ever lived? Why, the Saints themselves received with reluctance the truths he taught, and men slew him, and may possibly have thought they were doing God's service in doing so. So it has been with those who have followed him and have held the keys of authority. They have passed among their fellow men and received but little recognition. Men could see all their faults and failings, and could talk about them one to another; but they could not see the divinity in them. It is the same with the servants of God in our midst today. They are but mortal men, and we see their weaknesses and their defects of character. These become magnified in our eyes, and we talk freely about them. The result is, we receive their words with reluctance; we question the word of God that comes through them, and wonder if it is not alloyed with something of their own.

What we all need is faith—faith in God, faith to believe that which He tells us. Here the brethren have been laboring for days to tell us what blessings will attend obedience to the law of tithing—how our storehouses will be filled, our fields be fertile, etc., in this way appealing to our selfishness. We seem to be able to reach the people better by appealing to their selfish instincts. If we can make them believe that they are going to get something in return for what they do, it seems to be more effective than any other way. It is true that these blessings will follow; but it shows, my brethren and sisters, how our hearts have to be reached. We do not have faith. If we had faith as we should have, it would not be necessary to use such arguments. We are like the children of Israel when they fled out of Egypt. They did not have faith. They were enveloped in the traditions of their fathers. They were an idolatrous people, and had lived among the Egyptians until they had imbibed many of their false notions. It took forty years wandering in the wilderness to get rid of the traditions they had imbibed, notwithstanding the mighty works which God did in their midst. We should endeavor to profit by the lessons of the past. Let us put away our hardness of heart. Let us be a distinct people. Let us try to realize that we should be born of God, that we should have new desires in our hearts; that we should put away everything that is offensive in the sight of God, and endeavor to live in strict conformity to the laws and commandments that He has given unto us. There is a class of people in our midst that probably will not be obedient. We shall have that to contend with as long as Satan is unbound; for he has power over the hearts of the children of men. But we should endeavor to lessen his power to the extent of our ability.

In this connection a great deal depends upon the parents. My parents were exceedingly strict in exacting obedience from their children. The lessons I learned in my boyhood I have never forgotten. They have been of service to me in my labors among the people and with the servants of God. I do not wish to say anything of a boastful nature, but I never have had the least difficulty thus far in my life in obeying the servants of God. This habit of obedience was formed in me when I was a child, and I have thanked God many times that my parents were so determined that their children should be obedient to them. As a result of their training, it has been no trouble to me to come or to go, to do this or that, at the request of the servants of God. Yet those who know me regard me, no doubt, as a man who likes his own way. That is my nature. It is a pleasure to me to have my own way. I am positive in my nature. But it has also been a pleasure to me to obey the servants of God. I say to my folks that that is the way we should raise our children. They should be made to do that which is required of them. If the Latter Day Saints as a people would enforce obedience in the home, our children would grow up and become men and women who would obey God, who would listen to His word, and be as strict in observing it as they had been to obey the word of their parents. But instead of that you see the rudeness of some of our children. The manner in which they conduct themselves at times is disgraceful. I feel mortified occasionally at the behavior of our children. There will be a meeting here tonight of the Sunday school workers, and we shall be under the necessity of having policemen, if we can obtain them, to maintain order outside the building and to prevent the meeting being disturbed by the boisterous conduct of a class of boys and girls. This is one of the things we should attend to.

I feel to say that all the evils we suffer from are due to our disobedience and hardness of heart. The persecutions that we have endured are traceable to this. Our future persecutions will be attributable to the same cause. Therefore how necessary it is that we should train our children to be obedient to authority. If we will do this, it will be an easy thing for them to obey when they are men and women. A girl thus trained makes a good wife. A boy thus trained makes a good husband. Send him on a mission, and the presiding authority there will see the difference between him and the one not trained in habits of obedience. I have noticed it in my experience in the world. We should think of the future of our children. We should not let them have their own way in everything. They should be taught that it is not right, but that they should submit to the judgment of those who are over them. And we should submit to the will of our Father in Heaven, whatever He requires at our hands. If it is to give our tithing, all right. If it is to consecrate, all right. We should have faith that the Lord has power to bless us according to our devotion and diligence in keeping His commandments.

I trust that what has been said at this conference will not be lost sight of and forgotten by us. I want to see Zion redeemed. I pray for the redemption of Zion. I labor for it. It will be brought about by peaceful methods. Nobody need be afraid of the designs of the Latter Day Saints. We have no designs, only to keep the commandments of God. We have no evil designs on anybody. We invite everybody to come and partake of liberty with us. We will defend men of every creed and of every denomination in their rights as quickly as we will our own people.

Joseph Smith taught us a lesson before he died in this respect, and it should never be forgotten. It will never be by those familiar with the circumstances. He invited men not of us to take part in certain things, as an example of what would be in days to come. They did not belong to our Church; I do not know that they belonged to any church. Some people have found fault with me because on one occasion I made a little distinction between the Kingdom of God and the Church of God. Now, there is a distinction, and Joseph Smith illustrated it. He showed us that when the Lord's kingdom should be established, people of every creed and of no creed should have perfect liberty and protection under it. It will not be for the Latter Day Saints alone; it will be for the protection of the Church of God and every other church. God does not deprive men of their agency. He lets them worship according to their consciences. If they want to be Methodists, or Episcopalians, or Catholics, or Agnostics, or anything else, all right. They can follow Confuscius, or they can believe as the Hindoos do, or anything else, so long as they do not trespass upon the rights of their neighbors. They cannot do that. They have no right to force their belief on other people, or to war on other people because of their belief. God never did that. He will bless everyone of every creed who will serve Him to the best of his ability, and especially those who seek to preserve the rights of their fellowmen. For God loves His children, and He wants them to have their full agency. Of course, if they rebel against Him and reject His laws and ordinances, they must meet the penalty. As a people, we ought to feel the utmost kindness and to grant the utmost liberty to everyone. We exhibited that feeling when we first came to this valley. In 1849, when the emigration came through here to California, I will remember how many preachers were invited to speak in our old Tabernacle on the corner of this block, because President Young said he wanted the people to hear these men and their views. For years this was done. Prominent ministers were invited to speak to us. I remember Methodist Bishops and others preaching to us in this Tabernacle. Why? Because we were willing to extend liberty to everybody. In return, we ask that they will not trespass upon us. We think we have a right to worship God in our own way, and we try to worship Him in that way which will be acceptable to Him.

My brethren and sisters, I ask God to bless you—bless you in your families and in everything pertaining to you. Let us labor continually for the redemption of Zion and for the time when the promises which God has made to Zion will be fulfilled; that we may build the center Stake of Zion, and rear the house of the Lord there. There are men standing in this generation that will see it accomplished; but we do not want it put off to the very last. Let us all strive to fit and qualify ourselves and our families, by obeying the comandments of God to the fullest extent, so that we and our families may be remembered among those who shall be counted worthy to take part in the glorious work of redeeming Zion, and enjoying the blessings thereof, which I humbly ask in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE HERO'S REWARD.

By Eliza R. Snow.

Well may the fire of glory blaze
Upon the warrior's tread,
And nations twine a wreath of praise
Around the hero's head.
His path is honor, and his name
Is written on the spire of fame.

His deeds are deeds of courage, for
He treads on gory ground,
Amid the pride and pomp of war,
When carnage sweeps around:
With sword unsheath'd he stands before
The foe, amid the cannon's roar.

If such, the meed the warrior's gains—
If such, the palm he bears—
If such insignia he obtains—
If such the crown he wears:
If laurels thus his head entwine
And stars of triumph round him shine;

How noble must be his reward,
Who, midst the crafts of men,
Clad in the armor of the Lord,
Goes forth to battle when
The angry pow'rs of darkness rage,
And men and devils warfare wage.

Who goes tradition's charm to bind,
That reason may go free—
And liberate the human mind
From cleric tyranny—
To sever superstition's rod,
And propagate the truth of God.

Who wars with prejudice, to break
Asunder error's chain;
And make the sandy pillars shake
Where human dogmas reign;
Who dares to be a man of God
And bear the spirit's sword abroad.

Who with his latest dying breath
Bears witness to the truth—
Who fearless meets the monster death,
To gain immortal youth;
And enters on a higher sphere,
Without a shudder or a fear.

Above all earthly, his shall be
An everlasting fame;
The archives of eternity
Will register his name—
With gems of endless honor rife,
His crown will be Eternal Life.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

John M. Haws, President of the North Carolina Conference, was born March 24th, 1847, in Illinois. His father was of Kentucky birth and his mother first saw the light in North Carolina. His father settled in Illinois in 1820, where he resided until 1847. In 1846 Haws, Sr., joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and soon afterward started for the Rocky Mountains, where he arrived in 1849. The family settled on the Provo river, and were the victims of many Indian depredations and raids. Those familiar with the early history of the Chuch know the hardships incident to that time. Brother Haws underwent them manfully and returned "over the plains" to assist a company of Saints. These brief points suggest how Brother Haws was "made up." His sterling worth, excellent habits and persevering efforts are outcroppings of his early life.

Brother Haws has filled several offices of public trust with signal credit.

At present he is engaged in farming on a large scale.

ELDER JOHN M. HAWS.
President North Carolina Conference.

Jan. 23, 1899, he arrived at Chattanooga, where he had come in response to a call to fill a mission. He was assigned to the North Carolina Conference.

June 1, 1899, he was appointed counsellor to President Lewis Swensen, and filled this position with honor. Dec. 7, 1899, when President Swensen was released, Elder Haws was called to preside over the North Carolina Conference. With such a man at the head, we feel assured that the high standard of the North Carolina Conference will be maintained.

Money for Foreign Missions.

Churches of this country send abroad annually, to support and extend missions, about $5,000,000. Churches in Great Britain send about $7,000,000, and those of the continent of Europe, of Canada and Australia, about $3,000,000, or a total of $15,000,000 a year to make inroads on heathendom. It is those who perform the work, those who manage it and those who give this vast sum of money who are to hold the conference next April. This conference is not only to give a survey of the field, and try to increase enthusiasm for missions, but it is to undertake to find solutions for some very important problems. These problems are: ((1) How far secular education ought to be done by missionaries supported by money of the churches; ((2) self-support of missions, to the end that propagation may go on elsewhere, and a particular work be not a never-ending drain upon home sources of supply; (3) comity in missions.

The argument is put forth that the mission fields, as lately developed, and especially as coming forward in new territorial possessions, are likely to accomplish much for churches at home in the battering down of sectarian prejudices. Already the comity arrangement devised for Puerto Rico has had a good reflex influence at home. Churches are looking forward to the end of the British-Boer war in South Africa, and saying that religion on the heels of war in that vast continent will make of Africa a second Europe and North America. And the point of the argument being made now by Christian leaders here, is that the greatest benefit growing out of the labor of changing Africa from a savage to a Christian continent will be, not to Africa, but to Europe and America, on the theory that it is more blessed to give than to receive, and the greater benefit is generally to the giver. Interest in this forthcoming ecumenical conference steadily grows.

There is one virtue, attribute, or principle, which, if cherished and practiced by the Saints, would prove salvation to thousands upon thousands. I allude to charity, or love, from which proceed forgiveness, long suffering, kindness, and patience.—Brigham Young.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF THE PROPHET JOSEPH SMITH.

BY APOSTLE M. F. COWLEY.

Conforming to Revelations already given, Joseph the Prophet, accompanied by several of the brethren, left Kirtland, June 19th, 1831, on his first visit to Missouri. He reached Independence, Mo., July 15th, meeting the Elders who had preceded him. Soon after Joseph's arrival at Independence the location of the city of Zion was made known to him by Revelation. Before his return to Kirtland in August 1831, the foundation of the new city of Zion had been laid and the sight dedicated for a Temple of the Lord, and a mighty stream of emigration started to the practically unexplored regions of the west.

Soon after his return to Kirtland, the Prophet Joseph and Sidney Rigdon retired to the quiet town of Hiram, Portage county, O., where they engaged in translating the Bible. Besides this important labor the Prophet was active in the ministry. He attended several conferences and was busy preaching the Gospel in public and in private. Meantime persecution did not abate, but was in active operation both in Missouri and Ohio. March 25th, 1832, Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon were taken by a mob and treated in a most brutal manner. The former was stripped, covered with tar and cruelly beaten, and an attempt made to force a bottle of aquafortis down his throat. Notwithstanding this, the next day found the Prophet declaring the Gospel to a public congregation. Sidney, however, was delirious for several days, as a result of the violent treatment received at the hands of the mob.

In April, 1832, Joseph paid a second visit to Missouri and was greatly pained to learn of the insults and injuries being heaped upon the Saints, as hostilities had already begun of such intensity and bitterness, as to soon result in their complete expulsion from Jackson county. After administering words of comfort and instructing the Saints, Joseph returned to Kirtland in June.

Nov. 3, 1832, the Prophet's oldest son, Joseph, was born.

Dec. 25th, 1832, Joseph Smith received the Revelation on war, pointing out the great rebellion, which occurred twenty-eight years later. During the winter of 1832-3 Joseph, by inspiration organized what is known as the school of the Prophets, in which the Elders of the Church are instructed and edified in the things of God.

February 2, 1833, the Prophet completed the translation of the New Testament.

July 23rd, 1833, under commandment from the Lord, the Prophet and his associates laid the foundation corner stones of a Temple of the Lord, the first in this Dispensation.

March 18, 1833, the presidency of the Church was first organized in this generation, consisting of Joseph Smith, president, Sidney Rigdon, first counselor, and Frederick G. Williams, second counselor.

On Feb. 17, 1834, the High Council was organized by the Prophet. It consisted of twelve High Priests, presided over by the Presidency of the High Priesthood. This High Council of the Church is a pattern of all High Councils in the Church, one of which exists in every Stake of Zion, presided over by the Presidency of the Stake. May 5th, 1834, Joseph Smith, with 100 men, started for Missouri. Their number was increased on the way to 205. This body of men is known in history as Zion's Camp. They were called by revelation. The purpose in their mission was to carry supplies and comfort to the grief-stricken, mob-ridden Saints in Missouri, and if possible influence the Governor to restore and protect them in their rights in the enjoyment of their hard-earned farms and homes. En route "Zion's Camp" encountered many hardships, and some of the brethren, like Israel of old, murmured against the Prophet of the Lord. Joseph reproved them for their evil conduct, and prophesied that a scourge would come upon the camp. June 22, 1834, cholera broke out in the camp; sixty-eight were attacked, thirteen died. This was the word of the Lord through Joseph literally fulfilled. Arriving in Missouri, they organized a Stake, and returned to Kirtland July 9th, 1834.

In 1835 Joseph, who had a strong desire for education, established a school in Kirtland and engaged Prof. Leixas to conduct a class in Greek. Though Joseph, like the ancient Prophets and Apostles, was unlearned when first called, at the age of thirty he had acquired a marked proficiency in language, philosophy and statesmanship. This desire for education and great efforts to promote the same have characterized the authorities of the Church from that day until the present time.

In 1835 the Prophet, having purchased a number of Egyptian mummies, brought from the catacombs of Egypt, translated from papyrus the Book of Abraham, in which the mummies were wrapped. This book contains many choice items of wisdom and knowledge written by the Patriarch Abraham while in Egypt, by the spirit of revelation from the Lord. On the return of Zion's Camp from Missouri, the work on the temple, which had been retarded, was now prosecuted with zeal and vigor until its completion. The building was constructed under very trying circumstances. Many were in poverty. Persecution was in progress. The building cost $70,000, and was supervised by the Prophet Joseph Smith, in addition to all his other duties in public and private at home and abroad. It was three years in course of construction. It was the first temple of the Lord built in this dispensation. Since then five others more expensive have been built by the Latter-day Saints, and others will be erected in these last days to the honor and glory of God.

The temple was dedicated March 27th, 1836. It was a veritable pentacostal feast. Many enjoyed the gifts of the Holy Ghost and prophesied of things to come. Subsequently the Savior appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, and also Moses, Elijah and other ancient Prophets appeared unto them, as recorded in section 110 of the Doctrine and Covenants. The Apostles, as of old, were endued with power from on high, and went forth to the world with renewed strength, declaring the glad tidings of the restored Gospel. Following these remarkable manifestations, a wave of financial inflation swept over Kirtland, and many of the Saints ran wild in speculations. Many of the leaders became infatuated with this false spirit, and when the panic of 1837 engulfed the nation disaster came to Kirtland. Many leading men apostatized and attributed the very evils to the Prophet Joseph Smith which he had warned them against and sought by every means in his power to avoid.

The Kirtland Safety Society Bank had been organized by the Prophet Joseph, for the benefit of the Saints. This failed through the swindling operations of subordinate officers, and many of the people were financially ruined. Persecution became violent. Many of the leading men apostatized and became bitter enemies to the Prophet of the Lord. Jan. 12th, 1838, Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon were forced to flee from Kirtland, and an armed mob followed them for two hundred miles, thirsting for their blood. Joseph, with the body of the Church, was now established in Missouri, the Saints, on account of persecution, migrating thither from Ohio. The Saints in Missouri now numbered about 12,000 souls, and having been expelled from their homes in Jackson county by furious mobs, were now located in Caldwell, Davis and Carroll counties, chiefly in Caldwell. In the midst of such perilous times, and being continually harrassed by false brethren, the life of the Prophet must have been a trying one. Men only of unswerving integrity could stand the chastening fire of persecution, and many fell by the wayside and joined in the cry against the Prophet and the Saints. Joseph knew that the Church of which he had the honor to be the earthly head was the Church of God, that the Lord would preserve it to the end. He therefore had no need to pander to the whims of men in order to retain their friendship. This of itself is no small evidence that Joseph Smith was called of God. Had he been palming upon the world a fraud, he would have feared the exposure of those who became disaffected, and would have used politic methods to retain their good will for him, rather than apply the law of justice and cast them out of the Church. The example of Joseph Smith in dealing with apostates, no matter how high in church authority they stood, has been followed by his successors until the present, and ever will be, for "God is no respector of persons."

During this time Joseph received important revelations on various items; the building of a temple at Far West, the law of tithing, the mission of the Apostles abroad, also that America was the land where Adam dwelt, and that the Garden of Eden was where Jackson county, Missouri, now is. July 4th, 1838, the Prophet caused to be laid the foundation stones of a temple, which, however, has never been completed. About two days after the national celebration at Far West lightning struck the liberty pole and shivered it to pieces. This seemed to be a warning that their own liberties were about to be stricken down. It is said that on the occasion of the lightning striking the liberty pole, that Joseph prophesied that the day would come when the constitution of the United States would hang as if by a thread, and that the Latter-day Saints would be prominent in saving that instrument from utter destruction. Persecution soon reasserted itself. The Latter-day Saints had a right to vote. Twelve of them offered to cast their votes at a state election in Gallatin, Daviess county, Aug. 6th, 1838. A candidate for the legislature, William P. Penistion, made an inflaming speech against them and raised a tumult, in which several of the Latter-day Saints and their opponents were wounded. The report of this riot was greatly exaggerated and spread throughout the state. Mobocracy followed in various places. Oct. 25th, 1838, while defending themselves against a mob on Crooked river, Apostle David W. Patten and two other brethren, Gideon Carter and Patrick O'Banmon, were killed. The power of the Saints, even in a small degree, to defend themselves exasperated their enemies, and on Oct. 27th Maj.-Gen. Clark issued an order to the state militia to proceed with all haste against the Mormons and drive them from the state or consummate their extermination. Oct. 30th the frightful massacre of Haun's Mill occurred. About twenty of the Saints, men, women and children, were killed and thrown in a heap into a well and buried. About this time Col. Hinkle betrayed the Prophet and several of his associates into the hands of the enemy by forming a compact with the latter to give up the arms of the Saints without the knowledge or consent of Joseph and his brethren. Oct. 31st Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Parley P. Pratt, Lyman Wight, George W. Robinson, Hyrum Smith and Amasa M. Lyman were taken and treated as prisoners of war. The city was given into the hands of mauraders, who pillaged the houses and grossly insulted defenseless women and children. Joseph and his brethren were courtmartialed to be shot, but Gen. Doniphan, of the state militia, protested against it as a cold-blooded murder. Notwithstanding Gen. Clark had told the Saints that they must never expect to see their leaders again, Joseph prophesied to his associates that their lives would be spared and they would return to the Saints, which prediction was literally fulfilled. They were paraded through the country with boasting glee on the part of their captors. On one occasion Joseph addressed a crowd of spectators, many of whom were melted to tears. It became a settled conviction with his enemies that if they allowed the Prophet to address the public he would never fail to make friends and impress the honest that he was innocent. So, to avoid this impression, the mob, or officers, who subsequently had him in custody would try to prevent him from speaking to the people. Joseph and some of the brethren were confined in Liberty jail, Clay county, the remainder in Richmond, Ray county. While in their dungeon cell they were subjected to the taunts and insults of guards and officers. One night, after bearing all he could possibly endure of their filthy conversation, he arose in chains, and with a voice of thunder rebuked the guards in the name of the Lord. They cowed before him and asked his pardon. So great was the power of God that they wilted before him as a blade of grass before a flame of fire. Parley P. Pratt thus describes the scene. (The words of the Prophet to the guards): "Silence, ye fiends of the infernal pit. In the name of Jesus Christ I rebuke you, and command you to be still; I will not live another minute and hear such language. Cease such talk, or you or I die this instant!"

"He ceased to speak. He stood erect in terrible majesty. Chained and without a weapon, calm, unruffled and dignified as an angel, he looked upon the quailing guards, whose weapons were lowered or dropped on the ground; whose knees smote together, and who, shrinking into a corner, or crouching at his feet, begged his pardon, and remained quiet till a change of guards. I have seen the ministers of justice, clothed in magisterial robes, and criminals arraigned before them, while life was suspended on a breath in the courts of England; I have witnessed a congress in solemn session to give laws to nations; I have tried to conceive of kings, of royal courts, of thrones and crowns, and of emperors assembled to decide the fate of kingdoms; but dignity and majesty have I seen but once as it stood in chains, at midnight in a dungeon in an obscure village of Missouri."—Autob. P. P. Pratt, p. 229-30.

The brethren in prison were charged with murder, treason, arson and other crimes, from all of which they were acquitted. His enemies considered one evidence of treason was the belief the Prophet and his associates had. in the prophecy of Daniel that God in the last days would set up His kingdom, which should "subdue all others."

They were tried in the court of Judge A. A. King. Gen. Doniphan, the attorney for Joseph, told him to "offer no defense, for if a cohort of angels should declare your innocence it would be all the same. The judge is determined to throw you into prison."

While in prison Joseph received from the Lord the glorious revelations and instructions found in sections 121, 122 and 123 of the Doctrine and Covenants. Mobocracy continued. Gov. Boggs issued his exterminating order, to exterminate the "Mormons" or drive them from the state. Joseph cheered the Saints from his prison cell. He wrote: "Zion shall yet live though she seemeth to be dead." While Joseph was in prison, Brigham Young, President of the Twelve, planned and carried into effect the gathering of the Saints from Missouri to Illinois. Himself and brethren made a solemn covenant that they would never cease their efforts until the Saints were gathered from Missouri. They kept their pledge. It was a gigantic undertaking. Ten thousand Saints, homeless and almost penniless, compelled to sign away their property at the point of the bayonet, to be gathered, organized in suitable companies, with proper arrangements and pioneer to another state, where they hoped for better treatment. The exodus was carried out. Early in 1849 found the Saints in Iowa and Illinois. Thus was another prophetic utterance finding fulfillment. Joseph Smith once said that the Saints would have first a county, then a state, and finally a nation against them. The literal fulfillment of this prophecy is strikingly apparent to those who know anything of the history of the Church. The Saints were driven from Kirtland, Ohio, from county after county in Missouri, and then from the state of Missouri, in which Gov. Boggs, the chief executive officer, took part, by issuing the infamous "exterminating order," virtually licensing the wholesale pillaging and murder of hundreds of innocent men, women and children. Later we see the United States government sending an army against the Saints to crush an imaginary rebellion, and later still, as if to emphasize the words of the Prophet, we behold the great government under which we live confiscate the property of the Church and there appears on the supreme court calendar "United States of America vs. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." Surely no prophecy could more literally come true. Yea it has been doubly fulfilled.

April 22, 1839, Joseph and Hyrum Smith joined their families at Quincy, Ill., having escaped imprisonment a short time previous. Soon after Commerce, afterwards named by the Prophet Nauvoo, was selected as a location for the Saints. It was a beautiful site, being encircled on three sides by a curve of the Mississippi river. The place was sickly and many became prostrated with fever. It was on this occasion that miraculous cases of healing occurred through the administration of the Prophet. He went from house to house, commanded the sick to arise and walk, and his words were followed by instant healing.

The Twelve had been called on missions to Europe, and commanded to take their departure from the temple grounds in Far West. April 26, 1839, Capt. Bogart, a leading mobocrat, heard of the prophecy and swore that it should never be fulfilled. On the day named, however, at 1 a.m. the Twelve met at the place appointed, held a conference, ordained Wilford Woodruff and George A. Smith to the Apostleship, and departed on their mission, in fulfillment of the word of the Lord through the Prophet Joseph Smith. And here let it be said that no prediction of the Prophet Joseph Smith shall ever fall to the ground unfulfilled. Many converts were made in England, and in 1840 the first company of Saints from the shores of Europe came to Nauvoo. Joseph was diligent in helping the Saints to found themselves in the new city. Having a little respite from persecution, himself and Judge Elias Higbee went to Washington and laid before the President, Martin Van Buren, a detailed statement, with proof, of the outrages committed against the Saints in Missouri. At first the President was reverse to hearing them, then expressed sympathy, and listened, as well as inviting the Prophet to explain his views of the Gospel, which he did. At a later visit the President showed signs of political cowardice, and after listening impatiently to the recital of their sufferings, he made the reply: "Your cause is just, but I can do nothing for you; and if I take up for you I shall lose the vote of Missouri."

The Prophet concluded promptly that President Van Buren was "an office-seeker, that self-aggrandizement was his ruling passion, and that justice and righteousness were no part of his composition."

Joseph remained in the east during the winter, making the acquaintance of leading political men of the nation. He recited to several the sufferings of the Saints. To his recital John C. Calhoun said: "It involves a nice question—the question of state's rights; it will not do to agitate it." Henry Clay said: "You had better go to Oregon."

Such answers were too inconsistent and unreasonable, too cowardly to afford any hope of redress from the hands of the men who made them. The Prophet returned home to Nauvoo March 4, 1840. During his absence he preached the Gospel to large audiences in Washington and in Chester county, Pennsylvania. Nauvoo had been growing under the direction of Hyrum Smith, the ever-faithful brother to the Prophet. The population numbered near three thousand and contained three ecclesiastical wards. The Latter-day Saints again asserted their political rights, and with this came persecution as bitter as heretofore. Gov. Boggs, of Missouri, demanded of Gov. Carlin, of Illinois, the arrest of the Prophet on the grounds of his being a fugitive from justice. The demand was rejected, but this only exasperated the Missourians, who subsequently took an active part in persecuting the Prophet and his associates. In the winter of 1840-41 the Illinois Legislature granted a very liberal charter to the city of Nauvoo. Abraham Lincoln was a member of the Legislature which granted it. It included the establishment of the Nauvoo Legion, a military body, and the University of Nauvoo. Feb. 1, 1841. At the first election it went into effect, and shortly thereafter Joseph became the lieutenant-general of the Nauvoo Legion. On the 6th of April, 1841, the corner stones of the Nauvoo Temple were laid. Joseph called upon the Saints in the regions round about to gather into Nauvoo and assist in the erection of this sacred edifice. The Saints responded with great energy to this call and flocked into the city from all directions. The city of Nauvoo grew with almost magic speed. Brigham Young and the Twelve, on their return from England, greatly aided in its growth. The population before the Prophet's martyrdom increased to 20,000. In 1842 prosperity abounded in Nauvoo. This year the Prophet wrote for publication an account of the coming forth of this great work. This included the Articles of Faith now printed upon cards and distributed by the Elders among all nations whither the Gospel is being preached. The Church organ was edited by the Prophet, and was called the Times and Seasons. Through this medium he published many glorious truths which the Lord had revealed to him. Many embraced the Gospel. The population increased, and Nauvoo was rapidly becoming a city of importance. Notwithstanding this wonderful growth, and the peace enjoyed, the Spirit of Prophecy ever alive in this great Prophet gave him premonitions of the sore tribulations which were soon to follow. March 17th, 1842, Joseph organized the Relief Society, now so famed in the Church as the organization through which our devoted mothers administer so much comfort and help to the poor, the sick and the needy. ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

The latter part of December the Rev. J. Whitcomb Brougher, a prominent Baptist minister of this city, delivered a sermon on the subject of "Mormonism and Polygamy," which was simply a rehash of moldy falsehoods told by others before him. Through the courtesy of the Chattanooga News, an answer was published to this unwarranted attack, in the columns of that paper. In reply to this "open letter" by President Rich, Mr. Brougher, a week later, preached a second sermon, "Is Mormonism Anti-Christian?" which was much the same as the first. This second onslaught was met by another "open letter" in the News a few days later, and as many of our Elders have asked for the papers containing these articles and which are not now to be had, we contemplate publishing in the Star the open letters to Dr. Brougher for the benefit of our readers, in the near future.

A CONTRAST.

We reproduce the following from the London Times:

"The missionaries live in palatial concrete houses with all the luxuries their countries can afford and charge us for Bibles and prayer books, which we understand are sent as free offerings."

Malieton Tanus further charges missionaries with extracting all the money from them possible, in return for which they receive a Bible, a prayer book or a "Pilgrim's Progress." He instances the Wesleyan missionaries with collecting £27,000 at a single meeting at Tonga, adding:

"The missionaries aroused a great spirit of emulation, telling the natives that the largest givers would be the most acceptable in the sight of God, thus reversing the spirit of the widow's mite."

The Samoan chief concludes:

"These be thy Gods, O, Israel.

"Signed, Malieton, Faalogoiai, Samoa."

In another part of this issue of the Star we have an article stating the amount sent abroad annually to support and extend missions. From these two reports it seems that modern missionaries are very different from what they were in early Christian days. The command in Christ's day was to go among the people and preach "without purse or scrip." "Freely ye have received, freely ye give," was the prevailing sentiment among Christ's disciples. How many of these Christian missionaries would go to heathendom and preach if it were not for the money they received? Who is getting the benefit, the natives or the missionaries? Is it the love of God or the love of money which induces these missionaries to go among a benighted people, sell them a prayer book, or Bible, and take all their money? When the Latter-day Saint Elder comes in the midst of the people, bearing a message of peace and good will, but never taking their money, these same people, who are supporting men in luxury and ease, will turn them from their door, and refuse them even the necessities of life.

Here is a contrast between sects; one loved and supported in regal splendor, the other despised and cast out. One loved by the world, the other hated of all men. One collecting all the money he can, the other giving what he hath. Who of these two come more nearly filling the Scriptural prophecy, "If ye were of the world the world would love his own?" The "Mormon" Elder leaves home, friends and all for the Gospel. He receives no pay, is cast out, but happy in the knowledge that he is giving freely words of life everlasting. The other receives his $135,000 in collections, $15,000,000 from friends, and crying for more. Where will it end?

ADMINISTERING ORDINANCES.

The following editorial from the Juvenile Instructor may be of interest and benefit to many of the Elders in the missionary field:

We have been asked, in substance, "If, where the Lord has revealed the exact words to be used in the performance of an ordinance, the Elder or Priest officiating departs therefrom, either from ignorance, a slip of the tongue, or other cause, does not such departure invalidate the ordinance?"

We answer, as a rule, certainly not: that is, when the spirit and meaning of the words are not palpably departed from. If awkwardness of expression would invalidate an ordinance administered by a man of God then inextricable confusion would be wrought in the Church. No man's standing would be safe; for possibly every one of us has received ordinances—baptisms, confirmations or ordinations—under the hands of men who have not strictly adhered to the given form. Or, if no such mistake happened in our individual cases, who can say it did not previously occur in the confirmation or ordination of some one or more of those who have been mouth over our heads? In either case we should not receive the blessing or the authority that was supposedly conferred upon us. Again, how many of our brethren perform ordinances in the Church in languages with which they are far from thoroughly familiar—Elders who have gathered to Zion from continental Europe and the islands of the sea, who do not understand English; missionaries to lands where other tongues are spoken, into many of which, indeed, the exact formula of these ordinances have never been translated. Shall the Elders not administer until they are perfect in a tongue? Will the Lord ignore their ministrations because they speak in faltering tones, in ungrammatical phrases or in confused rhetoric? It were folly to so imagine. It would place in many regions almost insurmountable barriers to the progress of the work of the Lord. Our Heavenly Father is aware of our insufficiency; that we are finite, that we cannot reach everything at once, and accepts us as we are when we do our best. But this best should be constantly improving, we should all the time be drawing nearer to the perfect, making fewer mistakes and more completely observing the requirements of the Lord.

None of the foregoing thoughts are intended to encourage slovenliness in the performance of any ordinance. When we set out to do a thing we should make sure that we do it; and do it as it should be done. If it be our intention to ordain a man to an office in the Priesthood, let us be sure that we ordain him, and always in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Let that holy and all-saving name never be forgotten. It is a far more serious matter to omit the name of our Savior in the performance of the ordinances of His Church, than to insert sentences that do not appear in the form the Lord has given us, or to say, as is too often done, "I lay my hands upon your head to confirm or ordain you," and then only by indirection do it.

While it should be the aim of the Elders to conform strictly to the revealed word in the administration of ordinances, they should not permit themselves to become too technical, and to look so carefully at the word that the spirit is lost sight of.

That a man is willing to die for his religion is no proof of its being true; neither is it proof that a religion is false when one of its votaries apostatizes from it.—Brigham Young sermon preached by the Prophet April 9th, 1842, Joseph foreshadowed his own death by saying that he had now no promise of life and was subject to death. He said the Lord had promised him life at different times until certain things should be accomplished. "But having now done these things, I have no longer any lease of my life. I am as liable to die as other men." In 1842 Joseph uttered the following remarkable prophecy in Montrose, Iowa. He recorded the event as follows:

LIFE OF THE PROPHET JOSEPH SMITH

"I prophesied that the Saints would continue to suffer much affliction, and would be driven to the Rocky Mountains. Many would apostasize, others would be put to death by our persecutors, or lose their lives in consequence of exposure and disease; and some would live to go and assist in making settlements and building cities, and see the Saints become a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains." Every provision of this prophecy has been remarkably fulfilled. Apostates now began to plot the destruction of Joseph's life. John C. Bennett, a vile man, possessing ability without character, but whose perfidy was not detected until he had been crowned with honor among the Saints, had rendered valuable service in obtaining the Nauvoo charter. He was elected Mayor of Nauvoo, chosen Chancellor of the University and major-general of the Legion. He planned to have the Prophet killed in a sham battle of the Nauvoo Legion, but failed. He uttered many falsehoods against the Prophet, both to shield his own iniquity and encompass the death of the Prophet. He wrote a vile book against Joseph and the Saints, made up of gross falsehoods. This greatly increased the prejudices against the Prophet among the thousands who did not wish to investigate and know the truth.

Elders were sent out to refute these slanders, and accomplished much good among the honest in heart. The old Missouri hatred was still kept burning in that state. Some one had attempted, it was claimed, to assassinate Gov. Boggs in Independence. It was falsely laid to the "Mormons." Gov. Boggs demanded of the Governor of Illinois the person of Joseph Smith on the charge of his being an accessory to the attempted murder before the crime. He and O. P. Rockwell were arrested Aug. 8th, 1842, but discharged after a hearing before the municipal court of Nauvoo. Other attempts were made to arrest him under false pretenses. He concluded to go into hiding for a short time. While hidden he wrote the important letters to the Saints on the Redemption of the Dead, found in sections 127 and 128 of the Doctrine and Covenants. Thomas Ford became Governor of Illinois in December, 1842. Joseph applied to him for a withdrawal of the writs issued against him by Gov. Carlin. After a judicial investigation this was done. In February, 1843, the population of Nauvoo was again augmented by a company of Saints from Europe, under the leadership of Elders P. P. Pratt, Lorenzo Snow and Levi Richards. In June, 1843, other attempts were made to drag the Prophet back to Missouri. Dr. Bennett was the chief instigator of this scheme. Politicians now stirred up strife against the Saints, and recommended the repeal or restriction of the Nauvoo charter. They pretended to be alarmed at the increase of Mormon power. Yet, strange to say, Mormon power, in politics or religion, has never been wielded to deprive or restrict any human being of their rights in the least degree. Mormons elected to office were threatened with mobocracy when attempting to qualify at the county seat, Carthage. The anti-Mormon party renewed their pledges to fight the Mormons. The mob began to burn the homes and property of the Saints in outlying districts of Nauvoo. When the Governor was appealed to for protection, his answer was an indication of his cowardice or his sympathy with the mob element. He simply told the Saints they must protect themselves. During these times of trouble Joseph addressed letters to several prominent men in the nation who had Presidential aspirations. He propounded to them this question: "What will be your rule of action relative to us as a people, should fortune favor your ascension to the chief magistracy?"

Only two answered, Henry Clay and John C. Calhoun, and their answers were so non-committal or evasive that Joseph considered the writers cowardly or lacking in moral force. Soon after, strange and startling as it sounded then, Joseph Smith announced himself a candidate for the Presidency of the United States. He was nominated Jan. 29th, 1844, and duly sustained at a state convention on the 17th of the following May. Soon after this he published his views in plain terms, on the "Powers and Policy of the Government of the United States." In this document he defined his position on the live political questions of the day. He favored the abolition of slavery, the slave holders to be paid for their slaves by the general government, the money to be raised by reducing the salary of congressmen and by the sale of public lands; the abolition of imprisonment for debt and for all crimes but murder, work on public enterprises to be the penalty for other crimes, and to make the prisons schools of learning. The investment of power in the President of the United States to furnish troops for the suppression of mobs. The extension of the United States from sea to sea, with the consent of the Indians. Many other excellent features appeared in his platform. Had his proposition on the slave question been carried out, it would have saved the nation a million lives, preserved other thousands from being crippled, and protected the happy homes of a million people from widowhood, and the cries of more than a million fatherless children, and saved to the nation many millions of treasure and property less valuable than human life. Joseph prophesied of the war twenty-eight years before it came. That it should result in the death and misery of many souls. That Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God is written in letters of blood and by the tears of millions who suffered from that fratricidal war. The Twelve and other leading Elders went to the eastern states to promulgate his views. It is not probable for a moment that the Prophet had any faith in winning the Presidential election. Neither had he aspirations for the honors of men. Other considerations were in view. His people had been traduced and misrepresented. His candidacy furnished an opportunity to explain his views, to enlighten the public mind respecting the Latter-day Saints, and to leave on record propositions to the nation which if accepted would have saved the nation, life and treasure.

He wrote himself: "I feel it to be my right and privilege to obtain what influence and power I can lawfully in the United States for the protection of injured innocence: and if I lose my life in a good cause, I am willing to be sacrificed on the altar of virtue, righteousness and truth, in maintaining the laws and constitution of the United States, if need be for the general good of mankind."—Joseph Smith.

Joseph, with a little band of pioneers, started on an expedition to explore the Rock Mountains to find a resting place for the Saints, but was turned back. He was destined to seal his testimony with his blood. On July 12th, 1843, Joseph had recorded the revelation on celestial marriage found in section 132, Doctrine and Covenants. In the spring of 1844 the situation in Nauvoo became very bitter. The Laws, Higbees and Fosters plotted the overthrow of the Prophet. William Law was his counsellor, and of course knew of Joseph receiving and privately teaching the doctrine of plural marriage. He had Joseph arrested on a charge of polygamy. The latter was discharged. The apostates then started a newspaper called the Expositor, through which they circulated the basest falsehoods imaginable, and thus inflamed still more intensely the public mind. The city was shocked at the publication. The city council was called together. Joseph Smith was the mayor. The Expositor was declared a nuisance and was utterly destroyed June 11th, 1844, by order of the mayor. The proprietors left the city and immediately planned the arrest of the Prophet and others on a charge of riot. They had a hearing and were acquitted. The mob was furious and gathered in large numbers around Nauvoo, swearing vengeance on the people and their leaders. Joseph, as mayor, declared the city under martial law, and called out the Legion to defend it. The Governor, hearing of this and being weak and vascillating, went at the head of the militia to Nauvoo, and demanded that the Prophet come to Carthage for trial for the destruction of the Expositor, and that martial law be abolished in Nauvoo. His orders were strictly obeyed. The Governor pledged in a most solemn manner his honor and the faith of the state that the prisoners should be defended against mob violence and should have a fair and impartial trial. This pledge was repeated but never kept. Undoubtedly the Prophet felt that his withdrawal from Nauvoo would be a safeguard for the Saints, and he loved them more than life itself. He remarked just before leaving Nauvoo: "I am going like a lamb to the slaughter, but I am calm as a summer morning. I have a conscience void of offense toward God and toward all men. If they take my life I shall die an innocent man and my blood shall cry from the ground for vengeance, and it shall yet be said of me, 'he was murdered in cold blood.'" His prophecy in every particular has been literally fulfilled. The Nauvoo Legion gave up their arms by command of Gov. Ford, who again promised them protection. Joseph Smith, Hyrum Smith, John Taylor and Williard Richards were confined in Carthage jail, and on the fatal 27th day of June, 1844, were placed in an upper room of that building. About 5 o'clock in the afternoon an armed mob of the state militia, assisted by other murderous fiends in human shape, in all about 200 strong, burst in fury upon the jail and murdered in cold blood the Prophet and his brother Hyrum. Elder Taylor was cruelly wounded with four bullets, while Elder Richards escaped unharmed. While this inhuman tragedy was being enacted Gov. Ford was in Nauvoo haranging the peaceful unarmed Saints on the enormity of destroying the printing press of the Expositor. The Governor undoubtedly knew the intention of the mob, for he had heard their threats that the Prophet should never escape alive. A day or two before his martyrdom, while being exhibited among the militia, as if he were something monstrous, the Prophet asked one of the officers if he could see anything bad in his countenance. The officer answered: "No, Gen. Smith, but I cannot see what is in your heart." The Prophet promptly retorted: "But I can see what is in your heart, and if you are suffered to shed my blood you will see bloodshed prevail in this land to your heart's content." Thus was the testament of this great and last dispensation sealed by the blood of the testator, and is in force upon all the world. When we review the life of Joseph Smith, we are compelled to exclaim: In the hands of God he was a mighty man. Next to the Savior, Joseph Smith was as great a Prophet as ever lived. At the age of 15 he saw God the Father and our Savior Jesus Christ. He beheld them face to face, and he heard the voice of each. At the age of 18 he saw an angel of the Lord on four different occasions. He saw the ancient records of the people of God on the western hemisphere. When 22 years old he had been visited by the same angel-Prophet eight different times, and on each occasion instructed by him. At this age also he received the Golden Plates. In his 24th year he published this record to the world, received a visitation from John the Baptist, and obtained the Aaronic Priesthood under his hands. At the same age Peter, James and John came and laid their hands upon his head, bestowing the keys of the kingdom of God, which they had received from the Savior over 1800 years before. He also heard the voice of Michael. In his 25th year he organized the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and thus laid the foundation of a work so great that it will yet fill the earth. When 31 years old he had founded and builded a temple to the Lord, and in it had seen the Savior, Moses, Elias, Elijah and other ancient Prophets of the living God. He selected the Temple of four Temples of the Lord, saw one completed and another well on its way before his martyrdom. Before he was 35 years of age he had been the prime mover in laying the foundation and helping to build several important towns in the travels of the Saints. At 37 he organized a militia, was in it as lieutenant-general, established a university of learning, set on foot the gathering of Israel previous to this and before his assassination, saw thousands gathered from various states of the Union, Canada and Great Britain. He died a martyr at 39, having received in his lifetime over one hundred and twenty-five revelations from God, which he caused to be written, besides the volumes of unwritten inspiration which found their expression in prophecy, healing the sick, casting out devils, interpreting tongues and translating the Scriptures of Divine Truth. His prophecies are many, both written and unwritten. Many have been filled, none have failed, and when the wheels of time shall bring the remainder due, every jot and tittle shall be fulfilled, for it was God who spake through the Prophet Joseph Smith. He loved his God, his religion, his country, and all mankind. For them he lived and suffered. For them he died, and future generations, when the cobwebs of sectarian ignorance, bigotry and prejudice with "the refuse of lies shall have been swept away," will do him justice, and acknowledge him under God as being a statesman, a philosopher, a philanthropist, a colonizer, an educator, a pioneer, and indeed a mighty Prophet of the living God. Well did Josiah Quincy, the historian, a non-Mormon, say of the Prophet Joseph Smith, whom he visited at Nauvoo May 15th, 1844: "It is by no means improbable that some future text book, for the use of generations yet unborn, will contain a question something like this: 'What historical American of the nineteenth century has exerted the most powerful influence upon the destinies of his countrymen?' and it is by no means impossible that the answer to that interrogatory may be thus written: 'Joseph Smith, the Mormon Prophet.'" —Josiah Quincy's Figures of the Past.

THE DARK AGES.

BY ELDER A. ARROWSMITH.

THE SIXTH CENTURY dawned upon the world, filled with ecclesiastical error; the priesthood that God had used in the establishment of His work was taken from the earth in this century; the year 570 saw the remnant driven off the earth; they had been lingering in a dying condition hidden in the catacombs of Rome for many years. When the Pontiff of Rome sat in regal splendor in the temple of God, and exalted himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God showed himself that he was God, it looked as if the man of sin was fully manifest in the flesh, and that Lucifer governed the children of men; and it was high time for the Lord to remove His government, as the world did not want it; and the prophecies of the Ancients needed fulfillment, as not one jot nor tittle of God's word shall pass unfulfilled, and the Age of Darkness had to come, which would extend until time, times, and a half of time, or 1260 years had passed.

The system extant in this century was but a form of godliness, without the power and inspiring influence characteristic of the primitive Saints in the days of the Apostles; and the world was following after delusive spirits, adopting error on every hand, manufacturing religious rites based on the fabrications of a corrupt and degentrate priesthood. Disputes continued as to the supremacy of the Bishops of Rome and Constantinople, and in their various discussions, one, Gelasius, declared the Bishop of Rome a judge in the place of God; which he filled as the vicegerent of the Most High. And from this has grown a system of man worship and reverence for departed Saints, that can only be compared to the grossest idolatry.

The Pope of Rome today is looked upon as an infallible being, an encyclical being issued to that effect; and as for the worship and reverence he receives, one only need look at the Catholic world today, who bow with awe to their honored Pontiff. One of the greatest dignitaries in England, a Roman Catholic, a royal duke (this is generally accepted as true), has spent thousands of dollars for the privilege of kissing the feet of the present Pope, also that his children may be born physically perfect, and honored heirs to his dukedom; (strange to say, these children are all deformed, blind and idiotic.)

In this century remission of sins could be obtained by purchase, and it was but necessary to be liberal to the churches and monasteries to get the prayers of departed Saints. Monasteries had grown and increased until they overran the whole east and west of the empire, and the world was full of profligate monks, who were too lazy to work. At this time men were considered Saints, who bore the useless hardships of hunger, thirst and inclement seasons, starving themselves with the greatest steadfastness and perseverance, and many ran about the country like madmen, in tattered garments, and sometimes half naked; others shut themselves up in a narrow space, where they would continue motionless, standing for a long time in certain postures, with their eyes closed, with the enthusiastic expectation of divine light. All the above was considered saintlike and glorious at this time, and the more a man departed from the dictates of reason and common sense, and counterfeited the wild gestures and the incoherent conduct of an idiot or lunatic, the more sure was his prospect of obtaining an eminent rank among the heroes and demi-gods of a corrupt and degenerate church.

Britain, which today is one of the centers of civilization, was in a degraded and barbaric condition at this time, exhibiting a very low state of civilization prior to its occupancy by the Roman soldier, and its religion had been a mixture of idolaterous rites and superstitions, which the Romans cared nothing about, and the Britains remained unmolested in their worship up to this century. The Romans had built up the country, and introduced a variety of civilization, making roads, building cities, until the ancient Britain assumed an air of semi-civilization.

In the year 596 Gregory the great, the Pontiff of Rome, who was certainly great in his sphere, sent Augustine, with forty monks, into Britain, where they were received with open arms by Ethelbert, the king, who favored the new religion, and became Christian; in consequence the Church became popular and strong in England.

All that Christianity demanded of her converts at this time was to refrain from paying homage to their statues; and in return pay the same honor and esteem to the statues of Christ and the Saints; which was but a new form of idolatry. It was an easy thing for those savages to transfer their affection from one idol to another, therefore their easy adoption of the absurdities introduced by the Priesthood of Rome.

I would like to digress here, and say for the benefit of my readers, who I hope are full of charity for their brethren, the Roman Catholics, that the forms, ceremonies, incense, gorgeous robes, mitres, wax tapers, processions, lustrations, images, and so forth, that are seen today, have been handed down from Paganism; and we are not fighting Catholicism, but error, in every form, and it is necessary to know from whence these errors came; but we must not think that these crosses and images which are so revered are worshipped. The devout Catholic but uses these things as symbols, and there are many noble men and women in that great church who would sacrifice their all and seek seclusion from a sinful world, in the monastery and nunnery, devoting money, time and talents, fasting and praying for the benefit of the children of men, firmly believing they are serving God in so doing; and although we may consider them fanatical and wrong, we must beware, and not overlook the fact that they are brethren, who have a right to worship, who, where or what they please. And undoubtedly there have been many thousands of good, honest, faithful Roman Catholics, who have been just as honest in their views as was Paul, before his conversion; and we must have charity. We cannot overlook the fact that the condition of the Christian church through all the Dark Ages has remained unchanged; the rites and ceremonies of the sixth century are identical with the church today; and it is considered one of the strongest arguments put forth by that church, that it has passed through these many centuries, unchanged, intact, with an unbroken succession of Popes who claimed authority from Peter (who they say was the first Bishop of Rome.

This article, which is largely drawn from Mosheim, who is considered the most reliable and unbiased historian, shows in part how these various innovations crept into the Christian church, and was adopted at an early day, and how finally the pure and unadulterated religion of Jesus was overthrown entirely by the great Beast, which is termed by John as the Mother of Harlots, who controlled the whole earth; whose inhabitants were made to drink of the wrath of her fornications.

This digression I think excusable, in view of the fact that from this time until the sixteenth century, when Luther rebelled, we deal entirely with a meager history of that great power, the Roman Catholic Church. And it is with a desire to state nothing but incontravertible historical facts that I enter into this work; to be charitable and fair, realizing that wrong impressions have gone out, and erroneous reports circulated about all religions; also that many persecutions have been heaped upon the Catholics as well as Protestants, believing that many martyrs have been identified with every faith, bravely withstanding the rack, the fire, and the variety of torments, with a fervent and zealous belief that they were serving God. Noble men and women, armies of martyrs, have had their blood shed for their religious convictions; and however wrong the cause represented, they have been honest and sincere, and God will honor them for their integrity, as they have manifested to the utmost the light and talent they possessed.

I have lived in Catholic Ireland, in the town of Athlone, and became well acquainted with Catholicism, as it was brought to my notice. And after much travel and study, I am obliged to confess that I have never met purer and more virtuous people than the devout Catholic from a moral standpoint; their honor, reverence and devotion to their Priesthood are truly commendable; and amid all the ignorance, and gross darkness and error that fill their minds, we can find many beautiful traits of character; and we are compelled to say with Shakespeare, that "There is good in all things evil, could men but observingly distil it out." In the sixth century lived Dionysius Exiguus, who, in the year 530, gave us the vulgar era, or helped to change times and laws; our reckoning today is based on the knowledge of Dionysius, who was a renowned and learned man.

The Sacrament was changed by Gregory the great into a grand ceremony, and it was elevated so that the populace might gaze upon it with adoration; it was also changed in its administration, and held in great awe by superstitious people, who believed in trans-substantiation, that the emblems of the body of Christ were actually transformed into His flesh and blood by the ungodly ritual.

J. J. Christian, author of "Immersion the Act of Christian Baptism," says: "Dr. W. D. Powell, of Mexico, recently wrote from Athens, Greece, as follows: I found that all churches in Greece, Presbyterian included, are compelled to immerse candidates for baptism, for, as one of the professors remarked, the commonest day laborer understands nothing else for baptism but immersion. I visited the university and saw the magnificent library and museum. I asked the professor what baptism meant, and he said: It has but one meaning, to submerge, to immerse. Why do you ask?—Register-Review, Oct. 8, 1898.

History of the Southern States Mission.

Aug. 1, 1894.

From North Carolina President Kimball went to South Carolina, where a very successful conference was held. Before leaving the state he and Elder W. G. Patrick visited Gov. Tillman and were assured by him that all should enjoy their rights as American citizens in the state of South Carolina. Wonderful development is being made by the Elders in following the instructions given by J. Golden Kimball just prior to his release from the Presidency of the Southern States Mission.

Several of the conferences report sickness among the Elders.

September—

President Kimball left Chattanooga on the morning train to attend the Middle Tennessee and Kentucky Conferences. He was attacked with a very distressing ailment, also with the chills and fever, and only with much difficulty and exertion was he enabled to attend the Conference. The Middle Tennessee Conference was held at Spencer, Van Buren county, in the Methodist church, which was kindly offered by J. R. Baldwin, the head Elder of that church in that district.

A very intelligent congregation, including the President and professors of the college located at Spencer, assembled to hear "Mormonism" discussed. All were deeply impressed with the discourses delivered, and agreed that the "despised creed" had been much misrepresented.

Mrs. Hill, a grand niece of Sidney Rigdon, a very intelligent and well informed lady, attended the meetings. She was very entertaining and kind to the Elders. At the conclusion of the conference the Elders presented her with a beautifully bound copy of the Book of Mormon, which she accepted as a "choice gift." Elders Heber C. Iverson and W. W. Bean were invited to participate in the commencement exercises of the college. Such hospitality is so seldom manifest toward the "Mormon" Elders that this particular demonstration is doubly appreciated.

The Kentucky conference was held Sept. 15 and 16. A splendid conference was held and much appreciated both by Elders and Saints.

East Tennessee Conference was held Sept. 22d and 23d near Jonesboro. All enjoyed themselves very much. An interesting incident connected with the conference was in the act of a lady and her son-in-law, who walked twenty miles, carrying a 5-year-old child, that they might be present at the meeting and be baptized.

The North Alabama Conference was not so peaceful as other Conferences attended thus far. It was apparent that some of the people in this locality were very bitter, as was later demonstrated by their actions. The warehouse in which the meetings were to be held was burned, and the hatred of the people was otherwise manifested before the Elders left. Sunday evening a gentleman came and informed President Kimball that a mob of one hundred men had formed to drive the Elders out. He was informed, as was the people, that Gov. Jones and the district judge had assured President Kimball that they would put down mob violence and punish the guilty parties. Whether or not this quieted the mob we do not know; however, they did not come to do any harm. Some sickness is reported among the Elders.

October—

Conference in Mississippi was held at China Grove, Pike county. About seventy-five, including Elders, attended. The subject of tithing was explained at this conference.

The South Alabama conference was the next to be held. It convened near Westville, Holmes county, and was well attended.

About 2 o'clock p.m. on the 21st a telegram was received at the office from Elder Adelbert Key, stating that Elder Hyrum Carter was very ill. President Kimball wired to him to take Brother Carter to Seneca, S. C., and he would meet them there. Pres. Kimball left at once for Seneca. Upon arriving there he received another telegram to the effect that Elder Carter was dying. Brother Stokes was awaiting the arrival of President Kimball. He informed President Kimball that Elder Carter had died at 12:30 a.m. on the 22d. He died at Brother Tolits', eight miles south of Foreston, at a place called Jordan. According to Dr. Wilson, who attended Brother Carter, death resulted from malarial chills. Preparations were made and the body removed to Columbia, where it was embalmed and placed in a casket preparatory to being shipped west. President Kimball accompanied the body as far as Salt Lake City, where J. Golden Kimball took charge and accompanied the corpse to Morgan City, where it was interred.

Of Elder Carter it can be truly said that he passed from this sphere of action leaving behind him the record of a life well spent in the Master's work.

November—

This month opens with fine prospects for a continuation of conversions and baptisms, which have been particularly noticeable the last two months.

The only evidence of the mob spirit since the affair at Colfax, N. C., occurred in the North Alabama Conference. A mob of fifteen men visited Elders Brinkerhoff and Stephen A. Smith and warned them to leave the country, as they did not want to hear them. The mob became so demonstrative that the Elders finally left the neighborhood.

The promise made by President Woodruff, at the dedication of the Salt Lake Temple, is being realized throughout the Mission. Elders are receiving but very little persecution.

The Elders in Kentucky were challenged by a Christian preacher to debate. Elder F. C. Johnson was chosen to champion "Mormonism." He did it so ably that the preacher, smarting under the burden of defeat, canvassed the surrounding country, preaching wherever he could against the "Mormons." This case vindicates the value of the instructions received, not to debate, because no good comes from it.

DIED,

At Bozarth, DeKalb county, Tenn., Jan. 11, 1900, Sister Amanda Kilgrow.

Deceased was 50 years of age, and had been a faithful member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints since 1894.

She had been a patient sufferer from some kind of lung trouble for the past year.

Sister Kilgrow leaves a husband, six children and a host of friends to mourn her loss, among the latter many "Mormon" Elders, to whom she has especialy endeared herself by her many acts of kindness. Elder Emery Berrus.

ABSTRACTS FROM CORRESPONDENCE

Sister Martha Crutcher writes to us from Kentucky, relating a case of healing. Her nephew had for a long time been afflicted with what the doctors called cancer. For four months they attended the child, applying every known remedy to them for this particular disease. At the end of this time they informed the father of the child that the cancer was uncurable. At the earnest solicitation of Sister Crutcher, her brother requested Elders Thurber and Davies to annoint the child and pray for his recovery. They did so, and to quote the words of Sister Crutcher, "The child is entirely well; I saw him Sunday." Every week we have many such letters relating how the power of God has been manifest, and yet people (Christians?) say "Signs are done away."

Elder R. L. Shepherd informs us that, as in the days of Jesus the " chief Priests" put them out of their synagogues because they dared to preach the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ. He and Elder Joseph A. Wright attended church at Brookfield, Ohio, and requested the gentlemen in charge of the church to allow them the privilege to preach in their church. The Elders were requested to step out while the question was discussed. They did not get the church and were answered in a manner that indicated the contempt in which these gentlemen held the Elders. The next day Brothers Wright and Shepherd were allowed the use of the town hall, where they held two meetings to very appreciative audiences.

Elder O. M. Sanderson, who presided in the Middle Tennessee Conference in 1895 and 1896, now attending the Brigham Young Academy at Provo, Utah, writes of his pleasant experience with the people while in the missionary field, and says: "I often sit in solitary reflection before my fireside and think of their goodness, of their kindness and charity. Kindly indeed is my esteem for them, and I trust that the friendship formed will bud, blossom and bear fruit through time and eternity.

Where He Stands.

Deseret Evening News.

from Thatcher, Arizona. It was writ-

We have received the following letter ten to Elder Andrew Kimball by Hon. J. F. Wilson, delegate in congress from Arizona. The views he expresses are those of the most prominent men of the country. It is unfortunate, of course, that they are not in harmony with those of the organ of the anti-Mormon crusade in this city, but then, even great minds sometimes differ on important subjects. The people of Arizona will, doubtless, be pleased to know where their delegate stands on a weighty constitutional question:

"House of Representatives,
Washington D. C., Dec. 7th, 1899.

Rev. Andrew Kimball, Thatcher, Arizona:

"My Dear Sir—Yours of November 30th, replying to my inquiry of the 26th ult. in the Roberts matter, came to hand yesterday.

"In reply I desire to say to you, that I had made up my mind to stand by the constitutional provision, which I think regulates the subject in hand, and, if carried out would have admitted Mr. Roberts to the floor as a member.

"After looking into the matter, I became thoroughly convinced that if Roberts was not admitted to be sworn in, the constitution would be walked over, and a precedent made that would be freighted with dangers to such degree that we will never be out of its reach.

"I did what I could to prevent what I deem an outrage upon constitutional regulation, that is, to stop; if I could in any way, the crusade or the effect of the crusade, in preventing Roberts from being sworn as a member, but it was of no avail.

"They will not permit him to be sworn in, and therefore will not permit the sovereign state of Utah to be represented upon the floor until they have tried the case, so to speak, or at least tried the question of fact involved in the allegations of Tayler of Ohio.

"My life-long friend, Dinsmore of Arkansas, and an old member here, took my view of it. He advocated it upon the floor. Richardson of Tennessee, the leader of the democrats in the house, made an able defense of the position, but it was all like pouring water on a duck's back. It was unheeded. Members on our side voted against the swearing of Roberts through fear of their constituency. Petitions, seven million strong, teemed in, and fanaticism has prevailed.

"I look upon the result with the deepest of solicitude and grave alarm. I feel that the rights of the sovereign state of Utah have been trampled under foot by the flaming, fanatical passion of the hour.

"I say now, as I have said to members in as strong language as I could control, that before I would surrender my own convictions upon the legal questions involved, and as it follows the constitution and the law, and to the sovereign rights of a state, I would surrender my commission, resign my position, and go home tomorrow. And this is putting it mild when compared to the feelings I bear on the subject just passed over.

"What is to come and be reported as a finding of fact by the committee appointed for investigation, can hardly be foretold, but if the crusade that is now on, has anything like the influence on that proceeding that it has had upon the proceedings just passed, it may well be imagined. To this, I protest always and everywhere. It is all I may be able to do, but it shall be done with all the earnestness I can command.

"Wishing for the best, and fearing the worst, I am

Your Obedient Servant,
J. F. WILSON."

Polygamy and Unlawful Cohabitation.

The following statements, made by President Lorenzo Snow, we hope, will suffice to explain the attitude of the Church on the much discussed subject of polygamy and unlawful cohabitation:

"From the reading of the various editorials and articles of the public press it is evident that there is much misconstruction and misunderstanding as to the present attitude of the Church respecting the subjects of polygamy and that many good and conscientious people have been misled and much adverse criticism occasioned thereby, I feel it but just to both 'Mormons' and non-'Mormons' to state that, in accordance with the manifesto of the late President Wilford Woodruff, dated September 25th, 1890, which was presented to and unanimously accepted by our general conference on the 6th of October, 1890, the Church has positively abandoned the practice of polygamy, or the solemnization of plural marriages, in this and every other state, and that no member or officer thereof has any authority whatever to perform a plural marriage or enter into such a relation. Nor does the Church advise or encourage unlawful cohabitation on the part of any of its members. If, therefore, any member disobeys the law, either as to polygamy or unlawful cohabitation, he must bear his own burden; or in other words, be answerable to the tribunals of the land for his own action pertaining thereto.

"With a sincere desire that the position of our Church as to polygamy and unlawful cohabitation may be better understood, and with best wishes for the welfare and happiness of all, this statement is made, and is respectively commended to the careful consideration of the public generally.

RESOLVE.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Build on resolve, and not upon regret,
The structure of thy future. Do not grope
Among the shadows of old sins, but let Thine own soul's light shine on the path of hope
And dissipate the darkness. Waste no tears
Upon the blotted record of the years,
But turn the leaf, and smile, oh, smile, to see
The fair white pages that remain for thee.

Prate not of thy repentance. But believe
The spark divine dwells in thee; let it grow,
That which the unreaching spirit can achieve
The grand and all creative forces know;
They will assist and strengthen as the light
Lifts up the acorn to the oak tree's height.
Thou hast but to resolve, and lo! God's whole
Great universe shall fortify thy soul.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

The subject of this sketch—Elder David H. Elton—was born at Worcester, England, Jan. 12th, 1877. He is the seventh son and tenth child of John and Isabella Elton. His father was converted and baptized by the late President Wilford Woodruff upon the occasion of his wonderful mission among, and his universal conversion of John Benbowand the United Brethren at Herefordshire, England, in the year 1840.

In May, 1880, the good parent died, leaving the mother a widow with twelve children. She struggled on, faithful and true to the Gospel, amid the adverse powers of a scornful, frowning world. Her honesty and stability in the van of truth won for her the respect and confidence of all her associates; and oftentimes, when asked why she did not relinquish her faith in what the world erroneously calls "Mormonism," she would invariably reply with emphasis and earnestness: "Do you think I would give up the light of the sun for the dwindling of the rushlight? or the cream of religion for the skim-milk of sectarianism?" The spirit of gathering with the Saints had long rested upon her, and she was exceedingly desirous of joining the body of the Church in the vales of the far west. Having sent three sons ahead, the good mother, with the two youngest boys (the junior being the subject of our sketch), left Liverpool on the 2d of August, 1890, for Salt Lake City, arriving at their destination on the 20th of the same month. Here our brother engaged his services, first as a cash boy, second as a water carrier upon the joint city and county building, and lastly as an apprentice to learn the trade of stone cutting.

He graduated from the public schools of Salt Lake City and attended the High School for about six months. This brief sojourn in the class room constitutes the whole of his scholastic education.

In December of 1897 Elder Elton received a call from the Prophet of God to perform a mission unto the Lord, and on the 21st of March of the following year he reported at Chattanooga for duty, was assigned to labor in the Florida Conference, where he remained for only five months, at the expiration of which time he was transferred to North Carolina on account of a severe attack of typhoid malaria fever.

ELDER DAVID H. ELTON

In April, 1899, at the North Carolina Conference, Elder Elton was informed by President Rich that his services were required in the Chattanooga Conference, then temporarily organized with President L. R. Anderson at the head. He obeyed and arrived at Chattanooga on April 22d. When the Conference was duly organized in May, and Elder Christo Hyldahl appointed to preside, Elder Elton was chosen to act as his first counsellor. He held this position until Conference convened in Chattanooga on Dec. 16th and 17th, 1899, when President Hyldahl was honorably released to engage in other duties, and Elder Elton chosen to succeed him in presiding over the Conference. At a later date he called to his assistance as counsellors Elders Jeddie Stokes and R. W. Smith. The appointment of Elder Elton as President of the Chattanooga Conference was in fulfillment of a prediction made concerning him before he left Salt Lake City, and it will be seen from a perusal of the above that he has traversed over a large tract of territory, and in many states, in order that this prediction might come to pass.

Elder Elton is a ready thinker, apt and most interesting in conversation, a fluent speaker, and an energetic worker. His clear and simple way of explaining the Gospel makes him a very successful worker. He commands the respect of all his acquaintances and the love and confidence of his companions—those who know him best love him most.

He has the assurance of the united efforts of his co-laborers in this Conference, and surrounded as he is with men who love and respect him, both as a man and also as a faithful servant of God, it is expected that the work over which he is called to preside will maintain the high standing it gained under the management of his predecessors.

History of the Southern States Mission.

December, 1894—

This month begins under favorable auspices. Generally speaking, the Elders are being courteously received. What opposition they are encountering is of a "wordy" rather than a violent nature. A company of Elders arrived on the 9th from Utah and Colorado and were assigned to various Conferences in the Mission. On the 30th President Elias S. Kimball returned from Salt Lake with his family and has resumed his vigorous efforts in the missionary work.

Thus closes the year 1894, which will hereafter be memorable in missionary annals as marking a notable transition in public sentiment favorable to the Latter-day Saints and principles and truths of "Mormonism."

January, 1895—

This month and year opens under very favorable conditions. Elders are entirely free from sickness outside of slight colds. Owing to the extremely cold and inclement weather, Elders are not able to get out among the people to any great extent, but they are holding many meetings.

Freedom of access is accorded the Elders in many instances where heretofore they were excluded. The city of Nashvilel is now being canvassed by Elders H. C. Iverson and O. M. Sanderson, who are meeting with gratifying success. Pensacola, Fla., Mobile, Ala., Knoxville, Tenn., Owensboro and Paducah, Ky., are all being successfully worked.

Commendable zeal and faith has been exhibited by the Elders in entering and laboring in cities. On the 10th eight Elders arrived from the west and were assigned to various Conferences in the Mission. Jan. 30th another company were disposed of in the above mentioned way.

Elder Joseph S. Geddes was appointed President of the South Alabama Conference, to succeed Elder Ridges, lately released.

The Presidency of the Church have written the office that they have called upon Elder Benjamin W. Scott, now in Florida, to surrender his letter of appointment, because it is rumored that he is preaching Methodism—not "Mormonism"—in his brother's pulpit. He has never reported to the office, though he has been in the field since June, 1894.

February—

Elder Hugh W. Dougall, who has been laboring in West Virginia, was called into North Carolina to succeed Elder E. A. Griffin as President of that Conference.

Extremely cold weather has prevailed in the south during this winter, yet the Elders have not suffered.

The results following the house to house canvass are fruitful. Many communications are being received from investigators soliciting further information on the Gospel.

The annual report of the Sunday Schools of the Southern States Mission gives a total of 409 officers, teachers and pupils.

The result of the instructions given by President Elias S. Kimball during his visit among the Conferences, pertaining to tithing, is now beginning to bear fruit. From all parts of the Mission some tithing is being received.

A mobocratic incident occurred recently in North Carolina. Elders Isaiah Cox and Charles H. Blake entered Ashboro, where they took apartments at one of the hotels. About midnight they were visited by a mob of fifteen men, who escorted them "out of town" and warned them never to return. The rain was falling in torrents, and no shelter could be found by the Elders. As a result of this exposure Elder Cox contracted a severe cold and has since been unwell.

Elders Alma Andrus and Thomas Cooke, Jr., had a thrilling experience on the 17th of this month, while canvassing near Clinton, Hickman county, Ky. They approached a man named Kendale, who invited them to his home. They had conversed but a few minutes when Kendale began to abuse and slander the "Mormon" people in a very profane manner. The Elders began to explain to him the real condition of affairs. With an oath he jumped up and secured his shotgun, then told the Elders to "git out." They obeyed in haste, and as they were leaving he warned them that if they turned around he would "blow their brains out." They were kindly received by a constable, who lived a little further down the road, who promised to protect them. Nothing more was heard of Kendale and the Elders went happily on their way.

On the 27th a company of seventeen Elders arrived in Chattanooga from Utah. After spending two days in Chattanooga they were sent to various Conferences of the Mission.

THE DARK AGES.

BY ELDER A. ARROWSMITH.

THE SEVENTH CENTURY brought a great and prominent character from the abode of spirits; a mighty reformer, who had, or appeared to have, a mission of blood and extermination; his name was Mahomet; he came on his mission the beginning of the century in the year 612; his youth was spent in peace and serenity. He operated caravans on the deserts of Arabia, in traffic with the East Indian market from Bagdad, and engaged in peaceful pursuits; but he had a mission to fill, and stood at the head of an organization now counted by the hundreds of millions, and which was a scourge to Europe for over six hundred years, holding in check the growing influence of the enormities that were practiced in the name of Christianity.

The fiery genius of Mahomet aroused the dormant spirit of the Arab, who was a descendant of Ishmael. Many Bedouin tribes were united in defense of the new faith. A succession of unparalleled victories ensued; and within a few generations the Mahometans were established from Central Asia and the frontiers of India, to the shores of the Atlantic, in Morocco and Spain.

Mecca, the beloved city of the followers of Mahomet, his birthplace, is visited annually by thousands of pilgrims. When praying, the worshiper of Allah invariably turns his face towards Mecca. They are the most devout and religious people extant, and their charity and hospitality is truly commendable. An acquaintance of mine who labored among the Turks and Arabs, as a missionary, was almost won over to the Moslem faith by seeing such zeal and fervency manifest among them; he thought they were really a better people than the Christians, from a moral and religious standpoint. They accept Jesus as a Prophet, and have adopted many of His beautiful truths; the following in the Koran, the Mahometan Bible, is attributed to Jesus, and which are silent truths. "Never be joyful except when you look on your brother in love." "He who longs to be rich is like a man who drinks sea water: the more he drinks the more thirsty he becomes, and never leaves off drinking till he perishes."

So much for Mahomet, the founder of this sect, who personally appears to have been a good man, lovable and kind in his family, and especially devoted to his wife (who was the widow of his master). She it was who gave him money and influence. His spiritual nature (like Moses and other Prophets) appears to have been developed in the desert; in seclusion, away from the haunts of men; and he had a high sensitive nature, good ability, and has left in the Koran many grand truths.

Mahometans, Moslems, Mussulmans, Sarecens, are the names for the same class of people, and the faith of Mahomet is chiefly among the inhabitants of Turkey, Arabia and the northern portion of Africa, bordering on the Mediterranean Sea. Morocco and that portion of the world in this century was thickly populated by a class of people called the Moors, a warlike race that withstood the chivalry of Europe for years.

In this age of ignorance and barbarism, when nations were compelled by force of arms to adopt Christianity, was it not high time for the Almighty to send this decimating scourge, as multitudes of His people, the Jews, were compelled by violence and force to accept the doctrines taught by Christianity, which were naturally obnoxious and repugnant to them; nevertheless they were taken forcibly, and baptized wholly against their will; this same method of converting was common in Spain and Gaul, and appeared quite successful. The whole world was in a darkened ignorant state, and there seemed to be no exercise of the individual manhood which education brings, but the masses were in total subjection to the Priest.

The monasteries were full of corruption and deceit, so says the historian: superinduced by sordid ambition and worldly emoluments; and they were principally supported by men who had lived reprobate lives before God. Profligate sinners sought forgiveness of sins, by leaving their fortunes and all their earthly possessions to the monks, who did their praying for them. Thus the way was left open for men of vile intent to commit all manner of abominations, and in the end of their career to get the prayers and absolution of an abominable priesthood, by paying a stipulated fee. Such became the custom in the sixth century, and continued to an alarming extent during the crusades. Thus the coffers of the church were filled and enriched, while the clergy revelled in luxury and voluptuousness by their extortion and greed. Is there any wonder that the Saracen overran Europe, considering it part of his mission to exterminate the Christian; believing that if he died while engaged in such glorious (?) work his inheritance and bliss was secure in Paradise. This warlike and fanatical race were not subdued and conquered until the overthrow of Granada in the year 1492; and in that time (six centuries) millions of lives had been lost, sacrificed in a great religious war between two powerful factions, Christianity and Mahometanism.

Europe was a veritable military camp during this time, and the country was filled with religious fanatics of all classes, rich and poor, high and low, all pretended followers of that meek and lowly Man of Nazareth, who said, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." These fanatics would gird on their swords and murder their fellow-men in the name of religion. What crimes have not been committed in the name of religion? But the gross superstitions that beclouded the earth during the Dark Ages almost called for the vengeance of a just God, that He might eradicate and totally exterminate the whole human family because they had become a vile blot on the earth and a stench in His nostrils, and cause him to say (as He did before the deluge when He destroyed the antideluvians) that it repented Him that He had made man upon the earth. However, God is merciful and full of charity and long suffering, and because of this magnanimity, often the wrath of men is turned to praise.

How many have passed judgment upon Mahomet, and other great men, and how ready we poor weak mortals are to adjudicate matters that God alone should determine. Our Father, as He sits enthroned in the heavens, is in possession of the white stone that constitutes Him a seer, and dwelling upon a planet of purity, like unto a vast Urim, He knows all things, even from the beginning, and He determined the times before appointed, and set the bounds of the habitations of the children of men. He knows the various qualification of every spirit that dwelt with Him; as in its primeval state it was subjected to a variety of tests, and comes here to be yet further tried.

He saw the noble and the great, as they stood and shouted for joy, in the contemplation of His glorious designs. Jesus, Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses and all the Prophets He foreknew, and duly appointed them in their times and their seasons, to come on this planet, with the fullness of His Priesthood; with authority to administer His everlasting Gospel and play their parts as described in Holy Writ.

He also foreknew and duly appointed the great reformers, Confucius, Brahma and Buddha, to enlighten His children in the far east; also a Socrates and Plato to enlighten the spiritually degenerate Greek; likewise a Mahomet to preserve a degree of intelligence and enlightenment during the age of spiritual darkness, and that His children might have that degree of spiritual light, that they alone could comprehend, just as He gave the carnal laws to Israel, when they were unable to grasp the higher laws of the Melchisedek priesthood, as given through His servant Moses; He sent them the carnal laws, which would school them into the acceptance of greater truths in their advancement as progressive beings.

Thus Pharoah, Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Alexander, Caesar, Tamerlane, Napoleon and other great warriors were foreordained to their special missions, to play their part in the world's drama. All the statesmen and poets were known in the spirit world, and their various qualifications passed upon, and they come here in their times and seasons and reap that which they have sown. So our future will be largely determined by our present acts.

Thus God has been ever merciful throughout all ages; and we can see His handicraft exhibited among all His children, be he black, white, yellow or red, and the child's life in his primeval walk has undoubtedly determined his appointment in the flesh; thus we see the great variety of spirits. God desires all His children to come unto perfection and be like Him.

RABBI WEISS ON "MORMONISM."

Text: Psalm 15:3.

At the earliest infancy of religion, as at the present day, there seems to have been a tendency of people to regard themselves better than others, when they performed an ostentatious function of ceremonies, praying louder and more than others, putting on a sanctimonious appearance, while their modus vivendi was not altogether in harmony with their functions. This must have been the case at the time David lived, for in his fifteenth Psalm the question is raised:

"Oh, Lord, who shall tarry in Thy tent? Who shall dwell in Thy holy hill?" In other words, briefly stated, Who shall be considered truly religious? That is what it means. Whether it is the Lord that answers, or whether the questioner puts down the reply himself, we cannot state, but sure it is that the answer is the quintescence of religion, pure and holy, as it says:

"He that walketh uprightly and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart; that hath no slander upon his tongue; that doeth his neighbor no evil, nor beareth reproach against his fellow-man."

Let us understand here, for once and forever, that Bible character is no criterion to go by. It is nowhere said in the Bible that we must copy the life of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Saul, David or Solomon; even Moses and the Prophets all lived in ages when the requirements of conduct and mode of life were different from the requirements of today. The life of any Bible character would not suit today; but the ordinances, laws and precepts laid down for our moral guidance are as valid today as they were when given. There may be some trivial matters that could perhaps stand a little amendation, but integrally they are good and a safe method to govern by our moral virtues. Take our text, that asks, who is considered truly religious, and the defining answer, could we make an improvement on it? Methinks not. Let us then see the various denominations, all calling themselves Christian, how they antagonize and oppose each other. Each holding pre-eminence over the others, qualifying itself the true religion, with the others, if not exactly false, yet not altogether as divine and God-accepted. Not being a Christian myself, I consider them all right and all wrong; all right in so far as honesty and earnestness is concerned. They follow the dictates of their conscience, the convictions of their hearts, and the truth as they can see it—as it was educated into them. The Catholic is as right as I am; the Protestant is as right as the Catholic; the Episcopalian as the Methodist, etc.; but they are all wrong when they impugn the motives of others and derogate the religion of others. Any person that carries in his bosom ill-will, that harbors in his breast maleficence for his fellow-man of another religion, has the false religion, which becomes a thousand times worse when he maligns and traduces another religion of which he is ignorant. I don't care what religion one confesses, it is the true one, as long as he walks uprightly and works righteousness, speaking the truth in his heart, slandering nobody, doing his neighbor no evil and bearing no reproach against him; but he must not speak the truth with his mouth while his heart is bent in slandering and evil doing and reproaching of others. They may be the most ardent supporters of a church and the most devout adherents to a religion, they have not the remotest conception of truth if they oppose and antagonize another religion. It is really irreligious, and un-American in principle that recognizes not the rights of all, in religion as in politics.

That spirit that cried in ages past: "Oh, that's nothing, the Jew must be burned!" as per Lessing's illustration in his Nathan the Wise, is alive yet to a certain degree. That spirit that led a Bruno, a Huss, a Jerome, a Servetus, and many, many other good and noble men to the stakes, is still nestled in the bosom of some men, if not in quite a virulous form, malignant enough to prepare a very bitter cup for people of other religions.

Again and again we read of some outrages that were perpetrated on some Mormon Elders that go about preaching and teaching their religion. Why they are not as entitled to their mode of faith as the other Christian denominations I cannot see. In my estimation the Mormon religion is not better nor worse than the other Christian denominations, but I discover a luminous reason that pleads their cause when the President of their organization, located here, invites honest criticism, stating that he is willing to correct any errors that may be pointed out to him in his faith and accept any truth that may be brought to his conviction. Now, that is honest and right. But it is claimed that Mormons are polygamous. That I do not know, but I do know that it is by law prohibited and punished if apprehended. Still, it is claimed, they practice it on the sly. Perhaps some do, but is it not forbidden not to steal, yet hundreds of thieves are caught yearly. Will you blame Christianity for it because the thieves are Christians? It is a crime to murder, yet murders are committed. Should Christianity be persecuted because the murderers belong to them? And the same reason should stand for Mormonism. If some Mormons commit crime will you hold all Mormons accountable for it? We have no right to treat Mormons worse than anybody else, especially when I have the reliable fact for my authority that in their state, Utah, every religion can hold forth with perfect freedom and safety. Who is the more magnanimous, they or the other Christians?

There is another class of religious people that are unjustly dealt with. That is the Seventh Day Adventists. They hold that Saturday is the seventh day of the week, the day the Lord hath hallowed to be the Sabbath, and since there is no evidence found in the New Testament that this Sabbath was ever revoked, they keep that Sabbath holy. They interfere with nobody's religion, yet they are arrested and punished. They generally work in the field, where their noise disturbs nobody and their work hurts and harms nobody. Why should they be molested? Since we cannot make the world think alike, how can we expect to bring people to the Christian religion that all believe alike in the Sunday Sabbath? And forced religion is no religion. If we can bring others to our way of believing with argument and persuasion, well and good; if not, harshness and ill-treatment is not according to divine ordinance and human justice. Thus we protest against any unjust treatment of any persons, and the Mormons and the Seventh Day Adventists, who are not less Christians than any of the other denominations, should be regarded the

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

Deseret News.

"Phillips Congregational Church has issued a call to the Rev. B. M. Hogan, the present pastor of the Congregational Church of Park City. Wonder where the Lord comes in.

MISSIONARY LABORS.

The Apostle Paul in speaking of the ancient servants of God, declared that the world was not worthy of them. His words are equally applicable to the Elders of Israel in these latter days. Called of God to preach the fulness of the everlasting Gospel, they go forth to the world "as sheep among wolves," trusting in the Lord for sustenance and protection. Private interests and family affections—the most potent influences that sway the world, have no power to hold them back when the voice of duty bids them depart. Throwing down the hammer and the axe, the spade and the plough, the palette and the pen, after a hurried preparation of a few days or hours, they bid farewell to their loved ones, and start for distant lands.

Bearing their own expenses, or depending on the bounty of hearts the Lord may soften, they travel among strangers to preach an unwelcome faith. No difference to them if they understand not the language of the people where they labor, the certainty that God has sent them supports them in their trials, and the Spirit of the Holy One helps them to gain the knowledge they lack. They visit the poor and the lonely, comfort the broken hearted, and bring liberty to the oppressed.

How different from the hirelings among the Christian sects! Salaried and pampered, they preach for the praise of men, bow down to the rich and the proud, and tickle the itching ears of a corrupt generation with soft and flattering speeches. The world applauds them, and receives their man-made creeds with gladness, while the messengers of heaven wander in their midst unnoticed or despised, except by a few to whom the truth is precious. The world, indeed, is "not worthy" of them.

But is their mission properly appreciated by the Saints? Do they fully realize that those who come from Zion for their benefit, although laboring, perhaps, in weakness, bear upon them the holy anointing? Do they receive their teachings with thankfulness? Do they administer to them in carnal things, as they are administered to in spiritual things? These are questions that the Saints will do well to think upon.

There is, however, another view of this subject. Although the missionaries from Zion are often placed in trying positions, yet, after all, in their efforts to do good, they are the persons who receive the greatest benefit. Opportunities are afforded them to improve their minds, to obtain a knowledge of the world, of manners and customs, of countries, kingdoms, languages, laws, and principles, such as many of them have never had before in their lives. They are brought in contact with all kinds of people, and may thus obtain a better knowledge of human nature than, perhaps, could be gained under any other circumstances; above all this, they are compelled, if they desire to magnify their callings, to draw near unto the Lord for continual help and guidance, and in the blessings thus obtained, they may gain a clearer comprehension of their holy religion, a more lively faith in God, and a testimony of the truth, certain, immovable, and everlasting.

And when their mission is fulfilled, if accomplished honorably, what joyful feelings fill their hearts on their return to the Prophets of God and their families and friends in Zion! The consciousness of having kept themselves pure and undefiled in the midst of a wicked and adulterous generation, will endow them with a holy boldness, and stamp them with an evidence of faithfulness, which will increase unto them the confidence and esteem of their leaders. But how miserable must be their condition, and how sad and desponding their feelings, if they should go home knowing that their garments are spotted, their sacred covenant violated, and the glory of their Priesthood dimmed and tarnished. Shades of darkness would rest upon their brow, and the misery of hell upon their hearts!

Elders of Israel! strive to make your missions profitable and honorable! Not profitable in dollars and cents, but in the enduring riches of eternity, in the rich faith. Not honorable in the estimation of the wicked, but in having the favor of God, the confidence and esteem of your leaders, and the blessings of the honest in heart. Then your glory shall be as an eternal sun, and your light shall shine forever and ever.

Let the Saints in these lands give diligent heed to the instructions which the servants of God have to deliver to them, and esteem it as a privilege to be permitted to assist them in their labors; for by so doing they will be walking in a safe path, and will be entitled to share in the glory of the work that is accomplished. And let all the world hearken unto the voice of these men of God, who are foregoing the joys of home and its sweet companionships for their enlightenment. Receive them into your houses, open your halls and meeting places, that they may preach unto you the words of eternal life, and you may learn how to escape the overwhelming scourge that is about to come forth upon all the earth, and to obtain salvation in the kingdom of our God.—Millenial Star, Vol. 20.

Leo Appoints His Successor.

It is asserted that the Pope, after the recent ceremony of opening the holy door at St. Peter's cathedral, addressed his intimate entourage and said:

"I thank divine Providence for granting me the grace of being able to celebrate this great function, and I wish for my successor grandeur and long reign, to the greater glory of God.

"My successor will be young, as compared with my own age, and will have time to see many glories of the papacy and the church."

Later, Leo clearly designated Cardinal Cirolemano Maria Gotti, prefect of the congregation of indulgences and sacred relics, as his successor. Cardinal Gotti, the famous Genoese monk, is a man of great piety and modesty. Now about 64 years of age, he always lived the life of an ascetic, and despite the dignity of a prince of the church, he always sleeps in a cell and on a hard mattress.

Have patience awhile; slanders are not long-lived. Truth is the child of time; ere long she shall appear to vindicate thee.

PRESIDENT RICH REPLIES TO DR. BROUGHER'S TIRADE.

The following letter was written by President Rich in reply to an unjust attack on "Mormonism" made by Dr. Brougher, of the First Baptist church, of this city (Chattanooga):

Chattanooga, Dec. 25.

Rev. J. Whitcomb Brougher, Chattanooga, Tenn.

My Dear Sir—Upon my return from Chicago Friday evening my attention was called to an article in the Chattanooga News of Dec. 18, 1899, purporting to be a partial report of a sermon delivered by you, in your church, the First Baptist, on the subject of "Mormonism and Polygamy." I take it from what parties who were present have told me that the report is substantially correct. I am an Elder in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in charge of the "Mormon" missionary work in the south, headquarters in this city and as a representative of the people whom you have without foundation so unjustly charged with being all that is unholy, I feel it a duty, so far as possible, in a short letter, to disprove your unwarranted attack. With a desire to be fair I hope, as a matter of justice, that you will deign to read and consider what follows as a reply to the very unkind things you have said about an honest, God-fearing people. There are two sides to every question, and the good book, which you claim to take for your "rule of faith and practice," says he that judgeth a matter before he heareth it is not wise.

It is apparent, from the newspaper report, that you are either woefully ignorant of what the world is pleased to nick-name Mormonism, or else you are filled with prejudice and prompted by sinister motives. Certainly no intelligent, fair-minded person would make the statements attributed to you on that Sunday evening, in this enlightened age, if only a casual investigation, of the subject in hand, had been made. We admit that, like the Saints 1800 years ago, we are everywhere spoken evil against, and your sermon has the appearance of being conceived in the gall of bitterness, and contains all the earmarks of certain tracts that have been written and widely distributed by our enemies. The News stated you handled the subject without gloves, and I trust that if occasionally, in the course of this letter, I exhibit the bare knuckles, you will not be offended. I assure you that my only desire in writing this is to set you right, if you are after truth, on the question of salvation; and to correct the general impression "can any good come out of Nazareth" created against my people by the many falsehoods circulated about them.

Your first misstatement is that "Mormonism is based on a tissue of lies." Did you have the Bible in view when you said this, or where did you obtain the information? Had you, before delivering your sermon, ever conversed with a "Mormon?" Have you ever read any of our works, treating on the founding and the fundamental principles of the religion you are seeking to belittle and trample in the mire? You failed to quote any authority for this extraordinary assertion, and surely you would not go to the writings of a Methodist minister, or the writings of some enemy of Mormonism as authority on our belief. If you wished to learn of the Catholic faith would it be fair to obtain your information from a Presbyterian clergyman? In all fairness should not the rule you apply to others apply to us? You have simply quoted from our enemies. By using that rule of reasoning we can even do away with the resurrection of the Master, for did not the Roman soldiers say that Christ was not resurrected, but that while they slept the friends of the Redeemer came and stole the body away? Only the friends of Christ said He was risen, and you build your faith on what our Savior and His friends said. In handling this question why did you not take the Bible, "the rule of your faith and practice," and expose "Mormonism" principle by principle? Perhaps you have profited by the experience of others before you and are too wise to undertake such a large contract? Our faith would be popular today if it had only a form of godliness, and we defy you or any other man, to prove from the Bible, or the great book of reason, that "Mormonism is based on a tissue of lies."

You say that Joseph Smith was an idle, vicious, disreputable young man, etc. Again, we ask from what source did you receive your information? Again the answer comes back, from our enemies. Joseph Smith was an honest, sober, industrious young man, and we can furnish just as many reputable witnesses to this effect as you can furnish that he was the embodiment of all that was bad. Why, the enemies of our Savior said He was a winebibber, a blasphemer, etc. Did that prove Him such? In the case of Christ you would answer no, but in the case of Joseph Smith we presume you would say yes. According to a brass tablet, found in the year 1280 among a quantity of records of the Kingdom of Naples, in the city of Aguilla, Pontius Pilate sentenced Jesus to be nailed to the cross for six reasons, as follows:

"1. Jesus is a disturber of the peace.

"2. Jesus has taught the people sedition.

"3. Jesus is an enemy of the laws.

"4. Jesus calls Himself the Son of God.

"5. Jesus calls Himself the King of Israel.

"6. Jesus disturbed the worship of the temple by leading a mob of people with palms in their hands."

This sounds very much like the usual charges made against Joseph Smith and the Mormon Elders, at the present time, does it not? Joseph Smith sealed his testimony with his blood. He was dragged before the courts of the land, by his enemies, some forty-eight times, and the courts always pronounced him not guilty. Go to the court records and see. His enemies admitted they could not reach him through the law, and declared that powder and ball should.

Evidently you have heard of the Book of Mormon, for you mention it. Get one and read it, and then you will be better able to tell what the Latter-day Saints claim for that sacred book. You claim the Book of Mormon found its origin in the old Solomon Spaulding MSS. Your reference to this long since exploded theory as accounting for this book gives one who is the least bit informed a key to the ancientness of the falsehoods from which you preached your sermon. After you have read the Book of Mormon go to Oberlin college, Oberlin, O., and there examine the old Spaulding MSS., and compare the two; then, if you are wise, you will never rehash that old dried up argument again. The Book of Mormon does not conflict in points of doctrine with the Bible, and it gives a history of the people who once inhabited this continent, accounting for the origin of the American Indians.

You again display your ignorance of the subject in hand when you say that we place Joseph Smith above Jesus Christ. A greater falsehood never was told, but we are pleased to inform you that we believe Joseph Smith to be a Prophet of God, and that he was the instrument in the hand of God in restoring again the Gospel to earth. Is this a crime? If we believed more in Joseph Smith than in Jesus, would we not have named the church after him, as some of our enemies have named theirs after their founders, instead of calling it the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints? You know on one occasion the Saints were asking Paul about the second coming of our Savior, and Paul, in second Thes. 2:3-4, said that He (Jesus) was not to come until or except there should be a falling away first, showing that there was to be an apostacy from the Gospel. Space will not permit me to quote the many other passages in the Bible proving that there was to be an apostacy, and that in the latter days a restoration was to take place, as per the dream of Nebuchadnezzar, interpreted by Daniel, and according to Revelations, 14th chapter, 6th verse, the restoration was to be made by an angel. Now, if that restoration has not been made, it is yet to be made, and believers in the Bible at least should be looking for that angel which was to fly through the midst of heaven. No doubt you believe that we are living in the latter days, and we ask, is there anything unreasonable, especially if we consider Holy Writ, in our claiming that the angel seen by John has flown, appeared to Joseph Smith, and thus fulfilled the prophecy that the Gospel was to be restored? We can give you an abundance of Scripture to prove our point, and if you would read our literature you would have a much more intelligent conception of "Mormonism and Polygamy." To truth seekers, those who are willing to lay aside hatred, prejudice, and investigate, we say we are prepared to give reason and Scripture to prove every doctrine we advocate. Robert Ingersol says, in his "Best Argument Against Christianity," that there is more proof for the miracles of Joseph Smith than there is for those performed by Christ.

Another proposition laid down by you is "its doctrines are likewise Pernicious and Blasphemous."

Then you quote from the Journal of Discourses and dilate upon our belief in the materiality of God, etc. We are very sorry to know that you deny the existence of a God that is to some extent comprehensible, and you again make yourself ridiculous in the eyes of those who know something of both sides of the question. You put it down as blasphemy to believe it possible that we, the children (remember children) of God, can become like unto our Father. Did you ever analyze "Our Father which art in heaven?" Your "rule of faith and practice" says man was created in the image of God. It further says that Jesus, our elder brother, was in the image of God, so much so that He said "he that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Why did He say this? Because Jesus was in the "express image" of the Father, and in seeing one, we would virtually see the other. Jesus had flesh and bones, a body like ours, and the Bible informs us that He ascended into heaven after His resurrection, having the same body that He had at the time of His crucifixion. Jesus was so much like other men that He was called the carpenter's son, and for daring to say He was the Son of God His enemies hanged Him on the cross. Now, as Jesus was like we are, and is like we are, having a body of flesh and bones, and is in the express image of the Father, must not God have a body of flesh and bones? How will you twist the Scripture to make Him out otherwise? What do you think of Jesus becoming so corrupt as to eat fish after His resurrection? Are you prepared to say He did not? Do you remember that the angel said (Acts 1:11), "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven?" Jesus went away into heaven with a body of flesh and bones. Do you think He will return, as promised, with a body of flesh and bones, or do you think He will be just a shadow? Now, is it blasphemy, according to Scripture, to believe God to be a tangible being, with body, parts and passions? Are we criminals, and to be ostracized from society, for believing in the Bible? We refer to a living, practical belief. In your researches of the Bible perhaps you have relied too much on "Commentries" (private interpretations of the Scripture), and if you will call at our office we will be pleased to point out to you many essential truths which apparently have escaped your notice, and which space will not permit giving in this short communication.

You will remember that the "wise men" took issue with Jesus, and that He chose the illiterate fisherman to be His chief Apostle. Is it not possible that the "wise men" of today might learn wisdom pertaining to salvation from the humble "Mormon" Elder? Pardon the digression. I said that you denied and if the above is not sufficient I will now prove it to you. You are in a worse condition than the infidel, because the infidel says "I don't know," while a definition of your God implies a pure and simple "nothing," an "immaterial" being. You charge us of believing in a material God—"gross materiality" you call it, a God with body, parts and passions, etc., which from what you have read above, you will see we are pleased to acknowledge. From your charge we can take it in no other way, and arrive at no other conclusion than that you believe in a God without body, parts and passion, and as the definition goes, nowhere present yet everywhere present, etc. The definition of your God

Reminds Me of a Story.

At a circus one clown asked a brother clown if he had ever seen "nothing." The answer was in the negative. Well, says the first, I will show it to you; shut your eyes. The second shut his eyes and the first said: "What do you see?" The answer came "nothing." Just as I expected," said the first, "you have seen it, open your eyes." Now, Brother Brougher, shut your eyes and what do you see? "Nothing," of course; well, that's him. The mysterious Santa Claus is "not in it" with such a being. Let me ask now seriously, can you conceive of anything "immaterial?" Pray how are we to know a being without a body, parts, or passions? John says it is life eternal to know God, but it is a puzzler to figure out how we can know a being that is everywhere present and yet nowhere present. Are you not mistaken? Of course the things of God are understood by the Spirit of God, but it surely would take a very strong pair of spiritual spectacles to see a being that is nowhere present, without parts, or body to see. Perhaps you will turn away from this in disgust, and impatiently say that I don't understand the beauty of your god, but how can I understand the beauty if it has none? Can you figure anything but zero out of it? Come, be honest (if you can't be decent) and forsake your idol.

There are many passages in the Bible to prove that God Has a Body, Parts and Passions, flesh and bones, just as have His children. For instance, Adam heard the voice of the Lord, Gen. 3:9-10. He must have a voice. God talked with Noah, Gen. 13-21, and remembered Noah, 8-1. So He must have a mouth, tongue and a memory. Abraham ate and talked with the Lord, Gen. 18. Jacob saw God face to face. Moses talked to Him as one speaks with a friend, Ex. 33-11. Moses saw His back parts, Ex. 23, the heavens are the work of Thine hands, Heb. 1:10, and John says in Revelation, first chapter, that God has a head, and that He has hair like wool. From these passages we learn that God has a face, back parts, head, hair, hands, etc., and it ought to be conclusive evidence of God being a reasonable being. Then the Bible is full of passages telling us of the love, mercy, hatred, etc., of our Father in heaven, which are all passions, are they not? We have only referred to a few quotations on this point, but before closing the subject I cannot refrain from quoting Deut. 4:28, which says "that the time should come when the children of Israel should so far degrade themselves as to worship gods, the work of men's hands, wood and stone, which neither see nor hear, nor eat nor smell." Can you get any inference from this Scripture other than that God is possessed of all these faculties? Are you certain you are not an Israelite, come to fulfill the above prophecy? Can you show one passage of Scripture to prove that God has neither body, parts, nor passions? No, you cannot.

You make the terrible charge that

We Believe in Many Gods.

We solemnly plead guilty to believing in many Gods. If this is a crime it is time for a new translation of the Holy Scriptures. Does not the good book say "and God said, let us make man in our own image?" What are you going to do with the words "us" and "our" in this Scripture? Does this not prove a plurality of Gods? Ex. 16-11 says "who is like unto Thee, O Lord, among the Gods?" Deut. 10-17: "Lord your God is God of Gods, and Lord of Lords." Paul also refers to the King of Kings and the Lord of Lords, I Tim. 6-15, also see 2 Chron. 2-5, Psalms 86-5, Dan. 2-47, Dan. 4-8, Dan. 11-36. If you desire any more Scripture on this subject we will be pleased to give you chapter and verse. Notwithstanding, we believe that there are many Gods, we worship only one God, the Father of Jesus Christ. Our enemies do not put it in this light, do they? The devil is anxious to have you believe a lie and be damned.

You next prate about "Mormonism" being and that "social purity" is almost an unknown quantity in Utah, and sing the old familiar song about polygamy. Don't you think you could do better by looking closer to home? If the truth were known you would probably find more polygamy (on the European plan) than ever was known among the Mormons (on the Patriachial plan). In fact, you say adultery and fornication are destroying the nation. We agree with you that these evils exist to an alarming extent, but most emphatically deny that there is any more cause, at least, to make the Mormons a special object of purity work than there is to purify other communities. If Mormonism is indeed a monster, as you claim, and if social purity, as you assert, is almost unknown among us, then what a horrible condition the Mormon people must be in. But stay; the Master says "By their fruits ye shall know them." Mormonism goes into the entire civilized world, and in this age, as in the days of Christ, it is the poor, and you will claim the ignorant, who embrace it. Very well, Mormonism takes them to a place where you claim social purity is almost unknown; what a horrible condition these poor ignorant, deluded creatures must be in in a few years.

Now, listen, Brother Brougher, 90 per cent. of the Mormon people and upon their own farms. Utah stands equal to Massachusetts, in education, the rate of illiteracy is about 3 per cent.: she stands head and shoulders above 90 per cent. of the states in the union, when it comes to educational facilities, and until the advent of what you call civilization came to Christianize us poor heathens, there were no brothels or saloons in Utah. And yet, social purity, you say, is almost unknown among us. I leave the public to judge the tree by its fruits, and in passing your wholesale libel upon men, women and children, will drop you by saying if "from the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." To your heart let me say "thou shalt not lie," and "thou shalt not bear false witness," while to your mouth let me prescribe soap and water. I do not care to

Live in Their Own Homes

with you, because there is a law in Tennessee against teaching it, and punishing those who do teach it; we should obey the law, and right here let me inform you that the twelfth article of our faith reads: "We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers and magistrates, in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law." This part of our religion is taught and as carefully kept as any other part of our religion. However, Roberts will be cast out of the House of Representatives, and you ministers who are to receive congratulations for accomplishing this mighty victory over B. H. Roberts should keep your sleeves rolled up until you succeed in also banishing the polygamous Bible from the national headquarters. The Bible teaches polygamy, and, looking through your eyeglasses, is therefore antagonistic to the "purity of the American home," and a law breaker, in the state of Tennessee. I enter this complaint against the Divine record, and will now proceed to convict the prisoner at the bar. In accusing the Bible of being antagonistic to purity in the American home, by charging that it teaches polygamy, I ask that, in addition to the evidence which I shall produce, all the evidence introduced against Roberts be accepted and made a part of the case. Now, if I can establish that the Bible is a teacher of polygamy, I contend I have made my case, and ask that the law be enforced and the offending parts of the Bible cast out.

Abraham was a polygamist and the friend of God. God knew he was a polygamist when He made him His friend. Jacob had four wives, and their polygamous sons, we are informed, are to be honored by having their names inscribed over the pearly gates of the beautiful city. Suppose you were to fool Saint Peter and get into heaven, how would you feel clasped to the bosom of the polygamous Abraham? Do you suppose you can sufficiently humble yourself to go in at one of those polygamous gates and mingle with the polygamous sons of Jacob? Moses had more than one wife, and yet he was a Prophet of God. Just think of a polygamist leading the chosen people of the Lord. All the Judges of Israel and all her chosen kings which were appointed by God, including Saul, David and Solomon, were polygamists, and the descendants of these polygamists were highly honored of the Lord. The Prophet Samuel, and even Jesus, our Savior, came through polygamous lineage. The Bible also says that polygamous relations shall exist in the last days when men would become decimated, that their scarcity would cause seven women to take hold of one man and desire to be called by his name to take away their reproach, Isa. 4-1. Are we not informed that David did not sin except in the case of Uriah, the Hitite? Did not the Lord say through Nathan the prophet that he, the Lord, had given David Saul's wives? If all these parties could find favor with God, although they were polygamists and God knew it, would it be unscriptural to believe that polygamists might find favor with our Heavenly Father in these days? The Bible does not say that we shall have no more than one wife, and can we get anything else out of these instances than that the Bible sanctions polygamy? Of course you will say that Paul says a Bishop is to be the husband of one wife, but we ask does he say a Bishop cannot have more than one wife? Now, from these passages of Scripture, I ask that the prisoner, the Bible, be convicted and be punished under the laws of Tennessee.

We are charged with being

"Disloyal and Un-American."

To substantiate this statement would you bring forth the record of the famous Utah batteries in the Philippines? Or would you point to the Mormon battalion in the war with Mexico, or to the raising of the stars and stripes on Ensign Peak, when the Mormon Pioneers entered Salt Lake valley? Kindly furnish proof. Your rule of faith and practice says "by their fruits ye shall know them," and we are perfectly willing to be judged by that rule, in loyalty as in all other things.

To create a greater impression upon your hearers, I am also informed that you said we would be willing to pay the railroad fare of any of the fair mothers and daughters of this land to Utah, if they could but be induced to identify themselves with this "monstrous and destroying system." Did you believe that when you said it? We again ask for proof. Remember that the burden of proof falls on the accuser. This is only another of the falsehoods circulated about the Latter-day Saints, and you cannot point to a single instance. We do no coax, or persuade, or inveigle people into our church. We lay before them the principles of the Gospel, and if they want to accept them, all well and good, we rejoice over it, but if they do not choose to accept it, we do not send them to the bottom of a bottomless pit, there to fall into a lake of fire and brimstone and burn, and sizzle and fry forever and forever. Your hell is as big a monstrocity as your god. Incomprehensible, unfathomable, beyond the bounds of time and space, reason and everything else.

I must not forget the preface of your remarks to the effect that there were some things about the "Mormon" church that before it could be looked upon as a Christian church. What constitutes a Christian? Is it not one who lives up to the Gospel of Christ? We are very anxious to be set right; if we are wrong, we would like you to take your "rule of faith and practice" and point out to us wherein we differ with the Bible. I have made somewhat of a study of the teachings of our Savior, and would be pleased to have you answer the following questions, keeping in view the injunction of Isaiah, "to the law and to the testimony, and if they speak not according to these words it is because there is no light in them;" also the word of Paul to the Gallatian Saints to the effect "if any man preach any other Gospel than that which he preached, let him be accursed." First, where does the Bible give you authority to call your church "The First Baptist?" In Ephesians 5:23-24 it is recorded as wives take husbands' names, so the church takes the Savior's name (Jesus Christ); how do you harmonize that passage with the name of your church? Can you find any other name given God's people than "Saints" of the Most High?

Who Called You to Preach?

Paul says, Heb. 5:4, "and no man taketh this honor unto himself but he that is called of God as was Aaron." Remember Paul says "no man," and you know Aaron was called by revelation through a Prophet of God. Were you called by a Prophet of God? If you say the Bible gives you athority to preach, then "any man" can get a Bible and thereby have authority to preach, baptize and minister in the ordinances of the Gospel.

On the same principle, and with as much propriety, I could purchase a law book and set myself up to be a justice of the peace, or Governor of Tennessee. Is this not so? "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the Saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth into an holy temple in the Lord." (Eph. 2:18-21.) No one will dispute that the foundation of Apostles and Prophets is revelation. Christ said to Peter: "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Is your church founded on revelation—living, modern, and not dead? "And He gave some, Apostles; and some, Prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, etc. (Eph. 4.) Have you Prophets and Apostles in your church? These officers were to remain in the church until "we all" come to a unity of the faith.

Are We to a Unity?

Surely you and I are not in a unity of the faith, and what about the hundreds of other denominations claiming to be the true followers of Christ? Do we need perfecting and edifying? If so, we must need Prophets, and Apostles, and all the other officers mentioned by Paul, to perfect us, and to keep us from being driven and tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine. Can you find any Scripture changing this order of things? You cannot.

Do you believe that signs shall follow the believers, as recorded in Mark, 16th chapter? We have no record of this promise to the believers being repealed, and Paul says (1 Cor., 13th chapter), that spiritual gifts were to remain in the church until that which is perfect is come. Has perfection come? Peter says (Acts 2:38) that baptism is for the remission of sins. Do you believe it?

You teach that

to salvation, and that it is only an outward sign of an inward grace. Jesus says, Mark 16:16: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not (and consequently is not baptized) shall be damned."

Peter commanded the people on the day of Pentecost to be baptized. Peter was the chief Apostle and had the power to bind on earth and it should be bound in heaven. Does this not make baptism a command of God? If it is a command of God, is it not essential to salvation? If this is not essential, why not do away with that part of the commission which commands His disciples to go and preach? Are you sure the teachings of your church are in strict accord with the Divine record?

James says, 5:14-15: "Is any sick among you, let him call for the Elders of the church: and let them pray over him, annoint him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sin, they shall be forgiven him." Do you call for the Elders? You took for

Your Subject Last Night

"If Christ should come to Chattanooga, where would He go?" Now, Brother Brougher, stand up. If He should come, where would He go? He commanded that His Gospel should be made free and His ministers should travel without purse or scrip. If He were hunting for His friends, would He call upon those who declare that His promises have fallen to the ground unfulfilled, and that the blessings do not follow the believers? He has placed Apostles and Prophets in the church, with a decree that they should remain until we all come to a unity of the faith. Would He call those His friends who declare "they are no longer needed and are not to remain until we all come to a unity of the faith?" He told the generation to whom He came (1800 years ago) that their great sin consisted in worshiping dead Prophets, while they persecuted those who believed in living oracles. Would He call on those who engage in the same business today? He never resorted to abuse for an argument. If He came would He love those who do? He was not a character assassin. Would He love those who are? But stay, we do not know where He would go, or who He would call upon, because when He was here before He said: "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance," and He might say that His mission was not entirely finished, so we cannot tell where He would go, and so you might see him.

Now, Brother Brougher, just a word. Did you ever listen to an argument against "Mormons" from the standpoint of Scripture and reason? No, you never have and you never will. Did it ever occur to you that it was a most cowardly ambition which induces you to attack a party in a place and at a time when retaliation would have been anything but decent? If so, will you grant us the privilege of defending ourselves, from the pulpit and before that congregation which were so disgraced by your tirade on Sunday evening?

Now, in conclusion, let me say that we are not here to stir up strife, but we propose to defend ourselves whenever attacked, so I close, wishing you a merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

RABBI WEISS ON "MORMONISM."

same. All men must be treated right!

This is the spirit of true religion. With this sentiment imbedded in our hearts, we abide in the tabernacle of God—we dwell in His holy hill, the lofty eminence of true religion. Walking uprightly is a part of religion, yet if we do not we are held accountable for our actions by society and law. But speaking truth in our heart and having no slander on our tongue, doing no evil to our neighbor and bearing no reproach against our fellow-man, characterizes in us true religion. Let me say here that it is not my definition, but the spirit of the text, for neighbor and fellow-man throughout Scripture literature applies to non-Israelites. Israelites were always called brothers, so when that commandment that tells us not to bear false witness against our neighbor, strictly means not to speak evil against any man, nor follow any religion at all, we are nevertheless the creatures of the same God and the children of the same Father.

A Testimony.

Sister Augustus Maybush, of Staunton, Va., asks space, which we gladly grant, to express her testimony.

She attended services conducted by the Latter-day Saint Elders and was so impressed with what they said that she determined to put into practice some of the teachings of these Elders, viz., to ask the Lord the proper way to go. She humbly prayed to the Lord, and did also, the very necessary part of an investigator, informed her mind of the doctrine.

She now bears this testimony: "I want to bear testimony that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the true Church of Jesus, our Redeemer, and that the doctrine as taught by the sect called 'Mormon' is in truth the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ."

THE DEAD.

J. W. Hedgpeth, of Haymer, Autauga county, Ala., departed this life Dec. 3d, 1899, after an illness of one month. He was a faithful Latter-day Saint and leaves a wife and one son, besides a host of friends, to mourn his loss.

ABSTRACTS FROM CORRESPONDENCE

From Elder Brigham Clegg, laboring in Kentucky, we have received an article in which he compares "Former-day" with "Latter-day" religion. He states that the manner of "getting religion" has so changed that if Christ were now to visit one of these modern churches He would have difficulty in noting any resemblance between the church He organized and the churches of today. Jesus ordained Apostles and Seventies, who went forth by twos to preach the Gospel. No salary was paid to them, they had received freely and were in a like manner to give freely.

He further comments upon the methods of "getting religion," and says: "We 'get religion' as we learn to shun evil and do what is right. We 'get religion' as we follow the footsteps of our model of perfection—Christ."

Sister Mary J. Ashcraft, of Altitude, Miss., writes to us concerning her conversion. She relates that through earnest prayer information was given to her whereby she was enabled to find the truth. Before her conversion she was an invalid, and had been such for twenty years. Since that time she has been healed and is now as strong and robust as she ever was in her life. She bears witness that the doctrine of Jesus Christ cannot be understood by carnal-minded persons, and that to enjoy and appreciate it we must live pure and holy lives. Then we will be strong in the Lord and able to stand the persecutions which are sure to follow the true worshippers of Jesus Christ.

James A. Cundiff, of Leesville, Va., a "non-Mormon," writes concerning his observations among the Latter-day Saints who live in his neighborhood. Not long since he was a "Mormon' hater," but by their good example he was caused to investigate. Says he: "If we would ask the Lord, we would not so often err; the reason for so much persecution is because people are ignorant of the true workings of 'Mormonism.' I prayed to the Lord concerning these people, and while I have not joined them, I learned that it was wrong to hate our brethren. We should forgive even till seventy times seven, and be long suffering toward all people, and if these 'Mormons' should, as they are falsely accused of doing, injure us, we should, if we would be Christ-like, forgive them and treat them with love, for love is of God and hatred is from the Devil."

I WILL BE WORTHY OF IT.

(By Ella Wheeler Wilcox.)

I may not reach the heights I seek,
My untried strength may fail me;
Or, half-way up the mountain peak
Fierce tempests may assail me.
But though that place I never gain,
Herein lies comfort for my pain—
I will be worthy of it.

I may not triumph in success,
Despite my earnest labor;
I may not grasp results that bless
The efforts of my neighbor.
But though my goal I never see
This thought shall always dwell with me—
I will be worthy of it.

The golden glory of Love's light
May never fall on my way;
My path may always lead through night,
Like some deserted by-way.
But though life's dearest joy I miss
There lies a nameless strength in this—
I will be worthy of it.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

President Terry, whose picture adorns this week's Star, came from good pioneer stock, his father being one of the original 143 who braved the inclemencies and the dreary march of 1,000 miles beyond the confines of boasted civilization, and who landed in Utah the 24th of July, 1847.

His father also had the honor to manipulate the whip-saw in the construction of the first water wheel built in Utah.

President L. N. Terry, born of such sturdy, vigorous stock, could not be other than the true man of God he is; being willing to do or dare anything for the Great Captain Jesus. His parents made sacrifices, and endured persecutions, in the early days of Utah, for the Gospel's sake. So the son, in like manner, is willing to sacrifice and lay all upon the altar, for the establishing of peace and good will among men; and with that in view he has traveled many miles, and endured the scoffs and scorn of a wicked generation.

He was born April 18th, 1873, at Hebron, Utah, and much of his life has been spent in that neighborhood, cattle raising on his father's ranch.

He had a kind mother, and in his youth was taught many good moral lessons that established within him the principles of virtue and truth.

His education was had in the St. George Stake Academy, also in the Brigham Young Academy of Provo, and being a very apt scholar he made good advancement. His moral standing being exceptionally good, he was chosen to fill a mission.

December, 1897, he was duly set apart as a missionary to the Southern States: labored some sixteen months as a traveling Elder in the Kentucky Conference. Upon the organization of the North Kentucky Conference he, with others, was chosen to open up that field, and in all his duties has ever labored assiduously in the Lord's vineyard, trying to bring some honest soul to a knowledge of the Gospel of his Master.

ELDER L. N. TERRY,
President North Kentucky Conference.

He labored some time as a counsellor to President A. Arrowsmith, and when Elder Arrowsmith was called to the Chattanooga office, Elder Terry continued as counsellor to President L. A. Thorley, who was released November last at conference held in Louisville; Elder Terry was duly chosen as his successor, being unanimously sustained by all the Elders in the North Kentucky Conference, who, let it be known, love their President.

He chose for his counsellors Elders Turman and Clegg, two intelligent young men, and the Conference bids fair to accomplish much good under such able management, as everything moves harmoniously, and President L. N. Terry has the love and esteem of all who know him.

History of the Southern States Mission.

It is with profound reverence and sorrow that record is here made of the death of Elder John Morgan. He may justly be termed the father of the Southern States Mission. Through the storms and tribulation of twelve years, he served the mission with fervent zeal and untiring devotion. To his remarkable tact, his manly attributes, and his ability as a ruler among men, the Southern States Mission owes largely the glory of its present attainments, and the name of Elder John Morgan shall forever stand first and foremost upon the pages of its roll of honor. The death of this worthy servant of God occurred in August last, and a report of the sad event should have been engrafted in the record for that month.

The Deseret Evening News has the following obituary:

"It is with feelings of deep sorrow that we make the announcement of the death of Elder John Morgan, of the presiding Council of the Seventies. The sad news will come with great and sudden force upon the people, for notwithstanding the fact that Elder Morgan has been seriously ill for about five weeks past, his demise was unexpected until a very short time before it occurred. He was suffering from typhoid malaria, which culminated in his death at 5:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Aug. 14th, 1895, at Preston, Idaho. During his illness he received careful nursing and medical attention, but the body worn by toil and anxiety was overcome by the added burden of the disease which assailed it, and the spirit took its flight from mortality.

"Elder John Morgan was but five days over 52 years of age, having been born near Greensburg, Decatur county, Indiana, Aug. 8th, 1842. His parents were Garrard Morgan and Eliza Ann Huntington Morgan. During the war of the rebellion, which broke out when he was 18 years of age, he joined the Union army, and served with honor and distinction, participating in several of the most important battles. Coming to Utah at the close of the war, he soon was engaged as an instructor in the University, when that institution was conducted in the Council House. Later he established the Morgan Commercial College, on First South street, in the building now occupied by the Morgan hotel.

"On Nov. 26th, 1867, he became a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Some years later he responded to a call as a missionary to the Southern States, which position he filled with ability and zeal.

"He was next appointed to the Presidency of the Southern States Mission, and in that capacity his devotion and energy in spreading the Gospel made for him a bright and enduring record. On the 7th of October, 1884, he was selected as one of the First Seven Presidents of Seventies, in which position he labored with diligence and faithfulness up to the time of his being stricken down. He also has held other positions of importance in the community, having been a member of the Utah Legislature and Speaker of its House of Representatives.

"Elder Morgan was a man of strict probity and honor. Possessed of keen intellectual power and marked personal courage, he was an able, fearless expounder of Gospel truths; especially were these virtues exhibited during his long Presidency of the Southern States Mission, at a time when in that section of country feelings were high against the Latter-day Saints. His ministrations were attended with power, and to the last his energies were earnestly devoted to the cause of truth which he had espoused. He has done much traveling and preaching among the Saints during the closing years of his life. In his death a true and good man has been called away, and the hearts of all Israel will be bowed in sorrow with his family at the departure from our midst of a beloved servant of God.

"At the funeral services, which were attended by an immense concourse of people, Elders B. H. Roberts, J. G. Kimball, C. D. Fjedsted, George Goddard, John Henry Smith, Seymour B. Young and President George Q. Cannon spoke. The remaining six members of the Council of Seventies acted as pallbearers."

John Morgan was a marvelous man in many respects. It can be truthfully said that he made "footprints in the sands of time." Elder J. Golden Kimball, in a sermon preached in April, 1899, made the following remarks concerning Elder Morgan:

"I picked up a Chattanooga Times one morning, and I was very much delighted to see in print these words, speaking of Elder John Morgan. It said: 'To shake his hand was to be his friend.' I have never forgotten it. When you shook John Morgan's hand and he looked into your face you always knew that you were his friend."

"That youngest boy of yours does not seem to be a credit to you," said a white employer to Uncle Mose. "No, sah," replied Uncle Mose—"he is the wustest chile I has! He is mighty bad! He's de white sheep ob de fam'ly, sah."

A Menace to Liberty.

Gov. McLaurin, of Mississippi, who is about to retire from the executive chair of the state, created much surprise on Wednesday by including in his closing address to the legislature an attack on "Mormonism." According to the press dispatches he used this language:

"There is no threatened danger to the state more baneful than the lecherous teachings of the Mormon Apostles of polygamy. It is more dangerous because it is taught under the guise of the ministry of the Gospel. The Mormons disclaim the open teachings of polygamy in the pulpit, but they teach it in the corner and the minister's cloak gives potency to their speech."

It is evident that the gentleman has been influenced by the literature that has been so extensively circulated by anti-"Mormon" preachers and papers. Also that as a candidate for the United States senate he is seeking for popular favor. The present craze demands offensive action against a religion, which is supposed to be hostile to the American home and the marriage system of modern Christendom. While that delusion lasts there will be violent explosions similar to those that startled the Mississippi legislature on Wednesday, and which have disturbed many religious congregations during the last few months.

The teachings of the "Mormons are the very opposite to lecherous. They enjoin chastity, temperance, constancy and self-restraint. No other Christian denomination promulgates such rigid rules on these virtues as are found in "Mormon" ethics.

If the Governor of Mississippi had taken the precaution to inquire into the facts, before placing himself on record as to something he does not understand, it would have been better for his lasting political reputation. "Going off half-cocked," to use a common figure, does not tend to add to the influence and reliability of a big political gun. The "Mormon" missionaries in Mississippi are not "Apostles of polygamy." They are not sent anywhere to teach it, either publicly or "in a corner." If any of them should attempt to do that it would soon be stopped. The Governor has taken for granted what some sectarian ministers have invented, or repeated, and made himself ridiculous in the eyes of well-informed people.

There is something far more dangerous to the state than the teachings of "Mormon" doctrine, even if it were anything like what Gov. McLaurin imagines it to be. The advocacy of a custom which is thoroughly unpopular, which could not be practiced under the laws of Mississippi, which is forbidden by the constitution and statutes of Utah, and which is contrary to the authorized discipline of the Church that sends its missionaries out to preach the Gospel, is not very likely to accomplish much, even though some unwise persons should attempt to introduce it. But "the adoption of laws to prevent the teachings" of any Church or religion under the sun, as recommended by the retiring Governor, would be a real danger to the state and to the liberty which the constitution of the United States was framed to maintain.

Are there not light, and truth, and eloquence, and power enough in the churches and literary and social societies in the state of Mississippi to impress its people and combat errors, if such there be, advocated by an unpopular religious body? Is "Mormonism" so strong and irrefutable that it must be suppressed, if at all, by the force of law? Do the clergy and the religious press utterly fail to meet it by reason and argument?

"Mormonism" as it is, and as it is preached by its authorized ministers, contains no menace against the peace, dignity or social order of any state in the Union. It promotes faith in God, support of the laws and the constitution of our country, virtue, honesty, industry and peace among men and women, and the recognition of all that is good in every system, civil and religious, that exists among mankind.

It cannot be put down by force. Efforts in that direction will recoil upon those who project them. Let it be remembered that if one form of religion can be legislated against, others can be treated in the same fashion. Start the ball of intolerance rolling, and it will strike in places unexpected at the first, and will grow in volume and in force until the liberties for which the fathers of our country struggled and bled will be swept out of existence.

There has not been a greater exhibition of unwisdom, in response to ignorant and popular clamor within the century now in its last year, than that proposition to suppress a religion by force of law, and prevent free speech in one of the states of the Federal Union. It is to be hoped that the legislators of Mississippi are possessed of sounder discretion and better judgment than the gentleman who, on ceasing to be its executive, desires the responsible and honorable position of United States senator. It is also to be desired that before he touches on this question again, in any place, he will obtain reliable information concerning it and as to the real doctrines and principles of the system commonly called "Mormonism."—Ex.

THE DEAD.

William Edgar Faglie, the 14-year-old son of J. S. Faglie and Mary P. Connell Faglie, after an illness of about one week. He passed away Wednesday, Jan. 3d, 1900, at 9 a.m., from the effects of spinal meningitis. Our brother was a bright boy, and a host of relatives and friends mourn his loss.

Jan. 5th, 1900, at sunset, Sister Elizabeth Catharine Faglie succumbed to chronic rheumatism and general debility. Deceased was about 70 years of age. She had suffered more or less with the affliction for twelve years. Sister Faglie, soon after the civil war, was left a widow with eleven children, four of whom survive her. She was well known and highly respected by the people of Jefferson county. She became a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints June 7th, 1899, being baptized by Elder Charles H. White; was a member of the Westville branch and lived a saintly life, and her loss will be keenly felt therefrom, for to know her was to love her. The humble Elder always found shelter under her roof, and many have partaken of her wholesouled hospitality.

The funeral services took place at the residence. Edgar, above mentioned, was buried in the Bethel churchyard, but all that was mortal of faithful Mother Faglie, at her request, was placed in the family grave near the residence. May our Master pour out upon the grief-stricken family peace and comfort, which only the Holy Spirit can give. Dear mother has gone to a better world—she waits for thee; so order your lives that where she is you may go also, when your work on earth is completed.

J. A. Wixom, Florida Conference.

It is a characteristic of a great man that he has time. He is not in a hurry; he bosses his work, and does not permit it to control him. He always has strength in reserve.

Ask yourselves daily, brethren, if your knowledge is bearing the right kind of fruit, the fruit of the Spirit of God.

THE DARK AGES.

BY ELDER A, ARROWSMITH.

THE EIGHTH CENTURY. The most interesting feature in the opening of this century was the great hatred between the Mahometan and Christian, with the bloody wars ensuing, which stained all Europe.

The Caliphs at the head of the Moslem faith issued exterminating orders against the Christians; while the Pontiff, with the same power, pronounced his anathemas, and hurled his soldiery, against the Mahometans. These were the conditions of affairs temporal; the Saracens overran Europe, and were in a fair way to revolutionize and have dominion in that continent, until the battle of Tours (their Waterloo), fought in the year 732, which stopped their ravages in France.

Charles Martel, described as a God-fearing man (who, like Washington, prayed as well as fought), was at the head of a body of Franks, who were good soldiers, and in a night attack successfully withstood over 300,000 Saracens, routing them, and forever stopping their invasion of the northwest of Europe, and inflicting a crushing defeat on the Mahometans.

The Christian church, with its clergy, was distinguished by its luxury, gluttony and lust at this time; so says our authority, Mosheim. They studied military arts, and engaged a great deal in hunting; such bloodthirsty pursuits being rather depraved for men who professed to follow the meek and lowly Jesus. Nevertheless these were characteristic features in the priesthood of Rome, which was worshiped and even deified by the ignorant multitude. As before their subjection to the civilizing (?) influences of Rome, the nations of northern Europe, many of them, had been idolatrous Druids, under a great chief Druid, to whom they bestowed great reverence, and even deified as a god; and the various Pagan priests had also been looked upon in like manner. Therefore so soon as they were converted to Christianity, the Pagans simply transferred their affection; paying equal homage, and treating as gods their Christian priests.

Much wealth flowed into the coffers of the church at this time, the people generally believing that by being liberal to their priests, and donating to the church, they could obtain the prayers of departed saints, and thus avert, or considerably lighten, the penalties inflicted on the sinner after death; consequently they were extravagant in their gifts, and the church treasuries were filled to overflowing, with gold, silver and precious stones; being strong in wealth and secure. Kings and princes even gave land grants, cities, provinces and castles, provided with soldiery, and the titles were turned over to the church, whose pontiff sat enthroned above all that is called God, issuing laws to nations, governing vast armies, and giving battle when necessary. It is here we find the source of those dreadful tumults and calamities, particularly those bloody wars concerning investitures, and those contentions about the regalia that spread desolation in Europe in after time.

Very naturally the Roman pontiff was delighted at the homage he received from his subjects, and the wealth which poured upon him; and he was treated as the great Arch-Druid or High Priest had been treated by the Pagan nations, who looked upon their Arch-Druid with veneration.

To show the great power of the church at this period, I will refer you to the instance in this century, of the Pontiff Zachary, dethroning Childeric the Third, the King of France, and enthroning Pepin (a favorite of the Pope). This happened in the year 751, and to make the act thoroughly binding, Stephen the Second, Zachary's successor, anointed and crowned Pepin, with his wife and two sons, for the second time. Pepin was not ungrateful for this, as in his turn he aided the Pontiff Stephen in obtaining the title of a prince over a temporal government.

The great warrior Charlemagne arose in this century, who for his glorious (?) work in subduing the barbarous nations in the north, and compelling them by force of arms to become Christians, was canonized as a Saint of the Most High, and is so held today by the Catholic church. He was the son of Pepin before mentioned, and exceeded even his father in his gifts to the church, while his land grants to the pontiff made that personage a veritable monarch in the year 774. But with all the support of so great an emperor as Charles, the internal strife of the different factions in the church was terrible, and much blood was shed by the wars and dissensions during this time.

Many subjects agitated the minds of the people during this period, but one of the main causes for the intestine troubles was the question regarding the efficacy of images, which were looked upon with much reverence and awe by some, while others could not see beauty in that form of idolatry, and consequently factions arose; some took sides under the great iconoclast leader Emperor Leo, and other factions followed after the Pontiff Gregory, who believed in image worship. This trouble commenced in the year 730, and was not settled until the year 786, when, at a general council held at the old council chamber at Nice, image worship was fully indorsed, restored and acknowledged as an essential obligation on the laity to believe and adhere to. Many excommunications followed these enactments. However, Charlemagne and many of the influential bishops did not favor image worship, and divisions and subdivisions crept into the church in consequence.

During this century the Greeks and Romans had various arguments and discussions on points of doctrine, which assisted in widening the breach that divided them so thoroughly in the next century.

Jesus prayed earnestly to His Father for the primitive church, that they might be one, and said that except they were one, they were not His. Paul taught that there was but "one Lord, one faith and one baptism." Therefore the Church of Christ is an exclusive church, and strange as it may seem, all the isms presented in the name of religion are an abomination unto the Lord, coming from the impure source that I have been trying to depict, not one acknowledged of God or following out the teachings of His Son. The next century presents the first great division, when the Greek and Roman churches maliciously excommunicated each other, and from this the multiplication of sects and parties continued. God is not the author of "confusion," and this jarring discord is certainly repugnant to all religious sense, and displeasing to Him.

Many have ascribed the spirit of war and bloodshed which has always prevailed in the name of Christianity, to the teachings of Christ; as He said that His coming would not bring peace but the sword. But I would say that it was not He. It was His enemies who drew the sword. In every age when the illuminating rays of truth have flashed on the world. darkness has mustered its forces, and tried to obliterate every semblance of light. Paganism put on its armor against the primitive church, and destroyed it. Rome arrayed herself against the reformation, and there came wars, contentions and disunion, that are seen to this day.

In these last days God has restored His Gospel; and in line with their persecuting predecessors, Protestantism has followed in the footsteps of Roman Paganism and Catholicism, and the result has been the same; strife and bloodshed; but the Gospel of Jesus Christ will eventually put down all wickedness, proscription, misrule, abuse, oppression, ignorance, darkness and tyranny, and restore mankind into paths of righteousness, truth, liberty, law and government, in which the Lord's will will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven.

It is safe to affirm that this state of affairs can only be brought about on the principle of righteousness, through obedience to the laws of the exclusive everlasting Gospel introduced by the Lord Jesus. The decree has gone forth, "Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect;" and we cannot hope to attain to this excellence but through the name of Jesus Christ, the only name given under heaven whereby a man can be saved. And as He is the way, the truth and the life, and no man can get to the Father but by Him, how very essential that we, the children of God, should comply with His laws. His system is exclusive, pure, holy and just; but it cannot be found among the multitudinous jarring sects in Christendom, who are full of discord and disunion, brought forth through hundreds of years of rapine and bloodshed, from the Dark Ages, when God's exclusive government was not on the earth, but when the systems of men were taught and the earth was in a defiled condition, and under the ecclesiastical power of the pontiffs.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

WHICH WERE THE MORE CORRUPT?

Between the years 60 and 70 A. D. possibly more Christians were martyred than during any other decade subsequent to that time. It was during this period that Nero, the tyrant, held such tyrannical sway in Rome. Crazed with wine, ravished with beautiful women, revelling in Bacchanalian glee, it was his happiness to see fair and beautiful women, weak children and hoary-headed men led into the arena to be devoured by wild beasts. He was never so happy as when he could secure some Christians, soak them in tar and tallow, then fasten them to where they could not move, apply the torch, and then drive 'neath the sickly flicker caused by these burning humans and gloat in the supposed victory he was achieving over a few weak, as he said, fanatics. Why all this ghastly bloodshed? Why should Nero impose such ignominious, inhuman punishment as this? It is said that the Christians, a mere handful, "worshiped strange gods and were trying to overthrow the government." They were watched and bounded everywhere they went. If they attempted to worship, those who were spying would immediately inform the officials, and then suddenly a score of Roman soldiers would swoop down upon them, and those who were not killed were hastened off to prison and condemned to die. For what? Because they dared serve God, the only true and living God, a reasonable God. They were enemies to Nero, and therefore all must die. Today we have a class of Neros who glory in any seeming fatal blow that can be delivered to the true Christians of God, the eternal Father. Can we say that the nations are now in a similar condition to that of the people at the time of which we speak? To answer this by asking a question we would put it thus: Does any Pagan, Jew, or the world called Christian, serve God? Does not the heathen who worships his image come as near serving a God as the supposed Christians? From inquiry and study we find every class of people worshiping some manner of God, but far from the true and living God, the Father of Jesus Christ. We now invite attention to a handful of people opprobriously called "Mormons," who worship a God, not the workmanship of men's hands, but the true and living God. The one with whom Jesus Christ is associated. This sect is accused of being a menace to the government, and how often, yes, how often, they are accused of worshiping strange gods and plotting against the government. Is there any man who will read this article who cannot put his finger upon more than one who has accused us of perfidy and treachery? Is there not a striking parallel running through both these narratives?

Multitudinous are the good (?) people in this day who prate and sigh and wisely speak to each other of the wickedness of Nero and those people of that day, and say, as did those people, to Christ, "If we had been in the days of our fathers we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the Prophets," and the very next minute are signing a petition, or lending some physical or financial aid to exterminate a Christian and God-fearing people who have been maligned and abused by a class of Neros who masquerade in the garb of holy ministers. Would they kill them? We are shocked to think of such a thing. Yet in this day those same pious and self-righteous hypocrites have pursued and put to death some of the noblest of God's workmen, and why? Because their enemies said they were "worshipers of strange gods and opposed to the government." This was their excuse; just so did Nero justify himself in his wholesale slaughter. What excuse have these modern "Neros" for driving a people from Ohio, from Missouri, and from Illinois? For ravishing their women and burning their houses and driving them from their homes in the dead of winter? Is this Christian? Can we not justly conclude that they have, as the early persecutors, become so polluted and corrupt, and have so far departed from worshiping the only true and living God that they have no moral honor to curtail them in their vicious assaults?

There is one great difference between the Former and the Latter-day Saints. The primitive Saints were told that Jesus could not come the second time except there come a falling away first, and they knew Christians must be exterminated before the Gospel should be again instituted and righteousness eventually prevail on earth. The Latter-day Saints have the promise, on the other hand, that the God of Heaven has set up His Kingdom for the last time, and that the Gospel is not to be taken away again or given to another people. We cannot fail, God is our helper and truth will prevail.

Administering to Those Afflicted With Contagious Disease.

In these days of the prevalence of contagious diseases, such as scarlet fever, diphtheria, smallpox, etc., or at least widespread rumors of such prevalence, a question of much importance arises as to the duty of the priesthood in connection with the ordinance of administering to the sick. The editor of this journal has been asked to state whether the Bishop or other Elders in a ward could be justified in going to a house where there was a case of smallpox for the purpose of annointing and laying hands upon the afflicted person.

The question is one which is somewhat difficult to answer without danger of being misunderstood, for circumstances alter cases, and a proceeding which might be proper in some instances might be wholly unwise in others. There are certain propositions, however, which will be admitted in all cases. One of these is that a well and healthy person has as much right to be considered in matters pertaining to the preservation of his health as a sick person has to be considered in matters pertaining to the restoration of his health. To prevent sickness is no less to be desired than to cure sickness. While it is true that those who are well do not need a physician, it is also true that no correct sense of duty requires a physician or anyone else to jeopardize a healthy person in seeking to aid a diseased one. That the sick may be healed is the proper desire of every right-minded person; but that in seeking to aid them, others who are not sick shall be also brought down in illness, is a requirement of neither humanity nor common sense. And this view of the case is greatly emphasized when a disease so loathsome and so highly contagious as smallpox is believed to be is under consideration; for then it is not only a question of perhaps helping one while perhaps harming one—it is a question of desiring to aid one at the serious risk and danger of perhaps the whole community.

Now, no one will feel like saying to a Bishop or an Elder that when called upon to go and administer to the sick he must not do it. He may have abundant faith that through his administration the afflicted ones may be healed and he himself escape unharmed. Many Elders have manifested this faith in instances of the most frightful plagues, and the results have justified them. But if one have such faith as this, having no fear for himself, let him at least be warned against exposing others to such plagues as have been named. He ought to complain of no proper regulation adopted as a precaution for the safety of the neighbors and the community, submitting if need be to the restraint of liberty to come and go at will, and manifesting thus a consistent interest not alone in the sick but in the well also.—Juvenile Instructor.

PRESIDENT RICH REPLIES TO DR. BROUGHER'S SECOND ATTACK.

The following is a copy of an open letter to Rev. J. Whitcomb Brougher, pastor First Baptist Church, Chattanooga, Tenn., published in the Chattanooga News Jan. 5th, 1900. This letter was written in reply to a second tirade of falsehood and misrepresentation, of the regulation pattern, with which our readers, especially the Elders, are perfectly familiar. As the Reverend's discourses contained no new stories, as our space is limited, and as vituperation does not grace the pages especially of a religious journal, we refrain from publishing in our columns a synopsis of Mr. Brougher's remarks:

Chattanooga, Tenn., Jan. 4, 1900.

Rev. (?) J. Whitcomb Brougher, Chattanooga, Tenn.

My Dear Sir—Your second installment of abuse, falsehood and misrepresentation, called "Is Mormonism Anti-Christian," I see, by the News of Jan. 1, was duly delivered, as per previous announcement. As some well-meaning people might take your performance in earnest, I hope you will take it in good part if I make a brief reply before the incident is closed. I am glad that this is a country of free speech, free thought, and religious liberty, even though narrow-minded religious bigots cannot comprehend this basic principle of our heaven-born government, and sometimes abuse it. American history tells us that during the revolutionary days of America's struggle for independence the British once had Gen. Marion and his little band of struggling patriots surrounded; that the British, in order to tantalize the starving patriots, fired wheat from their cannon into the American camp, and as I have authentic evidence of having descended from one of those hungry defenders of the flag, and also that I have proof, beyond truthful contradiction, that my progenitor was once a member of George Washington's body guard, I trust you will have no serious objections of my calling myself an American by birth, and entitled to a small portion of the freedom of speech and thought guaranteed to Americans by our constitution. Should there be any objections upon the possible ground that your progenitors possibly have been on the other side of that fight, I pray you to let family feuds, for this occasion at least, be buried. No people on earth love liberty and true Americanism more than my people, and no people realize, to a greater extent, that the favorite weapons brought against truth are, generally, ridicule and billingsgate; and in a vain attempt to successfully answer my former letter, you liberally employed this unsavory method with the hope of laughing the case out of court. We have not been accustomed to throwing mud in order to bolster up our cause, but in this case, if I should stoop to a little ridicule, avoiding slush, I hope you and the public will pardon me. I understand from parties who witnessed your performance last Sunday night, that the recital of your little piece would have done much credit to a Punch and Judy show; but, shorn of its stagey effects and set in cold type, without even a moving picture accompaniment, I hope that I may be forgiven if I do not fully appreciate the force of your masterful (?) logic. I have no doubt that the thinking people of this city can, without any assistance, distinguish between inflated sophistic bombast and logic; but a little airing, and brushing, always takes away the mold, removes the rubbish and gives things a more healthful appearance. Now, as the physician said to his patient, "just hold still, and I will not insert the knife deeper than is absolutely necessary."

You claim to be a true representative of the meek and lowly Master, who said He "came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." You are loud in condemning "us" as sinners; yet you said, in your letter to the News, announcing your attack upon me and my faith, that you were not here to convert the Latter-day Saints—that the work was not worth the candle. How very Christ-like! What a humble follower of the Lamb, and how faithfully you endeavor to follow the example of the Master, who said there was more joy in heaven over one sinner who repenteth than over ninety and nine that needed no repentance; but pardon me—I had forgotten that we are now living in modern times, and are told by such eminent divines as yourself that the Bible does not mean what it says.

In the same letter, mentioned above, you also declare you are not here for the purpose of proselyting, which means, of course, that you do not intend to waste your time by calling anyone to repentance. In view of this, may I ask, is your mission here simply to love Jesus for $1,800 per year, and not for a blessed cent less? Great man! Paul told Timothy that the time would come when they would heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and I suppose it becomes necessary, in order that these words might be fulfilled, for some one to be engaged in tickling ears, even though it becomes rather expensive. Of course I understand that the march of progression changes things, and perhaps this doctrine of Christ, that "the physician is not for the whole but for the sick," has evolved as completely as the Golden Rule, for we now have it, at least to a very large extent, "Do others or they will do you, and do it first." The theory is just the same as it used to be, but it is only, as you say, "symbolic or a figure of speech," the practical part having been done away with—"we have no need of thee."

Through force of habit (we presume), in your brief note to the News, you again charged us with creeping into houses and leading captive silly women, laden with sins, etc. Knowing it impossible to furnish proof, you hide behind the miserable subterfuge that you have only time to sound the key of warning. Our challenge still holds good that you cannot point to a single instance.

You think it a shame and a disgrace that Chattanooga is the headquarters for our missionary work in the south, and no doubt if the solid element of this community, as you assert, thought likewise, you would favor and advocate burning us at the stake. However, as you are a newcomer here, I feel that you are excusable, in a measure, for this rash and un-American statement. We know, as well as you, that, like our Master and the Former Day Saints, we are not popular, and we can also take consolation that in the world's history nonconformists to popular opinion have always been placed in the selfsame category. For a good many years, over twenty, we have had our headquarters here, and it is strange, that before your advent, the good people of this city did not discover that we were a disgrace and a detriment to this city. During the time we have been located here we have been associated, in a business way, with not a few representative men of Chattanooga, and believe we enjoy their confidence as being honest, paying our bills, etc., and have heard no complaints of any of them missing their wives or daughters, or of any charge being lodged against any of our representatives of conduct unbecoming true ladies or gentlemen. Our expenditures in this city amount to something like $25,000 per year, and I may be excused for mentioning this item, in that you mentioned money on Sunday night in various ways. I wish briefly to explain this, knowing full well your ambition to misjudge and misrepresent us in this, as in other matters. We have laboring in this mission about 500 Elders, sometimes more and sometimes a little less, and in coming here they are called from the plow, the smithy, the work-bench, the machine shop, the counting room, the mine, and the various avocations of life. Some of them leave lucrative positions, worth to them, in some instances, one or two thousand dollars per year, or more, while others again are the sons of poor widows and men of humble circumstances financially, but all willing to battle for the Gospel. Now, these men leave their homes, all that is dear to a human, and come among strangers, unto them, a strange land, to preach an unpopular doctrine; to be hated and despised, sometimes brutally treated, because of their convictions, traveling without purse or script, and depending upon God to raise up friends to give them a place to sleep and something to eat. These men give their time to the church free of charge, and pay their own expenses, such as clothing, railroad fare, literature, etc., necessary to carry on their work.

When an Elder arrives in this city he is assigned to his field of labor, and remains in the field usually from two to three years; when in the course of his labors, it is necessary for him to have books, tracts, clothing, and other supplies, he sends here for us to send him these needed articles, while the money to pay for the same, if the Elder is unable to bear the expense himself, is forwarded here by relatives and friends, or in some cases by brothers and sisters in the church at his home. This explains how we disposes of money in this city.

Some of our Elders have been shot to death by mobs, some have been cruelly beaten, while others have died in the harness of natural causes.

Could you do as these men do for your religion?

Could you stand to be held up to the derision of the world, leave a comfortable home and work without a salary, derided by such men as yourself, and your mother charged with being worse than a harlot; all for the love of the Master's cause?

Some of our Elders now in the field were with the rough riders in the late war with Spain, others were with the Utah batteries in the Philippines, and some of them returned home about the time the call to arms was sounded, in just enough time to discard their Prince Albert coats and don the uniform of Uncle Sam.

Is this disloyalty? Could you do as much for your religion and your country?

We try to mind our own business, and if the good people of this city or any other place do not care to come out and hear me or any other Mormon Elder preach, that is their business. All I ask is fair play and nothing more. Giving the people an opportunity to hear the Gospel is a large part of the mission of a servant of God, and when it has been preached in all the world for a witness, then shall the end come, then will it be said, as it was said once before by our Master, "how oft would I have gathered you, but ye would not." I remember, too, that Jesus said: "Wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat; while straight is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth into life, and few there be that find it."

Christ also said that people would kill His disciples and think they were doing God's service, and that all who would follow Him must needs suffer persecution. Are you persecuted? Is it right to look for the true Church of Christ in popularity? When a church becomes popular and persecution ceases, one of the promises of our Savior ceases to be fulfilled, for persecution is one of the marks by which we are to know the true church, says the Bible. Don't you think it is time to begin to look for the cause of the trouble? What do you really sacrifice for the cause of the Master?

You misunderstand me when you try to make believe that I claim my arguments are new. They are old, very old, and are the same as those used by Paul and Peter. I hope you will not misrepresent me on that point again. They may not be Christian, in the accepted use of the term today, but, according to Scripture, they were accepted as Christian over 1800 years ago.

I did not think I hit so hard when I asked for a chance to give my side of the story before your congregation; I have always been taught to hear both sides before passing judgment, and perhaps it might not be amiss to say here that it is somewhat of a custom among my people to loan, as you would put it, preachers of other denominations their churches, congregations, and a choir to sing for them. There would be no objection even to the Rev. Dr. Talmage, so lovingly quoted by you, preaching in our great Tabernacle at Salt Lake City, if he desired to do so, and be furnished with a congregation numbering thousands and a choir of 500 voices to sing for him. I thought your superior (?) Christianity would make you as fair and generous as the despised Mormons, but I see I overestimated you. Our large Tabernacle at Salt Lake City seats from ten to twelve thousand, our organ is second largest in the world, and our choir, as I stated above, consists of 500 voices.

We think our singers are of the best, as they were given the second prize at the world's fair (the first prize being carried off by the famous Welsh singers). No minister of good character has ever been denied a hearing in that building, and among the many who have occupied our famous pulpit, I mention the following prominent churchmen, representing various denominations:

Bishop Kingsley, of Ohio.
Rev. A. N. Fisher, of Nevada.
Dr. Tiffany, of Iowa.
Dr. Allen, of Wyoming.
Rev. Hiram McKee, of Missouri.
Dr. J. H. Vincent, of New York.
Gen. Booth, of the Salvation Army, London.
Mr. D. L. Moody.
Dr. Reiner, of New York.

Perhaps these eminent divines would have been refused a hearing had the Mormon people been as narrow and contracted as some of their enemies.

When you advise your congregation not to go to hear us, is it not good proof that you are afraid to have your people find out the truth about us and learn the true nature of our faith?

As expected, you made no effort to expose the principles we teach from reason and the Scriptures; you claim it would take a lifetime to expose the errors of Mormonism. Well, now, Brother, don't you think you are a little bit inconsistent? Did you not speak before you thought? Just think what would be accomplished if you could only prove Mormonism to be false. We are informed by our enemies, and they preach it to the people, that the very existence of our government and free institutions is threatened by this Mormon octapus, and often has it been pointed out, by preachers and politicians, that we already control four or five states, almost a sufficient number of senators to give us a balance of power in the United States senate. Then the Rev. T. C. Iliff, and other of our enemies, who are proselyting in Utah, say if it were not for our leaders we would be good people; and that it is our priestcraft that makes us bad; fully admitting that they think we have a soul to save. Don't you think you could afford to try and call us to repentance? Is it not worth the candle? Inasmuch as Dr. Iliff was in this city a few months back, lecturing on Mormonism, soliciting donations, is it not possible that some of Chattanooga's good people gave of their means to be used in converting us "heathens," and no doubt we were considered "worth the candle?" Would it not be well worth a man's life to prove Mormonism false, if it would save the nation from going to pieces and be the means of saving some 300,000 or 400,000 or more souls for Jesus? Ministers all over the country are crying that thousands are being won over to the Mormon faith every year, and would it not be worth the candle to check this mighty stream of human souls, which, as you would say, "are going to certain destruction?"

As to Joseph Smith, you rehashed the same old stuff, which I have already answered, but I should have thought you would have remembered to tell the people, in your eagerness to be fair, what such men as Josiah Quincy, George Bancroft, the historian, and other prominent and well known men say. In another column we have taken pains to give a few sayings in our favor from men of undoubted veracity, but as they are not clippings from your style of authors perhaps they will not suit you.

However, they will go to show that there are two sides to this question, as well as every other question.

On the Book of Mormon you manufacture another Spaulding story with a hope of covering your defeat on this point, but we want to say to you here that the manuscript in Oberlin college is the very manuscript of which it was falsely said years ago furnished the inspiration for the Book of Mormon, and as President Fairchild said in his affidavit and account of the manuscript published in the New York World, the opponents of Mormonism will have to look elsewhere for an explanation of the Book of Mormon.

You admitted to two of our young men who called on you a few days ago, that you had never read anything about us, except from our enemies. Solomon says he that judgeth a matter before he heareth it is not wise. How Solomon-like you are.

You felt very badly because I did not break the law, so you could prosecute me for teaching polygamy, didn't you? You remind me of a booby, who, in playing with his big brother, cried out, "Ma, he won't let me hit him." Solomon and David both sinned, we admit, but you took special pains not to tell the audience "when" they transgressed. But then this was necessary in order to keep your "clay brick" logic from going to pieces. Does the fact that God has a body, parts, and passions, debar Him from being an intelligent being, omniprescent, etc.? The glory of God is intelligence, and He, being a real live God, and not a nonenity, would His materiality prohibit Him from controlling the intelligences for the just governing of His children and the universe? Let us look at your sylogism. "A brick is made of clay, a man is made of clay, therefore a man is a brick." Now let us construct one from the Bible, taking care to have our premises correct. "All sons are in the image of their fathers, Jesus was a Son, therefore He was in the 'express' image of His Father." Now, Brother Brougher, what was the image of His Father? Jesus had a body of flesh and bones—can you explain or ridicule it away? If the words "God is a spirit" means that He has neither body, parts or passions, then are we to dispense with our body, parts and passions in order to worship Him in "spirit" and in truth? When you find some quotation in the Bible that suits your idea, you seem to be willing to take the words literally. If the symbolical or figurative parts of the Bible are so plain, why is there such a wide difference of opinion, among the learned even, as to its teachings? I remember that Peter declared that "no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation." I do not mention this by way of belittling your great knowledge of interpretation and for calling me a fool for taking the book literally, but speak of it that the public might know how ignorant and how very little Peter really knew about how to read the Bible.

You say Mark 16:16 is spurious, to justify yourself in not believing baptism to be essential to salvation, don't you? "Only believe and you shall be saved;" you may just as well say to the farmer, "only believe in planting and your crop will grow." But let us see where your declaration "that this part of the Bible is spurious" leads us. There are other passages of Scripture which say baptism is essential to salvation. Are they also spurious? John 3-5 reports Jesus saying to Nicodemus, "except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannote enter the kingdom of God;" Matthew says, 3:13-15, that it was necessary for our Savior to be baptized in order to fulfill all righteousness. Jesus also says, Matt. 28, in giving the Apostles their commissions to go to teach all nations, baptizing them that believe; and Paul also enumerates in Heb. 6 that baptism is a doctrine of Christ. We are told that it was necessary for Paul to be baptized, likewise the jailer, the people at Ephesus, the people at Samaria, the eunuch, and even a man as just as was Cornelius could not escape, and according to St. Luke, "some rejected the counsel of God against themselves, not being baptized." According to the practice generally in vogue, is it not about time for a revision of the Bible, that the offending parts may be cast out? Ought you not to use your potent influence to accomplish this end, as I contended in my former letter? You charge me falsely with misquoting Mark 16:16, because I placed within the quotation an interpolation in brackets, and if this is misquoting I surely had no intention of doing so. Any school boy would have known that the words in brackets were mine. You say the passage does not mean what my interpolation indicated, but you failed to point out what it did mean. Look at it again, even if it is spurious and of no consequence. The words "belief" and "baptism" are placed on even terms by our Savior, and there is no other conclusion but that the believer must be baptized (unless it is one of your figures of speech). This being true, the unbeliever very naturally would not be baptized and be damned, as Christ says, in consequence of unbelief and non-conformity to this ordinance. Really, brother, over whose "shop" should the sign "All kinds of turning and twisting done here" be placed? I am perfectly willing to leave that to an intelligent public. You entertained your congregation last Sunday evening by relating to them a pretty fable about a jackass, who was in the woods braying. It was nicely related and caused much laughter and mirth; and no one could become offended by a jackass story; therefore, kindly allow me the same privilege, Brother Brougher, as I also have a jackass story.

"Once upon a time" there was a jackass who imagined he was preaching the same Gospel that was taught many hundreds of years ago; he stood before a large, fashionable congregation of people and started to bray. He opened his mouth and said: "Oh, money, oh, money, thy praises I'll sing; thou art my savior, my god and my king; 'tis for thee that I preach, 'tis for thee that I pray, and make a collection twice each Sabbath day. Money's my creed, and I won't pray without it, the heavens are closed against those who doubt it. This is the essence of popular religion, come regular to church and be plucked like a pigeon. I'll have carriages, horses, servants and all, I'm not going to foot it like Peter and Paul; neither like John, feed on locusts and honey, so out with your purse and down with your money. I gather my knowledge from wisdom's great tree, and the whole of my trinity is D. D. and C.; dimes, dollars and cents are all that I crave, from the first step on earth to the brink of the grave. In the cold earth I may soon be laid low, to sleep with the just, that have gone long ago; I shall slumber in peace till the great resurrection, and be first on my legs to make a collection." Then he blessed the contribution boxes and the show closed.

Now, dear brother, don't you think that my jackass story equals yours, and contains a better moral? I am sure it is just as funny; so now we are even, on jackass stories, anyhow.

We see how careful the nations of the earth are in throwing their protecting arms around the principle of authority; how careful they are that all representatives acknowledged by them are endowed with proper authority from their respective governments. In this nation of ours no man has the right to initiate a foreigner into the government unless he be endowed with authority, beyond the question of a doubt; the government would undoubtedly punish any man who might read of a commission given to others, and then take the authority unto himself to initiate foreigners into the government of the United States.

We see the same careful protection thrown around the principle of authority throughout the different states of the union; throughout the different counties of the state, and throughout all the different cities of the various counties. All will admit that without this strict attention to authority, there would be no law, no order and no protection. Out of all known governments the great government of God, according to our opinion, is the only one that treats the principle of authority in a careless and reckless manner. Anciently a prophet of God, through the principle of revelation, called Aaron to the ministry; at a later period, an Apostle of Jesus Christ said that no man was to take this honor unto himself save he be called of God, as was Aaron. Yet men of our day will read where men were commissioned by Jesus Christ eighteen hundred years ago, with authority to initiate foreigners into the great government of God, and by virtue of that authority, given to others, they take the honor unto themselves; while declaring that the great God has sealed up the system of revelation; and through the heavens, as you say, being as brass above our heads, no man can be called, as was Aaron. In the face of all this, any man purchasing a Bible, which contains that commission once given to others, imagines he is called of God to preach the Gospel, and the result is we are living in a babel of confusion; God says "He is not the author of confusion."

Of course I realize these words of mine will have no weight upon you, but they may be read by some fair-minded, thinking man, who may stop, ponder and investigate.

By inuendo you advocated mob violence in your sermon last Sunday night. Do you think it was becoming to a man who professes to be a representative of the meek and lowly One, whose mission was peace on earth and good will to man? In carefully looking over the history of this Mission for a number of years back and noting the number of mobbings to which our Elders have been subjected, and the number is not small, we find by careful comparison that 90 per cent. of the mobbings have been led in person or inspired by so-called Christian ministers.

Do you think you were serving God on the Sabbath when you so nearly sanctioned brute force against a people who have never harmed you or any of the good people of Chattanooga? Do you really believe that such a course will make you popular with the liberty-loving and law-abiding population of your new home? Think over the matter carefully and perhaps you will admit you overreached yourself a little.

You took for your text, "Answer a fool according to his folly." In closing allow me to respectfully present you with the words of our Master, "He who calleth his brother a fool is in danger of hell fire." Respectfully,

BEN E. RICH.

But be ye doers of the word and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: For he beholdeth himself and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was.—Jas. 1.

ABSTRACTS FROM CORRESPONDENCE

A remarkable case of healing is recorded by Elders Charles Pettit and Josiah Leavitt, laboring in the North Kentucky Conference. Through the administration of these brethren Sister Jones, who was very sick with pneumonia, was almost instantly healed, and in two days after was able to go about her usual duties. She had been bedfast for two weeks. Thus are the words of James verified: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the Elders of the church, and let them pray over him, annointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sin, they shall be forgiven him."

The following is from a letter written by Apostle Heber J. Grant, which will be of interest to the Elders. The letter is dated at Salt Lake City, Jan. 24th, 1900:

"President Ben E. Rich.

"Dear Brother—I have just got home from St. George and start for Arizona this evening. Before going to St. George I did not have time to write an answer to your kind letter telling me of your prayers for mother's hearing to be restored. I am truly grateful to be able to say that her hearing is considerably improved. In talking to her last Monday evening in my usual voice, when addressing her, she requested me not to halloo so loud. I lowered my voice very materially and she still heard me.

"Some weeks ago I sang the hymn, "God moves in a mysterious way," for her, and holding my mouth close to her ear and singing so loud that the effort made my head ache, and then it was with difficulty that I could make her hear. Recalling this effort Monday morning, I sang the same hymn to her in my usual voice while singing, which as you know would be louder than ordinary conversation, and I am thankful to tell you that she heard every word distinctly.

"My own impression Sunday two weeks ago, while praying for her in the Temple, was not that she should have her hearing all in a moment, but that it should come gradually to her, and I feel that this impression was from the Lord and that she has already commenced to realize the benefits accruing from the prayers of the Saints.

"My heart is full of thanksgiving and gratitude to my many friends for their prayers in mother's behalf."

Brother H. C. Cherry writes from Washington, N. C., that the Saints in that locality are getting along nicely. They have a good Sunday School in operation. Some persecution is also being met with, but that is one of the marks of the true Church of Christ.

"Women of Calvary."

There is an order in New York City, known as "The Women of Calvary." It is of the Church of Rome, but founded for absolutely non-sectarian work. It ministers to women suffering from incurable cancer, without regard to race, color or creed. The members are all widows, the founder being Madame Garnier, a pious, benevolent and widowed French lady. These women are in no sense of the word religious, they make no vows, wear no uniform and are not cloistered. Their lives are led, so far as mingling with the world is concerned, just as that of any other women of pious inclination would be.

Although no woman except she be a widow is eligible to membership in the Women of Calvary, its auxiliary, the Daughters of the Cross, is recruited from the ranks of single women, or widows, just as it happens. Both these orders are pledged to the service of women who are incurable cancer patients. They receive no salary or compensation in any way. The Women of Calvary dress the wounds of the patients, wait upon and watch with them. The Daughters of the Cross do the housework; everything, washing, scrubbing, cooking. But as all are serving the same master, there is no such a word as servant ever used.

The house at No. 5 Perry street, New York, opened for the reception of patients in the early autumn of last year, is the only one in the English-speaking world, and Mrs. Storrs is the only woman of the English-speaking nations who is entitled to wear the decoration of the Cross of Calvary bestowed upon her as a reward of fifteen months' service in the sister house in Belgium. It is pitiful to be obliged to state that even before the doors of the Perry street house were opened nearly every bed was spoken for. The greatest number of sufferers from cancer are poor women, and of these women far the larger portion were mothers. Moved to pity by this condition of affairs, Mrs. Storrs served fifteen months in the Belgium Calvary, to gain the requisite knowledge. Then returned to America with the fixed purpose of here opening a house of refuge for the incurable cancer patients of her native land.

Although the first House of Calvary in the English-speaking world is in New York City, to the state of North Carolina belongs the honor of founding the work on the western hemisphere; for both Mrs. Storrs, the director, and Mrs. S. Gaston Bailieff, the vice-president, belong to distinguished North Carolina families.

The House of Cavalry is supported entirely by voluntary contributions. One dollar a month makes the donor a contributing member. The home is for the poor. Those who can afford to pay are not received. The New York Calvary is the seventh one founded in the world. In 1842 Madame Garnier, with a few associates, opened the first one in Lyons, France, where they dressed the wounds and soothed and comforted the few remaining hours of such of their suffering sisters as applied for admittance. In 1866 the second was opened in Brussels. In 1874 a Calvary was founded in Paris, which was soon followed by one in Saint-Estienne; and in 1881 another was successuflly established in Marseailles, and in 1892 still another was founded in Rouen., France.—Times.

It Is Forty-Six!

If the Statistical Secretary has made no mistake in his figures, and if the figures have been correctly reported in the Advocate and Danville Methodist, the net gain in membership in the whole Virginia Conference for the year ending November 15, 1899, is forty-six. In November, 1898, we reported a membership of 88,693. This year we reported a membership of 88,739; net gain forty-six. In 1898 our net gain was 812. This was a sad decline in increase. Now we have nearly reached the line dividing the increase from the decrease. If this downward tendency continues for one more year at the ratio of the last two, we will report at our next conference a decrease. This is our certain fate. This small increase, evidencing as it does a loss of the soul-saving power on the part of the church, must distress every lover of our Zion, and gives food for the most painful reflections and raises the inquiry, Why?

In round numbers our people paid out during the last conference year $10,000 for domestic missions and $190,000 for the supoprt of the ministry. We have had 227 active itinerant ministers in the field. These must have preached on an average at least two sermons a week; this gives 23,608 sermons besides prayer-meeting talks, exhortations and revival efforts. These sermons were preached by men of various degrees of ability, learning and adaptability. Many of them are decorated with literary and honorary degrees from colleges and universities, great and small and medium. We have our A.B.'s, A.M's, D.D.'s, Ph.Ds, etc; men from Vanderbilt, Princeton, Yale, etc. We have imported stock and home bloods of finest strain; we have wandering stars and home luminaries; we have evangelists and giraffes.

We had under our influence and instruction 61,540 Sunday school scholars. To help us to bring these young people to Christ and to train them for usefulness and heaven we had in co-operation 9,573 teachers. The Epworth League reports 9,674 members; with their devotional meetings, their aids and charities, their literary and social gatherings and efforts, all in co-operation with the church and ministry. Yet this man of facts, this cold-blooded secretary, stands forth and reports a net gain of forty-six members for twelve months.

This ague-giving report comes immediately after the most glowing accounts of gracious revivals all over the conference. From the Richmond district the elder reported: "Revivals in all the charges." From West Richmond district, "Spiritual condition excellent, as indicated by extensive revivals." From Rappahannock district, "Four hundred and fifty professions." From Charlottesville District, "Considerable revivals." From Lynchburg district, "Five or six hundred conversions." Petersburg district, "Gracious revivals." Portsmouth district, "extensive revivals." Eastern Shore district, "Six hundred and twenty-five conversions." Nothing as to revivals is reported from the Danville, Farmville, or Norfolk districts, but I saw during the year reports of fine revivals in a number of the charges on the Danville and Norfolk districts. The same may have been true of the Farmville district, but nothing to that effect came under my notice. What became of these converts? If even a fair proportion of them joined our church—say 75 per cent.—then we must account for an extraordinary and alarming loss of original members. Anyway we are scarcely holding our own; did not hold our own in the whole church last year—1898. I greatly fear it will be much worse this year. In our conference our gains have been reduced from thousands to tens.

It seems to me that every thoughtful and true Christian and informed Methodist must see that there is something wrong somewhere in our church which is producing this decline in saving power and in numbers; something wrong which ought to be removed, which can be removed, and must be removed, or our days as a true, evangelical and soul-saving church are numbered. The saddest thing to me in all this sad state of affairs is that those who have it in their power to remove these malign causes of our sad decline seem to be indifferent to them or stand in with them.

To me these causes which have conspired, and still conspire, to bring about our present distressing condition, are clearly apparent. They have been long operating and growing in power. These causes are hell-born, but try to wear the livery of heaven. They are entrenched as firmly and as cunningly as hell can entrench them. We wrestle against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, and against spiritual wickedness in high places. Who will rise up against the evil doers? Who shall dislodge the adversary? It will take a Martin Luther. It will take years of toil, suffering, the bearing of ridicule, contempt, misrepresentation, and loss of all the things the world seeks. The man is not yet in sight. May the good Lord raise him up!—H. C. Cheatham, in the Richmond Christian Advocate.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF PROPHET BRIGHAM YOUNG.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

PRESIDENT BRIGHAM YOUNG.

President Brigham Young, the successor of Joseph Smith to the Presidency and prophetic office in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, was born June 1, 1801, in Whittingham, Windham county, Vermont. Like his predecessor, he was of purely American stock, dating back many generations. His father, John Young, fought in the revolutionary war, and his grandfather in the French and Indian war. His family relations on both sides were among the staunchest supporters of freedom in the American colonies. He was the ninth child in a family of five sons and six daughters. They were inured to hard labor and were strictly moral in their habits. He was trained in piety, but joined no denomination until the age of 21, when he identified himself with the Methodist church, to which his parents were allied. At the age of 16 he commenced business for himself. He learned the trades of carpenter, joiner, painter and glazier, and exhibited traits of a practical character which in after life were brought into such a broad field of activity among the people of God, being quickened by the inspiration of the Almighty.

In the meantime his parents had moved to Chenango county, New York. On Oct. 8th, 1824, he married Miss Miriam Works and located in Cayuga county, New York, where he followed his occupation of carpenter, painter, joiner and glazier. Early in 1829 he removed to Mendon, Monroe county, New York, where in the spring of 1830 he first saw a copy of the Book of Mormon, which was brought to that neighborhood by Elder Samuel H. Smith, brother of the Prophet. The contents of this sacred record he carefully read with a prayerful desire to know the truth. His investigation resulted in a firm conviction that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the living God and the Book of Mormon a Divine Record. Although a Methodist of sincere piety and confronted with frowns and opposition, he had the courage of his convictions, being baptized and confirmed a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints April 14th, 1832, by Elder Eleazer Miller. He was ordained an Elder by Brother Miller the same day. Three weeks later his faithful wife was baptized, dying in the faith the 8th of September, 1832, leaving him two little girls as the result of their union. From the day of Elder Young's baptism he became a most indefatigable and fearless advocate of the pure principles of the Gospel revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith. His parents, brother Joseph, and several other members of the Young family also embraced the Gospel and became active workers in the church. During the summer subsequent to his baptism, he did much preaching in the regions about Mendon, baptizing a goodly number and organizing several branches of the church. In this vicinity also his life-long friend, counselor and associate, Heber C. Kimball, received the Gospel. With Elders Kimball and Joseph Young, Brigham Young visited Kirtland, O., in the fall of 1832, and for the first time in life saw and became acquainted with the Prophet Joseph Smith. They were mutually impressed with the integrity of each other. In the evening of the day they first met the Prophet called upon Brother Brigham to pray. While praying he spoke in tongues. The Prophet received the interpretation and said it was the pure language spoken by Adam in the Garden of Eden. After Brigham had left the room Joseph Smith uttered the prophecy, "The time will come when Brother Brigham Young will preside over this church." Many thousands of people now live, the witnesses to the verification of this prediction. In the winter of 1832-3 Brother Brigham, with his brother Joseph Young, labored as missionaries in and near West Laboro, Canada. They were successful in baptizing numbers of people and organizing several branches of the church. His labors continued the following spring and part of the summer in Canada and Northern New York, with encouraging success. In July, 1833, he conducted a small company of Saints to Kirtland. This may be called the commencement of his great labors in the capacity of a pioneer leader, which he so fully accomplished in later years, and through which he was often referred to as the "modern Moses." In the fall of 1833 he removed with his family to Kirtland, O., and was ever afterward an important personage in the growth and development of that city. In February, 1834, he married Mary Ann Angell, who took faithful care of his motherless children. She bore several children to him, among them the present Apostle, Elder Brigham Young.

When Zion's Camp was organized in 1834 to carry supplies and encouragement to the driven Saints in Missouri, and which needed men of integrity, endurance, faith and courage, Brigham Young was among the foremost of the faithful few to accomplish that wonderful pilgrimage to and from Missouri, doing his work cheerfully, and was never known to murmur against the providences or prophet of the Lord. On his return to Kirtland, having journeyed 2,000 miles on foot, he occupied the remainder of the year working on the printing office, school room and Temple. When the first quorum of Twelve Apostles of this Dispensation were chosen Brigham Young was numbered among them; this occurred Feb. 14, 1835, from then until 1837, he spent his summers preaching, baptizing, organizing branches, as a missionary, and his winters working at his trade upon the Kirtland Temple: the painting and finishing of which he skillfully superintended in the spring of 1836. He also attended the Hebrew School in Kirtland in the winter of 1835-36. When the Temple was dedicated he attended the solemn assembly and received his blessings in the house of the Lord. Soon after this performing a faithful mission in the Eastern states, with Dr. Willard Richards. He returned in May 1837, and later the same year fulfilled another short mission in the state of New York. During the financial panic of 1837, when apostacy ran so high in Kirtland and several of the Twelve Apostles turned against the prophet, with false accusations, and sought his overthrow, Brigham Young stood firm and loyal, declaring in the face of bitter enemies, that Joseph Smith was true and faithful, still a Prophet of God. So intense was the hatred against Brigham Young for this bold stand that he was obliged to leave Kirtland to escape the fury of the mob. He left Dec. 22, 1837, and arrived in the colony of the Saints in Far West, Mo., March 14, 1838. Soon after this the entire Church moved from Ohio to Missouri. In the meantime the Prophet Joseph and other brethren were betrayed by apostates, threatened with death and cast into prison. During this period the coming prophet, Brigham Young, was industrious and improving the land, and laboring diligently in the duties of his Apostleship, especially in preparing and planning for the exodus of the Saints from Missouri under the cruel order of extermination issued by the modern Herod, Gov. Lilburn W. Boggs. In this exodus Brigham Young exemplified those gifts of organization and pioneering, which Prividence destined him to so thoroughly amplify in the great exodus of the Latter-day Saints a decade later. Brigham Young not only directed, but worked as hard in a practical way as those over whom he was called at this critical juncture to temporarily preside. He left his own family no less than eleven times to return with teams to bring up the poor and helpless. Himself and President Heber C. Kimball had entered into a covenant that they would not cease their efforts until all who would should be delivered from Missouri and safely harbored in a more hospitable state. This covenant they most faithfully kept.

April 18th, 1839, with others of the Twelve, he left Quincy to fulfill a revelation given to the Prophet Joseph Smith July 8th, 1838, to the effect that the Twelve should take their departure on their mission to England from the Temple site in Far West. The mob had sworn that this should not be fulfilled, but under the protection of the Almighty, with Brigham Young at the head of the Twelve, this revelation was signally fulfilled. He returned to Quincy May 3d, and met with Joseph and Hyrum Smith the first time since their escape from enemies in Missouri. On the 16th of the same month he left for Nauvoo, and a week later moved his family across the river to Montrose, where he secured a room in some old military barracks as a temporary home for himself and family. The climate was sickly in Nauvoo and his health was poor, but Brigham Young was constantly doing all in his power to establish the Saints and build up the city of Nauvoo. He continued this labor until Sept. 14th, 1839, when he started "without purse or scrip" to perform his mission in England. He was sick when he started, leaving a babe only ten days old, his wife and the children being ill, with no means of support in sight. Let it be acknowledged by the reader that the motive which prompted men to take such a course under such trying circumstances was a pure one, and the faith which buoyed them up, sustained them and brought to them complete success, must have been the "faith that was once delivered to the Saints," produced by a knowledge of the truth founded upon the Rock of Revelation. On his way to New York he did much teaching and preaching, sailing from New York March 9th, 1840, arriving in England April 6th. On July 1st, 1841, he arrived in Nauvoo from his mission in England, and was cordially welcomed by the Prophet Joseph Smith. During his absence, while laboring in the British Isles, thousands of souls were added to the church in that foreign land, and a permanent shipping agency established. Since that time probably not less than 75,000 souls have sailed from the shores of Europe, as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. At the first council of the Twelve held in a foreign land Brigham Young was unanimously sustained as President of that quorum. Under his direction steps were taken to publish 3,000 hymn books, 5,000 copies of the Book of Mormon and the Millennial Star was published, with Apostle Parley P. Pratt as its first editor. This periodical continues until the present time, almost half a century old, and has gone to the homes of thousands, bearing the glad tidings of the Gospel restored to earth. Jan. 19th, 1841, the following revelation was given to the Prophet Joseph Smith:

"I give unto you my servant, Brigham Young, to be a President over the Twelve traveling council, which Twelve hold the keys to open up the authority of my kingdom upon the four corners of the earth, and after that to send my word to every creature." The Quorum of the Twelve stand next in authority to the Presidency of the church, and in case of the decease of the Prophet the Twelve preside over the church with their President at the head, and thus was brought to the front Brigham Young, the man whom God designed should succeed the Prophet Joseph Smith. In July of the same year the Lord said through the Prophet Joseph Smith, "Dear and well-beloved brother Brigham Young, verily thus saith the Lord unto you, my servant Brigham it is no more required at your hand to leave your family as in times past, for your offering is acceptable to me. I have seen your labor and toil in journeyings for my name. I therefore command you to send my word abroad and take special care of your family from this time, henceforth and forever. Amen."

Subsequent events in the history of the church demonstrated the propriety of this revelation to the fullest extent. On the return of Brother Brigham to Nauvoo he became active in building up the city, as well as constantly diligent in attending to the duties of his Apostleship. In July following the call of President Young to preside over the Quorum of the Twelve, the Prophet Joseph requested the Twelve to take the responsibility of the church in Nauvoo, especially in practical matters. They attended to the selling of its lands, locating the incoming Saints, and attending to such other labors as would relieve and lighten the burden resting upon the Prophet Joseph Smith. In all this labor Brigham Young was energetic and efficient, proving himself to be a great help to the Prophet of God in all the labors incident to those trying times. He also served with ability as a member of the city council of Nauvoo. On the 7th of July, 1843, he started on a mission to the Eastern states, one chief purpose being to gather funds for the building of the Temple and the Nauvoo house. He was absent until Oct. 22d the same year. From this time until May 21, 1844, he was busy in his calling, often in council with the Prophet and other leading men, constantly alive to the interest of Zion and the spread of the Gospel throughout the world. On the date last named he went on a short mission to the east. While absent, learning of the sad news of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, he immediately returned to Nauvoo. This was the first time in this dispensation the church had been called to mourn the loss of their Prophet, Seer and Revelator. The people were young in experience. False brethren sought to establish themselves as the rightful guardians of the church, Sidney Rigdon making such a claim at a conference held in Nauvoo Aug. 8th, 1844. When the Twelve were sustained as the presiding authority of the church, Brigham Young arose to speak, and in the presence of the multitude was transfigured by the spirit and power of God, so that his form, size, countenance and voice appeared as those of the martyred Prophet. Even non-members were struck with amazement and expected to see and hear the departed Seer. From that moment doubt and uncertainty were banished from the hearts of the faithful and they were fully assured that the mantle of Joseph Smith had fallen upon Brigham Young. On the above occasion President Young said: "All that want to draw away a party from the church after them, let them do it if they can, but they will not prosper." So far as time has brought this prophecy due, it has been verified to the letter. It only remains for a little season to record the confusion and downfall of any and every system which claims to be the succession to the church as established through the Prophet Joseph Smith, and yet which denies the authority of Brigham Young and the Twelve to preside over and continue the work which God established through the Prophet Joseph Smith.

After the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum, persecution did not cease; the Prophets were slain but Truth did not die. The man who stood as the earthly head was taken away, but the authority which he held had been conferred upon others. The work of God went on and in the midst of persecution and bitter hatred Brigham Young stood calmly performing his duties, counseling the Saints, caring for their wants, and pushing with zeal the completion of the Nauvoo Temple, which was dedicated and used for sacred ordinances before the final exodus from Nauvoo. Brigham Young labored much in the Temple until Feb. 1846, when he left the beloved city, and joined the emigrating Saints on the west side of the Mississippi. This was a trying time. 20,000 Saints dispossessed of their homes, and turned out upon the prairies of Iowa in winter. It required not only a great man to be their leader, but one whose greatness consisted in his faith in God and title to the right that God should be his strength and source of inspiration. Such a man was Brigham Young, a veritable "Lion of the Lord" in the face of persecution and trial, yet childlike, humble and dependent on the Lord. The Saints were seeking a country they knew not where. They were poor, some were sick. Several babies were born in camp, just after leaving Nauvoo. To counteract melancholy, and aid them to the exercise of cheerful hope, President Young would have them meet around the campfire, and engage in songs and instrumental music. To aid the Saints less well equipped than others he established two resting and recruiting points, Garden Grove and Mount Pisgah. The main body, with President Young at their head, reached Council Bluffs, on the Missouri river, in June. While here he was requested by the government to furnish a battallion of 500 men, to engage in the war with Mexico. This was promptly complied with, taking many of the most able-bodied men from the camp of the Saints. This battallion marched across the plains to California, and after being mustered out with honor, reached Salt Lake Valley a little later than the Pioneers. After fitting out the Mormon battallion, he crossed the Missouri to the Nebraska side and established winter quarters, since called Florence, about five miles north of Omaha. Here he laid out streets and blocks, upon which comfortable log houses were built, erecting a grist mill, and in numerous ways providing for the comfort of the Saints, while himself and a chosen few should fathom the unexplored regions of the Rocky mountains in quest of a home for an exiled people. In April, 1847, President Young and 142 others, among whom were three noble women, full of faith, commenced their perilous journey across the plains. Arriving in Salt Lake Valley July 24th, 1847. President Young was sick and riding in the carriage of Apostle Wilford Woodruff, when his eyes rested upon the valley, he said "This is the place." It was a barren desert, but God had shown him in vision the place to rest, and he knew the valley when he saw it with his natural eye. President Young immediately directed the laying out of a city, with ten acre blocks, with eight lots in each, one and one-fourth acres in size. The streets eight rods wide, to have a sidewalk on either side one rod wide, and subsequently when water could be obtained, a beautiful row of trees to adorn and shade the same, watered by a crystal stream on the outside of the walk. This was the pattern and most of the cities in Utah, bear the main characteristics of the pioneer city of Salt Lake. In August President Young started on his return to winter quarters, on the way meeting about 2,000 Saints, who reached Salt Lake Valley in the fall of 1847. It was Mexican soil, and the Stars and Stripes had been unfurled by the Mormon Pioneers on Ensign Peak above the city.

At winter quarters Dec. 5th, 1847, President Young was unanimously sustained by the Twelve, President of the Church, and on Dec. 27, by all the authorities and Saints assembled in general conference at Council Bluffs. On the 26th of May he started with his family on his return to Salt Lake Valley. At winter quarters he left a home, mills and other property. This was the fifth time he had left home and property for the Gospel's sake. This year he superintended the emigration of over 2,000 souls, arrived in Salt Lake City Sept. 20, 1848, and began at once giving counsel and planning for the general welfare. At a conference held Oct. 8, 1848, he was unanimously sustained as President of the Church, with Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards, who had also been sustained in the conference at Council Bluffs.

A new era now dawned upon the Church, a thousand miles from bigoted intolerance and mob violence. They found themselves in a desert, but free and happy, notwithstanding the task before them of reclaiming a wilderness, No man in the Church, before or since, was better adapted to lead in colonizing and building up a great commonwealth, than was Brigham Young. He served as the first governor of Utah, from 1851 to 1858, to the satisfaction of the people of the territory, and to the President of the United States, who appointed him. When Johnson's army was sent to Utah for the purpose of suppressing an imaginary rebellion, which the lying Judge Drummond had induced President Buchanan to believe existed, President Young declared that if the army persisted in entering Salt Lake Valley as a hostile foe, they would find it, as the Latter-day Saints had found it, a barren waste. Accordingly torches were prepared to burn down all the houses and property in Salt Lake City, and the body of the Saints moved southward. The move was made, but through kind Prividence and the intervention of Col. Thos. L. Kane, the administration was convinced that no rebellion existed among the Mormons, and that Judge Drummond had basely lied about the Latter-day Saints. The judge had reported that the Mormons had burned the court records. The committee who preceded the army to Salt Lake City, found the court records intact, while life and property in Salt Lake City was as safe to all classes, as in any other part of the Union. In this trying circumstance, the courage and prompt action of President Brigham Young displayed the character of the man. In April, 1853, the corner-stones of a great Temple were laid in Salt Lake City, which was completed forty years later. Before its completion President Young laid the foundation of three others, in St. George, Manti and Logan. The one in

ARTICLES OF FAITH
OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

The cartoon found on another page was presented to President Rich by his fellow-associates, and is herewith reproduced in the Star while he is absent visiting conferences, and the office force assumes all responsibility for the same. The sketch is from the pen of Elder John S. Sears, and was inspired by that portion of President Rich's interview in the Chattanooga News of Jan. 24th, wherein he said:

Dr. Brougher has proven beyond question of a doubt that he is unable to meet me upon the platform of reason and Scripture; he, having emptied his buckets of mud and filth, called to Rev. Folk for aid, which brought forth a speedy response. When these—what can you call them?—are through flinging mud; when they step from the gutter, wash their hands and show a willingness to ascend to the platform on which I stand they may have my address.

ELDER GEO. E. MAYCOCK.

Last week's issue of the Star marked the closing, for the present at least, of the editorial career of Elder Geo. E. Maycock on this paper. He discontinues his work here to assume active charge of the Ohio Conference, having been appointed President of that Conference last November.

Elder Maycock has labored on the Star since October last, and has been faithful and anxious at all times to make our missionary paper full of interesting and profitable matter, and we believe our readers will agree with us that he has been successful. He leaves this office with the love and respect of his associates and with best wishes for his unlimited prosperity in his new field of labor. We believe he will have the confidence of the Elders in Ohio, as well as all who come to know him, and we look for the work of the Master, in the Buckeye state, to grow and increase under his able direction.

Until a new editor is found the Elders in the office will endeavor to make the Star acceptable to its many friends and patrons.

AUTHORITY.

"No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." Heb. 5.

Paul was proud of the authority that had been duly conferred upon him when he was set apart to act in the ministry and was called through the prophets of God who had the power of the Holy Ghost; as recorded in Acts 13. Miracles and signs followed his administration; the sick were healed, devils cast out and there was no question of his priesthood and power coming from God. He was called like Aaron, through Revelation and the inspiration of the Holy Ghost through a Prophet.

This was ever the custom in the primitive church and all men called of God, to administer in the things of God were called like Aaron and Paul. We know how Aaron was called, when Moses murmured and whined before God, because he was slow of speech. God said: "Is not Aaron, the Levite, thy brother? I know that he can speak well. And also behold he cometh forth to meet thee: and when he seeth thee, he will be glad in his heart, and thou shalt speak unto him, and put words in his mouth: and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what ye shall do."

Now mark the difference with modern systems, as they are brought to our notice: A nobleman has three sons, Tom, Dick and Harry. Tom and Dick are smart boys and one is intended for the army, the other for the navy. Harry, however, must be a parson, his profession is picked out by his parents, thus we find the inception of his divine call.

He goes to college, gets a smattering of the dead languages, is ordained by some unauthorized Bishop to act in the name of Jesus Christ and is sent forth to preach the Gospel. He does not go forth like the diciples of old, without purse and script, but demands a salary, sometimes the bigger the better, and is called from one diocese to another, being governed too often, by the price paid for his services. Thus he starts out, and thus his call and authority.

The main qualifications are: knowledge of the dead languages and an ability to tickle the ears of the people. Some parsons' success and popularity depend on the ability to dish out sensationalism, and to cater to the tastes of the multitude: he sings and prays in a tone peculiar to the profession.

Paul in speaking of the last days, said the time would come when the people should heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and these teachers should turn away the ears of the people from the truth and should turn them unto fables, for they would not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts they would heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. It almost appears as though some would rather believe a lie and be damned, than comply with such a simple sermon as Peter preached in Judaea during the feast of Penticost, when he called on the Jews, who showed their faith by the inquiry of "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Then Peter said unto them, "Repent, and be baptised every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Acts 2-38.

Here we have a pure, unadulterated, simple, gospel sermon, preached by a man of unquestioned authority, and the few words preached were: Faith in God, repentance from sin, baptism for the remission of sin and the bestowal of the Holy Ghost, and he said that as many as the Lord our God should call, should be called in like manner.

Do the modern preachers call sinners to repentance as Peter did? Do they not rather call men to repentance through fear of a burning hell and by the relating of graveyard stories and the depicting of deathbed scenes? They bellow, roar, frighten and intimidate men into a belief that they are saved, which is a false delusion, for no man can be saved in the kingdom of God but by compliance to the laws of our Master, administered by His legal authority. And though we or an angel from heaven preach any other doctrine than that taught by Paul, Peter and the Apostles of Jesus, we fall under the curse and anathema as pronounced by Paul in Gal. 1-8.

How easy for us to distinguish between the genuine and spurious ministers of salvation, if we will be led by the spirit and inspiration of the men who wrote and spoke in Christ's church two centuries ago. In those days men received authority from God through His servants, the Prophets, under the direction of the Holy Ghost.

Today authority to preach the Gospel comes from the wish and desire of a good father or mother, who make of their sons lawyers, doctors, soldiers and sailors. The professional divine is also subject to a training school or seminary, where he learns oratory and the other essentials to fit him for his profession.

He does not come from the fishing net and learn inspiration from angels and the revelations of God, but his man-made religion is subject to man's ideas, and he must cater and tickle to man's taste in these enlightened (?) days, no matter how perverted that taste may be.

God is left out of the question, and a smart worldly man who can rant and rave loudly, with a long sanctimonious expression, is the "called of God as was Aaron."

Congregations meet in conference and the matter of a change of pastor is submitted, the price is stated, and if it meets with the approval of the clergyman and the stipulated salary is satisfactory, generally the change is made, and thus Mr. Parson receives a call to labor in another vineyard for the Lord.

It appears wholly a business transaction, and the best learned from a worldly standpoint receives the largest salary. The Lord does not appear to have anything to do with the matter.

Paul said, "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wisdom of the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty."

What a difference is apparent in the administration of God's laws, as taught by Jesus and His Apostles, and the unauthorized practices of modern Christendom.

How often do we hear the old bitter war cry coming from anti-Mormon ministers in Utah: "The Mormon Church is responsible for it, because the Church does not come out openly and stop it." There is an old saying that some physicians do not relish their own medicine. Have you ever heard of a minister being punished by his church for raising or leading a mob against Mormon Elders? If not, then measuring the question with that measure meted out by Utah ministers against the Mormon Church, what doctrine do some churches sanction and secretly advocate in places where Mormon Elders are laboring? We respectfully refer the question to Dr. Iliff, of the M. E. Church at Salt Lake City.

The Elders should wake up in disposing of books. The record of some of the Conferences are falling off to a marked degree. Distribute the written word of God. The Elders should go to work with renewed determination and dispose of Pratt's work, Book of Mormon, Voice of Warning and Durant's. Our hymn book is now ready.

Volume one, Southern Star, neatly bound in cloth, can be had at this office. Sent postpaid to any address for $1.75. It makes a neat and useful book for the home. They are going fast; order at once.

"How swift the months have passed away
'Tis Conference again."

One of the happiest times in a missionary's experience is when we meet in Conference. President Rich notified us that he would meet us on Jan. 20th and 21st, 1900. In 1898 we tried to hold Conference in the country but were driven out by an armed mob. In 1899 we selected a small city for our Conference, and here, also we were disturbed by a mob and prevented from holding public meetings. This time we selected New Orleans thinking perhaps there was enough Christian spirit there to allow religious freedom, and we were not mistaken. We were treated with respect by all we met and in consequence we have a warm spot in our hearts for New Orleans. Should any of the good people of the Crescent City wander into some of our Western neighborhoods we shall remember them for their true Americanism and try to make them as happy as we felt while in their city.

We secured, for our meetings, the Odd Fellows' hall, obtained rooms at the Hotel Metropole, and each of the daily newspapers were kind and generous enough to publish notices of our meetings free of charge.

On the 19th all the Elders arrived and also Elder L. R. Anderson and Elder Christo Hyldahl and wife, from Chattanooga.

Saturday was spent partly in counsel meeting, in which all the Elders reported their work, their financial condition, health, etc., after which we received some valuable counsel.

President Rich was delayed and did not reach us until Sunday morning. We held three public services on Sunday—the first was poorly attended, but more came in the afternoon, and at night there was a fairly good attendance. The curious did not turn out, but those who came were mostly from among the better class and evidently came to receive light. They not only gave the best attention, but came up after services to ask questions and obtain literature.

President Rich spoke with his usual forceful and pleasing manner. He graphically depicted some of the persecutions passed through by the Saints and feelingly told how his own mother had her own home burned over her head three times, and how she crossed the Mississippi river on chunks of ice, to escape the fury of a Christian mob. He also told how we are carrying the Gospel to the nations, without purse or script, in contrast to those who preach for hire, divine for money and make merchandise of the souls of men. The other speakers were Elders L. R. Anderson, Christo Hyldahl, J. N. Miller, and O. D. Flake. All who attended enjoyed the services, while the Elders had a spiritual feast. At a Priesthood meeting on Sunday President Rich spoke with such power and gave such good counsel that we all felt "that it was good to be here," and thanked God that we had been deemed worthy, to go into the missionary field, and while there, suffer a few things for the Gospel.

One of the most pleasing features of our Conference remains yet to be mentioned. Not since we left our homes had we had the privilege of greeting one of our sisters from the West, and when we learned that Sister Hyldahl had come to visit the Conference every Elder was anxious to meet her and each in turn grasped her hand and with words that came from the heart bade her welcome. Her bright face and loving expressions were an inspiration to us; we thought of home and loved ones and every one determined to do more in the future, that they might be worthy of the surroundings, with which God had blessed them. As a token of remembrance the Elders purchased an appropriate souvenir of New Orleans, and gave to our sister who had honored us with her presence. President O. D. Flake made a neat and fitting speech in presenting the gift. Sister Hyldahl responded in a few choice words and her sincere appreciation moistened the eyes of those men who were used to meeting sneers, jeers, scoffings, cursings and threatenings, without faltering, but a few sympathetic words won their hearts and melted them to tears.

As every sweet has its bitter, ours came with the time for parting. Monday morning we had a group photograph taken, and then met in an upper room of our hotel, partook of the Sacrament, asked the blessings of God on our labors, after which we took leave of each other and started for our respective fields of labor. Sixteen Elders for Mississippi and six to Louisiana, two being transferred to Ohio.

We cannot say too much for the kindly treatment, write-ups, etc., given us by the newspapers, during our Conference. We desire to express our sincere thanks to the newspaper men and women of New Orleans, for the fairness exhibited was indeed like an oasis in the desert.

Thus ended the first successful Conference, attended by any of the present Elders of the Mississippi Conference, except myself.

THE FRUITS OF GOOD AND EVIL.

(By Charles W. Penrose.)

In all our lives how careful should we be
To square our actions by the rule of right,
To speak the language of sincerity,
And shun the path that will not bear the light.

Who can the hasty, bitter words unsay?
Who can a single deed obliterate?
A flood of tears will wash no act away,
Nor grief the spoken thought annihilate.

Our words on earth are like the seeds we sow,
They pass from sight and fade from memory;
But from their good or evil fruits shall grow,
To multiply throughout eternity.

No skill of man can make two kinds of fruit
Grow from one seed, however rich the ground;
And ne'er on branches from an evil root,
Shall buds of good and evil both be found.

Fruits "in their kind" from seeds prolific spring.
In their own likeness they come forth again;
And so our actions, right or wrong, shall bring
To us a crop of good or evil grain.

And fertile germs in these productions dwell,
Each to perpetrate their species still.
When shall they cease to spread? ah, who can tell?
Who stop their increase by his feeble will?

Do good to others; though ingratitude
May often chill thy warm and gen'rous heart,
And though thy motives may be misconstrued,
Still act a Godlike, charitable part.

Hold not thine hand from doing worthy things,
Though praised by none and known to God alone;
Virtue shall be the glory of the Kings,
Who share the splendor of the Father's throne.

Oh! think not that the shades of darkest night
Can hide the wickedness in secret done!
With all its dire effects 'twill come to light,
And blast with trembling shame the guilty one.

Beware of doing wilful injury,
Close not thine ear to mercy's pleading voice,
For thine own measures shall come back to thee,
To bring despair or make thy soul rejoice.

Give the world the same faith in God that Napoleon's rank and file had in their general, and the millennium would be here in the twinkling of an eye. Our faith is too refrigerating, and our trust is so much like distrust that it is hard to tell whether it is one or the other. Enthusiasm for the Almighty! You may not like the phrase, but you need what it represents.

PRESIDENT RICH IN AN INTERVIEW REPLIES TO REVEREND FOLK.

In the two previous issues of the Star we have presented our readers with President Rich's replies to Rev. Brougher, a Baptist minister of this city. Mr. Brougher evidently concluded he had received the worst of the discussion for he sent to Nashville for Rev. Edgar E. Folk, editor of the Baptist Reflector, to come and tell Chattanooga people all about the "Mormons." Mr. Folk, no doubt was chosen to rescue his brother minister, from the trouble into which he had unexpectedly fallen, from the fact that he had recently spent two whole weeks in Utah, and this long residence among the Latter-day Saints would enable him to make a thorough and exhaustive investigation of their habits, customs, and religion, at least it was sufficient time from a prejudiced and preconceived point of view.

Mr. Folk appeared in Dr. Brougher's pulpit at the time appointed and delivered a most sensational sermon, characterizing "Mormons and Mormonism" as being all that is wicked and unholy. So shocking were parts of his tirade that a number of his listeners refused to hear him through and left the church in disgust. A more indecent attack on our faith and people probably was never made in a pulpit, and as a fitting climax to the replies to Dr. Brougher we give our readers the reply to Dr. Folk, which closes the incident:

Today a News reporter called at Mormon headquarters and found President Ben E. Rich, who had just returned from New Orleans, and in reply to the question, "What answer are you going to give to the attack made upon the Mormon people and faith by Rev. Edgar E. Folk, in the pulpit of the First Baptist church, on last Sunday night?" he said:

"I hardly know how to deal with Dr. Brougher's latest inportation. All good Christians are taught to remember the teachings of mother. I had a saintly Christian mother, who always reminded me that if I laid down with certain kinds of animals I would be almost certain to get fleas on me, and remembering this advice, you see I must feel my way carefully.

"Really, no answer to Mr. Folk is required. In his zeal to paint a black and horrifying picture, he forgot to use any coloring of sense, logic or plausibility, so instead of a picture he presented his hearers with a daub of filth. He made it so disgusting and unreasonable that any person with common sense can see Mr. Folk Simply Hung Himself.

"Any sensible person knows the government under which we live would not for a minute tolerate the daily existence of such horrible crimes.

"Then, besides, Mr. Folk says it is going on right under the noses of intelligent non-Mormons, who comprise half the population. Then the legal machinery of the state is nearly all in the hands of non-Mormons from the supreme court down. No doubt there are many intelligent, broad-minded gentlemen in Chattanooga who have visited Salt Lake City and who will bestow upon this foul-mouthed slanderer the proper epithet which would probably be improper for a religious man to use.

"Mr. Folk remained two weeks in Salt Lake City. Just think of it! Two whole weeks! And comes back loaded. Is there a reasonable-minded person in Chattanooga who has doubts as to who loaded him? He remained long enough to copy what some other bigot said and then returned.

"He went to Utah

Simply to Pick Flaws—

not to learn the truth, and if he did not try to get information under false pretenses he at least shaded his true status and went in the guise of a representative for a reputable public journal. He did not say he was a minister, and was introduced as a newspaper correspondent to President Lorenzo Snow, present head of the Church who after shaking hands with Mr. Folk, turned our reverend friend over to a prominent Elder.

"Mr. Folk asked questions

Too Indecent to Publish, and was told he was asking questions no decent newspaper would print, and that so respectable a journal as the Nashville American would not wish its representative to insult people by asking. Mr. Folk was so pertinacious that the Elder was again forced to tell him that no regular reporter of even ordinary decency would ask such questions and make such cross-examinations as he was indulging in.

"He, like some other visitors, imagined that he could spend a few days in Salt Lake City, mingling chiefly with the enemies of the church, and thereby obtain sufficient information about the doctrines, lives and doings of the Latter-day Saints to enable him to write up their history, explain their theology, and proclaim to the world all about their character and failings. It is the acme of sublime egotism.

"Mr. Brougher and Mr. Folk are evidently not 'In a Unity of the Faith.'

As a sample, the former said we were highly educated, and took particular pains to show that an educated devil was the worst kind of a devil. The latter said we were degraded and very ignorant. Which lied? Mr. Folk should have had Dr. Brougher's tirades before him when he prepared his slime. There are some wide differences that might be noticed by friends of both.

"I sympathize with the good, honest-hearted people in Mr. Brougher's congregation in having their pulpit desecrated by such corruption as gushed from Dr. Folk on Sunday night. It surely must have shocked sensitive ears, and none could go away saying they had been either edified or elevated by going.

"There is not a Mormon child, who remembers the teachings of its parents, who does not know that Rev. Folk from the crown of his prejudiced head to that portion of his miserable anatomy which disgraces mother earth by treading upon it.

"There is a law in the south punishing a black negro who commits a criminal assault upon a white lady; yet the white negro can occupy a fashionable pulpit and commit a criminal libel against a hundred thousand ladies, if they are Mormon ladies, and be looked upon as a hero. How many years ago was it that southern chivalry expired? Suppose a Mormon Elder was to malign and make such statements about any people in the south as Mr. Folk made about my people, how long would it be before that Elder would be dangling

At the End of a Rope?

"We believe in law and order, but would any community in this great nation tolerate such statements as Dr. Folk made?

"Dr. Brougher has proven beyond the question of a doubt that he is unable to meet me upon the platform of reason and Scripture; he, having emptied his buckets of mud and filth, called to Rev. Folk for aid, which brought forth a speedy response. When these—what can you call them?—are through flinging mud; when they step from the gutter, wash their hands and show a willingness to ascend to the platform on which I stand they may have my address.

"The good people of Chattanooga have heard from Brougher and Folk, they have also heard from me; having tasted of our different and decency, they should be fully able to decide in their own minds just whose early education in good manners has been neglected. If it be true that from the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, then I have no desire to dwell in their hearts and they have no desire to leave their wallow and come to the temple of reason where I have been reared.

"Mr. Folk ridiculed us for believing there was mercy beyond the grave. I have always been reluctant in saying anything about the dead (Mr. Brougher having acknowledged his demise by sending for Mr. Folk and the latter committing suicide by hanging himself), but perhaps they will some day be thankful if God will be as merciful to them as He was to those who once rejected the counsel of God against themselves in the days of Noah while the ark was preparing. I Peter, 3-18-20.

"In making the above statement I desire to offend no one and think I have been charitable to those who so despitefully use us."

History of the Southern States Mission.

March, 1895—

Early in the month eleven Elders were released to return home on the 30th inst. On the 5th inst. Elders John R. Halliday and Alfred W. Nebeker entered Knoxville, Tenn., for the purpose of making a house to house canvass, providing themselves with 2,000 tracts.

Elders Bird Murphy and W. J. Chapman, of the North Alabama Conference, have begun the canvass of Huntsville, Ala., working with much zeal, and have met with favor from the leading citizens of the town.

Elders C. G. Patterson and H. Turner, while laboring in the vicinity of Lake City, S. C., were ordered out of Township fourteen by a mob. A sheriff and trial justice were promptly called upon; both promised to protect the Elders.

Elder Archibald Bevan has been appointed President of the Kentucky Conference to succeed Elder Louis R. Wells, released.

On the 18th inst. sixteen Elders arrived, and after two days went forth to battle for the Lord.

Reports this month from various Conferences are full of good tidings. Opposition to the work of God is waning, and the Elders consequently encouraged, laboring gently and effectively. This month has been characterized by extremely wet weather and good health of Elders, only two cases of sickness being reported.

April—

Lovely weather ushered in the month, with bright prospects for a vast amount of thorough and efficient work being done by the Elders.

April 1st President Kimball left Chattanooga for Salt Lake City on important business associated with the Mission.

On the 22d inst. Elders George H. Horne, of the West Virginia Conference, and D. C. Hubbard, of the North Carolina Conference, were called to assist in the office.

On the 16th President Kimball returned from Utah in the best of health and spirits, having attended the annual conference; meeting also in council with the First Presidency, and reported the condition of the Mission. The brethren were pleased with the report and promised to render what assistance they could.

Twenty-two Elders arrived from the west on the 16th and 1oth insts.

Elder W. W. Bean was honorably released from his labors in Middle Tennessee Conference, having presided one year. Having received instructions from the office, Elder Bean left Nashville on the 24th inst. for Lewis county, Tennessee, to visit the scene where Elders Gibbs and Berry were killed and obtain for the Contributor company a photograph of the Condor house and farm, together with what other information he could gather regarding the massacre and general feelings of the people. Disguised as a lumberman he reached tne place, but was unsuccessful in getting a photograph. Many of the mobbers are still living, and are extremely bitter towards the Elders. This feeling is so prevalent in the county that at present it is unsafe to canvass it.

Elder O. M. Sanderson has been appointed President of the Middle Tennessee Conference, to succeed Elder W. W. Bean.

Elders Holt and Chipman arrived in Natchez, Miss., with the intention of canvassing it. They called upon the mayor and asked permission to labor in the city. He desired them to desist until he saw the attorney and aldermen. On the 15th inst. the Elders received the following notice:

Natchez, Miss., April 15, 1895.

As mayor of Natchez, Miss., I refuse or decline to permit Elders Holt and Chipman, of the Church of Latter-day Saints, to preach the doctrines of the Mormon Church or to distribute the literature concerning said church in this city. W. G. BENBROOK, Mayor of Natchez.

Thus for the time being the gates of the city of Natchez are closed against the work of God.

SKETCH OF BRIGHAM YOUNG.

St. George he lived to dedicate to the Lord and complete the organization of the Stakes of Zion, so far as population required it to be done. In the St. George Temple he explained the order and duties of the various offices in the Holy Priesthood. During his life-time in Utah, from 1847-1877, he labored most industriously in both spiritual and temporal matters for the welfare of all inhabitants of the territory, and indeed for the benefit of all mankind. He built mills, factories and graineries, etc., and encouraged every form of home industry, which the facilities of this region would justify. In the developments of mines alone, he exercised a check, stating that the time had not come to develop them to any considerable extent. The wisdom of this suggestion is appreciated by the Latter-day Saints, who know that a rapid development of mining interests at that time would have brought to Utah an element of speculators and political demagogues, who would have waged a bitter warfare against the Saints when their numbers and strength were too limited to maintain their foothold in this region. President Young was the prime mover in the building of the Utah Central and Utah Southern railroads. He was a contractor on a large scale in building the Union Pacific and the telegraph line across the plains, also in building the Deseret telegraph line to local points in the State; which line is still the property of the Church. Brigham Young and his associates founded the Deseret University, now called the University of Utah, and one of the very best educational institutions west of the Missouri river.

In later years, to aid the children of the Saints to obtain an education in religious truths, as well as in secular branches, he founded and endowed the Brigham Young Academy in Provo, and the Brigham Young College in Logan. He was in all respects the friend and promoter of all true education, though limited himself in youth to eleven days' schooling. He founded settlements in Arizona, Idaho and Nevada. During his administration of thirty years as President of the Church, he made frequent tours, accompanied by his associates in the Priesthood, to the settlements of the Saints throughout the length and breadth of the land. He was diligent in sending the Gospel abroad, opening up new fields of labor in various parts of the earth. He was a man of God and a man of the people. He loved God and all mankind, yet he never catered to public sentiment. He must always know the truth and righteousness of a movement before he would espouse and aid it. Like his predecessor, Joseph Smith, and nearly all great men, he had bitter enemies. His character and course in life were traduced and villified. He was cast into prison on false charges, and the weapon of the assassin was prepared to shed his blood. But God "delivered him out of them all." Though he did not utter so many distinct prophecies, he builded faithfully upon the foundation laid through the Prophet Joseph Smith, and all his movements and counsels were prophetic, as fully demonstrated by subsequent events. He was a prophet, statesman, pioneer and colonizer. The saying is attributed to William H. Seward, secretary of state under the administration of Abraham Lincoln, that America had never produced a greater statesman than Brigham Young. His policy with the Indians was one of peace. "It is better to feed them than to fight them," was his theory, and he carried it out fully. The Indians loved and respected him. It cannot be denied truthfully that the policy of Brigham Young and his people with the Indians has saved to our nation life and treasure in Utah and Arizona.

In his family he was kind and indulgent. Indeed he was a philanthropist to all who would receive his counsel and kind acts, for he was not only the husband of several wives like the Patriarchs and Prophets of old, and the father of fifty-six children, but he provided means for the support and education of orphans and others destitute of the comforts of life. He believed, however, in the strictest industry, that it was false policy to feed men in idleness if work could be provided for them. In the face of calumny and opposition he was calm and serene, and bore persecution with that submission and patience which stamped him not only a broad-minded and great-hearted man, but truly a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. He departed this life peacefully at his home in Salt Lake City Aug. 29th, 1877. His funeral was attended by about 30,000 people, both of his faith and non-Mormons. He was a true and undaunted friend in life to the Prophet Joseph Smith, for whom he offered his life, wherever opportunity afforded, and it is not wonderful when the spirit was taking flight from his temple of clay, if Joseph, the Prophet, appeared to him and welcomed him home to the spirit world, for the last words he uttered were, "Joseph! Joseph! Joseph! Joseph," and Brigham Young had finished his earthly mission.

Which will you do, smile and make others happy, or be cross and make everybody around you miserable?

"BUT THOUGH WE, OR AN ANGEL FROM HEAVEN, PREACH ANY OTHER GOSPEL UNTO YOU THAN THAT WHICH WE HAVE PREACHED UNTO YOU, LET HIM BE ACCURSED." GAL. 1ST C. 8 V.

VOL. 2. CHATTANOOGA, TENN., SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1900. No. 12.

Lines on the Second Coming of Christ.

By M. PIKE.

O! ye nations, awake from your slumbers, arise!
For soon will the Savior descend from the skies.
The signs of His coming do plainly appear,
As the leaves on the trees tell that summer is near.
He comes, our Redeemer, His rights to possess,
His foes He'll subdue, His friends He will bless;
Ev'ry eye shall behold Him and ev'ry knee bow,
And those that have pierced Him their error shall know.

O! how will you feel in His presence to stand;
You who now reject and despise His command;
'Neath the rocks and the mountains you gladly would hide,
The day of His vengeance you cannot abide.
Then come all ye honest from every nation,
While God in His mercy still offers salvation;
Has sent forth His servants in days as of old,
As shepherds they gather the sheep to the fold.

Receive ye the message, God's mandate's obey,
And flee out of Bab'lon, O! hasten away,
For the judgments are coming, e'en now at the door;
They'll be to the nations most grevious and sore;
For their sin and rebillion, their priestcraft and pride,
His servants they've mock'd and His laws they deride;
Oh, Bab'lon, thou doomed one, thou surely must fall,
Thou hast spurned at God's mercy nor heeded His call!

Like the stone in the sea, as the angel has shewn,
With thy pomp and thy pride, thou must be overthrown;
Then let us excape to the land in the west,
Where in safety and peace the Saints will be blest.
There cities and Temples to God we will rear,
And for the great Bridegroom will all things prepare;
How joyful we'll meet Him our Savior and friend,
Our sorrows and mourning will then have an end.

We'll again meet our loved ones, and dry up our tears,
And reign with the Savior a long thousand years;
All creation then shall in harmony blend,
And man everywhere meet a brother and friend.
What glorious times on this earth we will have,
A heaven no more beyond space we shall crave,
From the least to the greatest the Lord all shall know
And satan's dominions we'll quite overthrow.

On the 2d inst. President Kimball left Chattanooga to visit Chicago on business.

Elders R. J. Bischoff and N. K. Kimball were preparing to fill and appointment to preach at Meherrin, Lawrenceburg county, Virginia, on the 5th inst., when they were ordered to immediately leave the town. While waiting for their mail a mob gathered; at the point of a gun they were marched out of town and subjected to vile and abusive threats. Upon leaving, the mobocratic leader fired a parting shot over their heads. Shortly after this occurrence Elders Bohney and Matthews, who had heard of the appointment, arrived in Meherrin for mail. Upon inquiry they were informed that several Protestant preachers were holding meetings, but were advised by the leader of the mob to leave the town. They did not instantly comply, and finally an invitation was extended to them to fill the appointments made by Elders Bischoff and Kimball, which, after being guaranteed protection, they accepted. No violence was offered, except during the meeting one corner of the building was treated to an explosion of gunpowder. After meeting the Elders left the town, traveling about two miles, when they sat down on a log, when the leader of the mob came up on horseback and invited them to his home. This feigned friendship was only of short duration, for he soon began to abuse and vilify them. The Elders started off, when he fired a pistol shot, which struck the ground so near that dirt was thrown upon them. The Elders left the neighborhood without further molestation.

May 16th eight Elders arrived in Chattanooga from Zion, while five Elders who had ben assigned to labor in Texas arrived in that Conference from the west.

After being importuned upon five different occasions the mayor of Natchez finally consented to allow Elders Holt and Chipman to canvass that city.

Reports during the month are very favorable, and many are being added to the "fold of Christ."

The latter part of the month was characterized by extremely hot weather.

On the 20th inst. Elder Frank T. Pomeroy was appointed President of the Mississippi Conference to succeed Elder J. W. Walker, released.

June—

The first week in June was excessively hot.

The first electrotyped edition of the Voice of Warning was issued from the press of W. I. Crandall & Co., June 1st, 1895.

Sixteen Elders reported from the west on the 5th inst., and after receiving much timely and valuable instruction left for their respective fields.

On the 25th inst. John R. Haliday was appointed President of the East Tennessee Conference, to succeed W. L. Hayes, released.

The health of the Elders generally has been very good. Much interest in the Gospel is being made manifest. Many are investigating, and several honest in heart have been led to accept the truth.

July—

On account of the sickness of himself and wife President Kimball was unable to attend the Texas Conference, which convened at the Grubb settlement, Hopkins county, Texas, July 6th and 7th. Eleven Elders were present, presided over by President A. S. Campbell. Four public and three council meetings were held, being well attended, and an excellent spirit prevailed.

The Mississippi Conference was held in a grove near Brother John Lee's, about twelve miles from Hamberg, Franklin county, Mississippi, July 13th and 14th.

The Saints and friends in Franklin county had erected a neat log meeting house preparatory for conference, but on the evening of the 8th inst. it was maliciously set afire and burned.

Owing to bad connections President Kimball did not arrive in time to attend Saturday's meetings. All Elders laboring in the Conference were present. Four public and three council meetings were held, being well attended, and a most enjoyable time was had.

Monday afternoon, while President Kimball was instructing the Elders in council meeting, word came that an armed mob of about thirty men were marching toward them, uttering vile and abusive threats against the "Mormons." Subsequently, through the efforts of Dr. Newman, they were induced to leave their weapons behind. They were, however, reinforced, until they numbered fifty-six. Being met by Brother John Lee about 200 yards from the place of meeting, they were persuaded to remain there while he informed the Elders what they wanted. President Kimball went out to face the mob, the Elders engaging in prayer during his absence. On being asked what was wanted, the mob replied, "We want you Mormons to leave the country." President Kimball met and answered every argument they advanced, and finally they dispersed, as one of their own number admitted, "The worst whipped crowd I ever saw."

The Elders were given by the mob until the 16th to leave the county, but previous to that time they all left for their fields of labor without further molestation.

Subsequently the names of the mobbers have been obtained, and President Kimball has sent a petition to Gov. Stone for the protection of the Elders against mob violence.

The South Alabama Conference was held at Bradleyton, Crenshaw county, Alabama, July 20th and 21st. All the meetings were well attended, and a feast of fat things, both spiritually and temporally, were enjoyed by those present.

On the 27th inst. President Kimball left Chattanooga to visit Elder W. L. Hayes, who was released on the 20th of June, but through sickness has been unable to return home, lying seriously ill of fever at Miller's Cove, Tenn., about twenty-six miles from Knoxville.

Thirty-five Elders arrived during the month, thus adding strength to the good work of spreading Gospel truth. During the month the Elders generally have been revisiting Saints and friends. Much good is thus being accomplished. The Saints are being instructed in their duties, and many honest souls, with joy and rejoicing, have been led to embrace the Gospel.

PRE-EXISTENCE.

BY C. HYLDAHL.

A beautiful sermon was delivered by one of the most prominent divines of this city on the evening of the 4th inst. His text was taken from Matt. 6-9: "Our Father which art in heaven." Many beautiful thoughts were expressed on the subjects of Fatherhood, Duty of Man to Man, and Duty of Man to God.

In the course of his remarks he also dwelt at some length upon our present estate, showing the reasons for our being more favored of God, seemingly, than many others of His children—not only in that we are permitted to live in this, the grandest country on earth, but also that we are accorded religious liberty and freedom such as few people of the nations enjoy. His reasons were good and his expressions beautiful and clear, but they were limited alone to this life. No reference was made to that estate all men enjoyed before they came here known as our pre-existence, upon which, we believe, is predicated to a greater or less degree the blessing that we enjoy here.

Reasons for our pleasant surroundings, our joys, and proper liberties, are not alone confined to the present life of man, but they extend beyond the veil to his pre-existence, where he lived and moved, thought and learned before he came to this sphere of action.

The purpose of the writer is not to find fault or to correct the reverend's discourse, to which he listened with much interest, but simply to add to the ideas brought forth.

It is very true that our environments in mortality have greatly to do with our individual present condition, but we must look far beyond the time when mortal man came to earth, and there we might discover reasons why some men or spirits were favored and blest above others and held in reserve to come forth at this the time of preparation for the second and glorious coming of Him who shall be hailed as Lord of Lords and King of Kings.

John the Revelator, in Rev. 12, 7-9, speaks of a mighty struggle going on in heaven, long before the foundation of this world was laid, but at a time when such was contemplated and a plan prepared, whereby the spirits of God, then dwelling with Him, could receive a tabernacle of mortality, came to earth, and, by their free agency, work out an exaltation that should be far greater and more glorious than any previously enjoyed. "Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought, and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven." They were overcome, and cast out. But there were those who were victorious who were on the side of truth and justice, and they were the Sons of God who remained true to their Father, and who kept their first estate.

Could the vail be taken from our mortal memories and we be permitted to once more behold and review this grand army of the Lord of Hosts, who knows but there we might see such giants for truth and right as Job, to whom the God of heaven spake, saying: "Where wast thou when I laid the foundation of the earth?" (Job 38-4.) And Jeremiah, who was ordained a Prophet long before his advent to this his second estate? (Jer. 1-5).

In the Epistle of Paul to the Ephesians, 1-4, it is declared that He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world. Here we are at least given to understand that we had an existence before the one we are now enjoying, also that there, some were more valiant for truth than others, for because of their faithfulness they were chosen and ordained to perform a mighty work here in the earth. They were held in reserve for a special time and work to come and be leaders among men.

We live in the dispensation of the fullness of times, when all things spoken of by the mouths of all the Holy Prophets since the world began, shall be restored to the earth: when the Gospel shall be revealed in its fullness; a time of preparation for the ushering in of the millennium of peace and righteousness and the coming of our Master to reign on earth.

God, our omniscient Father, knew it would require valiant and faithful spirits to come to earth at such a time as this, when all the powers of the outcast of heaven would be arrayed against the principles of truth given to His children for the last time. Such mighty spirits were held in reserve, and foreordained to come and do the very work they are doing. They were, and are, favored of God beyond others, but they had proven themselves, and merited every gift and blessing they now possess.

Do but the half of what you can, and you will be surprised at the result of your own diligence.

It is an old yet true saying that falsehood will travel a league while truth is putting on its boots.

"HE SHALL PERISH"

BY ELDER GEORGE REYNOLDS.

No sooner had the riches of America become known to the peoples of Europe through the discoveries and conquests of the Spaniards than the various monarchies began to partition the western world among themselves, as they are now doing Africa and China. England, France, Portugal and other nations followed the example of Spain and established colonies in different parts of this land until a map of one hundred and fifty years ago would show the whole of the American continent as belonging to or being tributary to some one of the European powers. The people of the United States were the first to shake off the foreign yoke, and their example was followed, a few decades later, by a number of others. It is somewhat remarkable that these revolutionary upheavals were the most active and most successful between the time of the appearance of the Father and Son to the youthful Prophet, Joseph Smith, in 1820, and the publication of the Book of Mormon about ten years later. Between these dates Ecuador, Brazil, Mexico, Bolivia and Peru declared themselves independent of all foreign powers. In all these cases, except in Brazil, a republic was declared, fashioned more or less after the pattern of the United States. In Brazil an independent empire was proclaimed.

In the tenth chapter of the second book of Nephi appears the following prophecy uttered by his brother Jacob:

> But behold, this land, saith God, shall be a land of thine inheritance, and the Gentiles shall be blessed upon the land.
> And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles, and there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall raise up unto the Gentiles;
> And I will fortify this land against all other nations;
> And he that fighteth against Zion shall perish, saith God;
> For he that raiseth up a king against me shall perish, for I, the Lord, the King of heaven, will be their King, and I will be a light unto them forever, that hear my words.

It will be noticed in this prophecy that it is stated "there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall raise up unto the Gentiles. * * * For he that raiseth up a king against me shall perish." It cannot be said that those kings who were raised up unto the Genties before the pubication of the Book of Mormon were raised up against God; for where "there is no law there is no condemnation," and therefore those who had no opportunity of knowing the law or who were raised up before it was published could not have done it in rebellion against or in opposition to the word and will of the Lord. This was the case with Brazil, but even that empire has perished in God's own time and a republican form of government now controls in that land.

But there is a case that most terribly fulfills the malediction contained in the above quoted prophecy; it is that of the Emperor Louis Napoleon, of France, and those associated with him in the attempt to establish an empire in Mexico.

For a number of years Louis Napoleon was the mightiest man in Europe. Partly through the glamor of his name, as "the nephew of his uncle," and partly by long-continued endeavor, associated with political astuteness, he had worked himself from being a political exile in England to be first the President of the French Republic and afterwards Emperor of the French. For a time all went well with him so far as outward appearances were concerned, but he undertook to raise up a king to the Gentiles against the Lord on this continent, and then decisive, though gradual destruction came upon him.

In the days when Napoleon was President of the French Republic (1851), Elder John Taylor, with other brethren, visited Europe as a missionary of the Church of Jesus Christ. His labors were largely in France and Germany. He published the Book of Mormon in the language of both these nations, and took especial care that the French translation should be placed within the reach of the President of the Republic and other high officials. We do not know whether Louis Napoleon read the sacred record, but he had full opportunity to do so. If he was not acquainted with the prophecies which that book contains, the fault did not lie with the servants of God. The coup d'etat followed in December, 1851, and the slender hopes that had before existed of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints being officially recognized by the French government were crushed in the despotism that followed. In due time Louis Napoleon, from being President, was proclaimed Emperor (November, 1852). He married the beautiful Spanish Countess Eugenie de Montejo, in 1853, who, in a few years, bore him a son (1856), the sole fruit of their union. He waged successful war against Russia, Austria and Cochin China, in all of which the French gained glory, and, in two cases, obtained increased power and wealth.

In process of time (1861), Napoleon took it into his head he would establish an empire in Mexico. The unsettled condition of affairs in that country afforded him the pretext that the rights of French citizens were not protected. England and Spain were at first inclined to aid him in this venture, but soon retired, and he was left alone to carry out his scheme. Maximilian, Archduke of Austria, a brother of the Emperor Francis Joseph, was chosen to occupy the imperial position. For some time he hesitated; he was loath to accept the proffered honor, but being constantly urged by the French Emperor and his own friends, he finally accepted. He, with his wife, the Princess Carlotta, sister of the King of the Belgians, came over to Mexico, and for a time, with the assistance of French bayonets and the troops of the reactionary Mexican party, he made a successful campaign. Then the government of the United States made so strong a protest against the whole scheme, and asserted itself so vigorously as the champion of the Mexican Republic, that Napoleon thought it well to withdraw the French troops, and accordingly they embarked for Europe. Maximilian, who was made of heroic stuff, refused to flee, his Mexican followers were overwhelmed by the national forces, he was taken prisoner, and with two of his generals, Miramon and Mejia, was afterwards shot (June, 1867).

Maximilian's last words were, "Poor Carlotta!" And well might he say "Poor Carlotta!" Sad has been her history ever since. When the French deserted her husband, and she found that her efforts to secure help for him at other European courts were unavailing, her reason began to totter, and the news of his death finished the work. For nearly a third of a century she has been bereft of reason, a childless widow confined within castle walls awaiting the liberating hand of the long-delayed angel of death.

"Born a princess, and educated to wear a crown, now, although Carlotta has lived but fifty-nine years, thirty-three of them have been passed within the walls of an asylum for the insane. Married at seventeen, a queen at twenty-four, and a lunatic at twenty-six, she was bereft of father, husband, empire and reason in the short space of eighteen months, and then, by the irony of fate, forever banished from human memory. Carlotta's career was almost kinetoscopic in the rapidity of its changes—promising in its inception, magnificent in its rise, pathetic, dramatic, tragic in its decline and fall."—Princess Slam Slam.

And what of Napoleon and his wife, she who was once considered the most beautiful woman in Europe? A few years after his ill-advised attempt to erect an empire on American soil, he entered altogether too lightly into a terrible war with Germany (1870). The results are known to us; he was defeated, the enemy overflowed his land, entered his capital city and compelled a humiliating peace. Napoleon was made prisoner, and, in France, a republic was established in place of the empire over which he had ruled. He died in 1872, an exile in England. His only son went to war against savages, as a soldier in the armies of the country that had proven an asylum to his father, and in far-off South Africa he was slain by the hands of the Zulus (1879). The once beautiful Eugenie, heartbroken with her sorrows, a wreck from disease and suffering, like Carlotta, still lives, the sole representative of the family. Was ever prohpecy more terribly, more completely fulfilled? They have perished, root and branch; their names are blotted out, their generations have ceased.

But is that all? What of Maximilian's family? Sophie, the mother of Francis Joseph and Maximilian, was a princess of the house of Bavaria, so was Elizabeth, the former's wife; and with terrible weight and frequency have the blows fallen on that monarch and his Bavarian kinsfolk. Himself the ruler of a divided house rapidly crumbling to pieces through the animosities of the differing races of which it is composed, he has been defeated in every war in which he has engaged with his neighbors. His only son, the successor to the throne, the Crown Prince Rudolph, died a violent death (January, 1889). the details of which are kept a secret. It is officially said that he committed suicide, but the story goes that he was killed by a nobleman whose wife had formerly been a mistress to the Prince and on whom Rudolph still forced his attentions. The husband is said to have also killed his wife and then himself. Thus, like Maximilian and Napoleon, Francis Joseph is left without a son and heir to the throne. Again, the Emperor Francis Joseph's wife, the Empress Elizabeth, was assassinated, without provocation, at Geneva, Switzerland, last October, by an anarchist. Her sister, Sophie, Duchess of Alancon, was burned to death in that terrible fire (May, 1897,) at a charitable bazaar in Paris, when so many of the ladies of the European nobility met a horrible death. The Archduchess Mathilde, another sister, carelessly dropped a burning match upon her dress and was also burned to death. King Louis II, of Bavaria, became insane and drowned himself. Count Louis of Trani, Prince of Sicily, committed suicide. The Archduke John of Tuscany discarded royalty and was lost at sea.

The Archduke John Salvator of Tuscany, a nephew of the Emperor Francis Joseph, fell in love with an actress and singer, Ludmilla Hubel, whom he married in spite of all family opposition, renouncing at the same time all his rights, privileges and rank, and assuming the name of Orth, after one of his castles. The romantic marriage was celebrated secretly, but in a perfectly legal manner, in London. Johann Orth next bought, in 1891, a fine ship in Liverpool, which he renamed Santa Margarita; and so anxious was he to guard against the vessel being recognized, that he had all drawings and photographs of it handed over to him, and these he burned with his own hands; moreover he caused all portraits of himself and of his wife to be bought up at any price, and these were likewise destroyed. Shortly afterwards the ex-Archduke and his wife set sail for South America, and the vessel was duly reported to have arrived at Montevideo, and departed for a destination unknown. But from that moment every trace was lost of the ship and all on board, no news as to her fate having ever been heard, although many a search has been made along the coast by order of the Emperor of Austria and his government. Adventurers and treasure-seekers have been at work, as it is well-known that Johann Orth had on board over a quarter of a million pounds in specie; it is believed that he intended to have bought an estate in Chili with the money and to have settled there, but that the vessel foundered off Cape Horn during a terrific storm which raged on the coast shortly after the ship had left. From time to time since then the most startling rumors have been set afloat about the missing Prince having turned up; one being that he had been one of the leaders of the Chilian rebellion, having divided his treasure among his crew, burned his ship, landed on a lonely coast, etc. His own mother, who died only a few months ago at the Castle Orth, believed her son alive to the very last hour, and expected his return.

The Archduke Wilhelm died from injuries received through a fall from a horse. The Archduke Ladislaus shot himself accidentally while hunting. Was there ever a family on whom misfortunes fell thicker and faster than upon the immediate relatives of the man who was persuaded to establish himself against God's word, as Emperor of Mexico? The wonderful fulfillment of this one prediction alone stamps the Book of Mormon as divine, for the prophecy was uttered in the name of the Lord, and He has brought it to pass most marvelously. —Era.

It is a very crude and mistaken classification which separates men into thinkers on the one hand and practical men of action on the other. No one can be practical in any effective way without much thought, and for want of it many excellent enterprises break down and come to naught.

An old proverb says: "Good counsel breaks no man's head;" on which someone remarks: "But the neglect to take good counsel has not only broken many a man's head, but also many a man's heart."

Where no wood is there the fire goeth out: so where there is no tale-bearer, the strife ceaseth.

3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

OUR ANNUAL REPORT.

On another page we give to our readers the annual statistical report of the Southern States Mission for the year 1899. The totals fully meet our expectations, and all around the report is a gratifying one and amply proves that the little stone cut out of the mountains without hands is rolling forth. The written word distributed is simply astounding, and is bound to be productive of much good.

In some respects the figures for 1899 do not equal those of 1898, but conditions have been different, and we have had a smaller force of Elders. The year 1899 will go down in the history of the Mission as one of the most trying in late years, if not since its organization. A furious storm of hate and prejudice, as usual, started and fanned by counterfeit followers of our Lord, who cannot hear the voice of God calling unless accompanied by their idol, the almighty dollar, swept over the Mission, as indeed it did throughout the whole of the United States. In not a few localities, in the south, mob violence displaced reason, law and order, trampled the constitution in the mire and made mockery of the courts of justice. In Butler county, Kentucky, two Elders were whipped with hickory withes; in Jasper county, Georgia, the lady of the house where two Elders were being entertained had her jaw shot away by one of a band of bigots who came to force the law-abiding and inoffensive guests to leave the country, while in Stewart county, Tennessee, an innocent girl of twelve summers received a bullet fired from ambush at a "Mormon" Elder as he and others were returning from worshiping the Father of all. Rocks, rotten eggs, and outrages of a smaller nature were numerous, and in Kentucky two of our churches were destroyed, one burned and another broken and chopped to pieces, by a mob, because it was covered by insurance from fire. The land was flooded with bitter newspaper articles and literature, not only misleading in character, but untruthful, and some of it almost too indecent to be mentioned by respectable people.

The instigators of this "new crusade" justified themselves by claiming that Utah had broken faith with the nation, falsely proclaiming that polygamy had been re-established, and holding up their hands in holy horror because there were in Utah, enough democrats to elect Hon. B. H. Roberts to congress. Many good, sincere people were fooled by the clamor that was raised, and thought, we doubt not, that they were doing God's service by heaping calumny upon their fellow-citizens, as loyal as they—and honest, innocent men and women, crying "crucify him, crucify him," with the multitude whenever opportunity offered. However, persecution is the heritage of the Saints, and it will always be present until the time comes for Satan to be bound. It is the barometer by which we can tell how sorely his Satanic Majesty is being pressed. The actions of men may hinder truth for a time, but right will triumph and the gospel of peace fill the whole earth.

It is not strange that in a year like the one just passed there should be a temporary falling off in conversions, or rather new members, for many are converted yet have not the courage to immediately face the finger of scorn or the derision of a hostile world, and on the whole, as above stated, we see much over which to rejoice. The words of President Young, "every time you kick Mormonism you kick it up stairs," will be verified in this, as it has been in all other instances in the past.

We say to the humble servants of God, in this Mission, that the purposes of the Almighty are fast being brought to pass in the earth; the leaven that is to leaven the whole lump is working and gathering momentum daily. To the Elders we say: Let not the bright star of hope disappear from your view; put on the shield of faith and gird on the whole armor of God. Never forget your full duty, and remember the Great Captain will be your protector under all conditions if you remain true and steadfast.

While you have done nobly the past year, let us see if in the year 1900 we cannot achieve greater success and prove more valiant in the cause we love and to which our lives should be consecrated.

In reviewing the report it is due to say that we could not get a complete report of the work in Louisiana, as the records of that Conference were destroyed by fire a short time before the end of the year. The Chattanooga report includes the office Elders, who, of course, can hardly be classed with the working force of any particular Conference, and this Conference, like Ohio and North Kentucky, it will be remembered, has been in existence much less than a year. It is also well to note that the number of Elders has been materially lessened part of the year in Louisiana and Mississippi for climatic and other reasons.

"MORMONS AND MORMONISM."

With this issue we begin the publication of "Mormons and Mormonism," a twenty-four page booklet, by the well-known writer and lecturer, Charles Ellis. This late production of Mr. Ellis's able pen is an intelligent and comprehensive treatise on the subject announced, and is discussed under the heads: "Why Maligned—The People—Industry—Education—Morals—Polygamy—The Religion." The Roberts case and the manifesto is reviewed and creditably handled.

Mr. Ellis, though a non-Mormon, is an American in all that the term implies, and believes in fair play. It is well known this is not the first time that this talented man has spoken in favor of giving us a place, of respectful consideration, on God's green earth, and pointed out to the world that "Mormonism" is not what its enemies have represented. Certainly every man should be honest enough with himself and his Creator to be a man and stand for the right, the persecuted, the down-trodden and the oppressed, whether favored or not, but friends in need should at least receive from us expressions of gratitude and appreciation. Mr. Ellis has for years been a strong champion of our rights, and in consequence has come in for a good sized slice of abuse and vituperation hurled at those who dare to say a word favorable to that sect everywhere spoken evil against, which we represent. He deserves consideration at our hands for his good acts in our behalf in years gone by, and this last production excels, we think, anything he has ever written bearing on the subject. Being a non-Mormon, the good it will do cannot be estimated, and numbers of this pamphlet should be in the hands of every Elder in the missionary field. The article is copyrighted, but the author has kindly given us permission to publish a limited number of copies, for use in this mission. Elders can get them by sending here for them.

The Saints in Utah can do much in breaking down the barriers of prejudice by sending some to their missionaries in other missions, and can procure all they want from Charles Ellis, Salt Lake City, Utah, at a small cost. Saints or sinners will find this exposition interesting and well worth perusing, and if they are thoughtful we assure each reader he will find therein food for reflection.

ELDERS AND EMIGRANTS, ATTENTION.

On Feb. 1st the railway companies throughout the United States entered into a general combine, to the effect that no special rates or reductions will be made, better than the regular tariff rates; also all concessions that have formerly been given to agents, in the shape of commissions, etc., have stopped. In consequence of this I beg to say that I am unable to make any better rates than straight tariff, and that all the rates that I have quoted heretofore are null and void.

My advice to the Saints would be to not sell out at present, but wait for a little season until such times when we can benefit you with cheaper rates.

I am sorry that I am compelled to call off the rates that I have quoted you, as I am sure many have been making arrangements to leave for Zion early this spring, but I am unable to govern the circumstances, and it is unavoidable.

Any emigrant wishing further information I will gladly give it, but those desiring to move at present will be compelled to pay full tariff rates.

I will gladly help the Elders with clergy rates as heretofore, so far as possible, but I am afraid that we will even be curtailed in these privileges to some extent. BEN E. RICH.

A True Wife.

She is not a true wife who sustains not her husband in the day of calamity; who is not, when the world's great frown makes the heart chill with anguish, his guardian angel, growing brighter and more beautiful as his misfortunes crowd upon his path. Then is the time for the trial of her gentleness; then is the time for testing whether the sweetness of her temper beams only with a transient light, or like the steady glow of the morning star, shines just as brightly under the clouds. Has she then smiles just as charming? Does she say, "affliction does not touch our purity, and should not quench our love?" Does she try, by happy little inventions, to lift from his sensitive spirit the burden of thought?

There are wives—nay, there are beings, who, when dark hours come, fall to repining and upbraiding—thus adding outside anxiety to the harrowing scenes of domestic strife, as if all the blame in the world could make one hair white or black, or change the decree gone immutably forth. Such would know that our darkness is heaven's light; our trials but steps in the golden ladder, by which, if we rightly ascend, we may at last gain that eternal light, and bathe forever in its fullness and beauty.

"Is that all?" and the gentle face of the wife learned with joy her husband had been on the verge of distraction—all her earthly possessions were gone, and he feared the result of her knowledge, she had been so tenderly cared for all her life. But, says Irving's beautiful story, "a friend advised him not to give sleep to his eyes, nor slumber to his eyelids, until he had unfolded to her all his hopeless case."

And that was her answer with the smile of an angel—"is that all?" I feared by your sadness it was worse. Let these beautiful things be taken—all this splendor, let it go, I care not for it—I only care for my husband's love and confidence. You shall forget in my affection that you were ever in prosperity—only still love me, and I will aid you to bear these little reverses with cheerfulness."

Still love her. A man must reverence, aye, liken her to the very angels, for such a woman is a living revelation of heaven. MRS. DENISON.

NOTE.—In the above report, of the Books distributed, 2,045 were Books of Mormon. The "Miles Rode Column" only represents five months of the year, as that feature was not added until August last.

A good rule—"My father taught me," said a man who had been successful in life, "never to play till my work was finished, and never to spend my money until I had earned it. If I had but an hour's work in a day, I must do that the first thing and in an hour, and after this I was allowed to play; then I could play with much more pleasure than if I had the thought of unfinished work before my mind. I early formed the habit of doing everything in time, and it soon became easy for me to do so. It is to this I owe my prosperity."

Georgia Conference.

The conference of the Georgia Elders was held in Macon, Ga., Jan. 27th and 28th, 1900. A hall in the central part of the city was appropriately decorated for the occasion by Elders James S. Castleton and J. T. Barrett.

As usual, Saturday was devoted to counsel with the Elders and Sunday to the public.

In addition to the Elders of the Conference a number of Saints were present. President Rich arrived Saturday morning and made all the brethren feel that it was good to be at conference.

We were favored with some good singing by a chorus composed of Elders and directed by Elder J. R. Gardener.

At the morning session Saturday some good counsel was given by President W. D. Rencher and Elder S. D. Rogers.

President Rich spoke in the afternoon, and each of the Elders present reported their feelings, circumstances, etc. Questions were answered and other business transacted.

On Sunday three public meetings were held. At the morning session President Rich occupied the time. He contrasted the conditions of the religious world of today with that which existed when the Saints stood upon the Rock of Revelation, and how the Gospel was being preached for a witness for the last time.

At the afternoon and night sessions a number of prominent citizens were present and listened with marked attention to the discourses delivered. The speakers were President Rich and Elders J. T. Barrett, G. M. Porter and J. L. Edelfson. President Rich called attention to Elder Barrett being a native of the south, and said he wanted those present to hear the Gospel from one reared in their own country. At the close of the night meeting a gentleman in the audience asked a few questions, which were satisfactorily answered by President Rencher.

Monday morning the Elders assembled and were assigned their respective fields of labor. Brother G. M. Porter, one of our ablest defenders of the truth, was called to act as President of the Mississippi Conference. Elders J. M. Edlefson and J. T. Barrett were transferred to the Louisiana Conference. Counselor Smith D. Rogers, tried and true, took his departure for Zion, carrying an honorable release.

Much regret was felt at parting, especially with those called to distant fields. All, however, return to their labor feeling encouraged and determined to do their full duty; thankful for so great a privilege as enjoying, for a brief time, each other's society, and hearing the words of counsel fall from the lips of God's inspired servants.

H. P. HANSEN,
Clerk of Conference.

(Deseret News please copy.)

If we are cheerful and contented, all nature smiles with us; the air seems more balmy, the sky clearer, the ground has a brighter green, the trees have a richer foliage, the flowers a more fragrant smell, the birds sing more sweetly, and the sun, moon and stars all appear more beautiful.

In a school, "Ale and Beer Measure" was given out as one of the lessons for the next day. Next morning the first boy was called upon, but said "I don't know it." "How's that?" asked the teacher. "Please, sir," he replied, "neither father nor I think its any use, for we neither mean to buy, sell or drink the stuff."

Mormons and Mormonism
By a Non-Mormon.

COPYRIGHTED.

[Printed by Permission of the Author, Chas. Ellis, Salt Lake City, Utah.]

No cause has so often led to strife as the bigotry of religious devotees. In no name has hate so largely gathered harvest of death as in that of God. No prophet ever proclaimed a new word of the Infinite who was not met with abuse. Many of the noblest men who have stood God-tongued on earth have received not only villification, but martyrdom. Not one of them has escaped the cry of "infidel, atheist, impostor." Even Jesus was crucified as a malefactor. His simple religion of love for God and to man was lost in a cobra-filled jungle of theology. For more than 1800 years Christianity has not been the religion of Christ. The Christianity that boasts of having civilized the world is a mass of dogmatic bran that makes poor bread of life—intellectually a bran-mash for hide-bound bigots who send all but a "predestined and foreordained" baker's dozen to eternal torment because they will not take the medicine. It has been itself partially civilized by the natural development of the human mind, but is still much like that "whited sepulchre," fair to see, but full of lying dogmas, hypocrisy and sham.

Into this cloaca of pretence, the Mormons say God sent Joseph Smith to destroy its rot with the quicklime of a new revelation from heaven of priesthood, prophecy and providence. The Lord God Omnipotent, so the story runs, came to this youth and informed him that the Gospel of Jesus had been lost to the world through the wickedness of men; that the religions of the present were a sham, that the churches were all wrong, and that the true Gospel would be restored for the salvation of mankind through him.

It is not surprising that Mormonism met with obloquy from its birth. It would have been marvelous had not that obloquy become violence when the "new dispensation" showed a degree of success that roused the fears of the evangelical churches, out of which converts to the new sect were taken. The Mormon missionaries of those early years believed the "fullness of time" had come, and that "the Lord" was speedily to appear, sweep false Christianity from the earth and establish His own kingdom. They believed it their duty to cry aloud, to warn the nations. The boldness of the proclamation that all churches were without recognition in the sight of God, and the only true Gospel was this "new dispensation," was enough to arouse an opposition that has never wholly ceased and is now raging more fiercely than ever. The rapid growth of the new old faith embittered the sects and carried them to the shedding of innocent blood, for many of the early Mormons suffered martyrdom for their faith. Yet the blood of martyrs is still the seed of the church.

It is immaterial here whether Mormonism was born of God or of man. I am not discussing its origin. No matter what its source, it was sure to meet opposition. Had it come with such pomp that the world could have beheld angelic heralds, it would have been denounced as vile. It has been so with the founders of all religions. The prophets are always stoned. The Buddha was accused of consorting with courtesans. Jesus' enemies said harlots were His chosen companions. Mahomet was the called slave of an ambitious mistress. Garrison and Phillips were denounced as infidels and atheists. Joseph Smith was branded a fraud and lecher.

But as time rolls away from the days when an agitator lived, hatred of him is forgotten and he is remembered in the results of his agitation. The Buddha preceded Jesus many centuries and has a following today of 400,000,000. Jesus is buried beneath a mountain of dogma, but 300,000,000 are seeking eternal life in His name. Mahomet came 700 years later and his people number 170,000,000. Only sixty-nine years ago came Joseph Smith, and his following is already half a million. Give Mormonism 1200 years, as Mohammedanism has had, or 1900 years, as Christianity has had, and what was said of its founder will be forgotten, but his following may then compare satisfactorily with what the older faiths accomplished.

Had Joseph Smith never declared himself a polygamist he would have been killed. The sects were too fanatical in the wild west to permit so active a rival to exist. Had the Mormons remained east of the Missouri Brigham Young would have been killed and the church would have been destroyed by wholesale massacre. It was only their isolation among the mountains that saved Morminism and the Mormons from annihilation. Even that would not have saved them had they not increased so rapidly by conversions and immigration that before their enemies realized their growth they had become too strong to be removed. They have survived the hate that carried off their leader at Nauvoo. They have proved themselves sublime stayers. They have nobly earned the right to the home they have made in "the great American desert," and they are entitled to full liberty of conscience to practice their religion, as well as to the same protection the nation gives to all other churches.

If people must follow some leader in the name of God it makes little difference what his name, when or whence he came, as far as the national government is concerned. As long as his followers are honest, industrious, virtuous and progressive they will advance from existing to better conditions, whether they follow Moses, Jesus, Mahomet, Calvin or Joseph, and our government, guaranteeing rights of conscience to all, cannot dictate what their religion shall be. No matter what Joseph Smith may have been, the people of the United States should not allow themselves to be governed by what was said against him in their judgment of the Mormon and Mormonism as they are now.

BY THEIR FRUITS.

If history is reliable many of the popes were steeped in crime, yet we do not condemn the Catholic church of today by that history. Protestantism has done many cruel things in red-handed fanatical rage, but we do not now hold it responsible for crimes of its past. The daily press frequently tells of crimes committed by ministers of the Gospel, but we do not condemn the class for the misdeeds of some of its members. Neither should we condemn the Mormons and Mormonism of today for what their enemies said of them forty, fifty or sixty years ago. Put Joseph Smith down, then, as one of the men who have started new systems of religion, and judge him now by the results of his system, as we judge all others.

Many of the Jews are grand people, notwithstanding some of their leaders ages ago were bad. There are many excellent men and women in the churches, notwithstanding the fact that Christianity has drenched the earth in blood. Mohammedanism has done a great work among its people, notwithstanding all Christiandom looks upon its founder as an impostor. Tried thus, what can be said of the Mormons and Mormonism?

INTO THE DESERT.

It would be manifestly unfair to judge either Mormons or Mormonism by that stormy career which preceded the hegira to Utah. Mormonism had no opportunity to show its merits in a country where its enemies gave it little time to act save in self-defense. It was aggressive in its denunciation of existing churches as ungodly frauds and they attacked it with violence, kept it acting on the defensive, forced it from place to place, and finally drove it out of the United States. Having at last found a spot a thousand miles from a "Christian" and subject only to the possible encroachments of Indian tribes, less barbarous than eastern Christians had been towards them, the Mormons and Mormonism were, for the first time in their history, in a condition to show what the people and their religion were.

When Brigham Young and his band of searchers for the new holy land entered the valley of the Great Salt Lake there was no white man there to give them welcome, and therefore no alleged Christian present to disturb their hope. They had traveled far and fared hard. As they emerged from a rugged canyon the magnificent valley before them was the most inviting spot they had seen, and the leader chose it at once as their future home. Along the mountain streams, that ran gurgling through the valley to lose themselves in the saltest sea upon the earth, there was pasturage for the cattle, but for the men, exiles from so-called Christian civilization, there was nothing save an opportunity to gird their loins, forget their hunger and compel the stubborn glebe to yield them food.

LIKE THE PILGRIM FATHERS.

When the Pilgrims landed in Plymouth Bay they met such a welcome of dreary desolation as the Mormons received in the Salt Lake valley. As the Pilgrims crossed the Atlantic to find a land where they could practice their religion, so had the Mormons crossed the plains of the continent. But they must live. In all this wide mountain land no furrow had been turned. It was mid-summer and the wanderers had little to carry them through the approaching winter. They must close with the opportunity and stake all on the hazard. They put in crops and the seed baked in the hot earth or the frost came before anything could mature. They made huts to shelter themselves against the winter, built a wall to guard against Indian attacks (or was it the Christians they had fled from at Nauvoo) and pulled through until spring came, and then they went out upon the foothills and dug the roots of the sego lily for food. They planted and watered and saw their seed spring and saw crickets come down upon the green spots, like Missouri and Illinois Christians, and devour their hope. They fought crickets, made irrigating ditches, cleared off sage, increased their fields, smothered grasshoppers, praised the Lord and grew until, in five years, the valley had become a hive of busy human bees, not a drone among them all, and hundreds of baby bees crawling about the open doors of humble homes in which patient, plodding, hopeful, prayerful women were the grandest heroes of all. But the people crowded in so rapidly that for a dozen years or more all were harrassed by hard want. Luxuries there were none. It was one long, ceaseless struggle to live. Women who came then as little girls have pictured to me the cheerless years of their young lives here when all were poor.

THEIR STAFF AND COMFORTS.

What sustained those people in that long ordeal? Faith, the strongest power in all the world. Their religion was an enthusiasm. To them "God" was a living presence. He had "called" them. He had led them forth from persecution. He would remain their friend and they must succeed. Without that faith they would never have come—having it they could not fail. But to my mind a very important adjunct was the pluck that has made the white race superior to obstacles and the master spirits of the world. When we consider what the Mormons underwent to achieve success here their constancy and heroism deserve sublimest commendation, and they who will not concede this because the Mormons will not send them to congress or subscribe their creeds are not true Americans—have never known the meaning and the glory of our "religious freedom."

We honor the Pilgrims for their heroism in crossing the ocean and founding a home in the forests of the new world. Why? Not because of their religion. They were bigots and sometimes murderers. They tortured, killed, or banished men and women who would not accept their theology. We may despise their religion, but we must honor their courage and be thankful for their success. Without them we never would have had our government, the light of the world and the hope of mankind. But their base of supplies in Europe was nearer to them, more accessible, than were the stores from which the early Mormons could draw. The Pilgrims had means; the Mormons had none. When driven from Nauvoo many of them were so destitute that agents were sent through the east soliciting aid to save the people from starvation, and one of these agents was Lorenzo Snow, now President of the Mormon Church. Hundreds of the famished refugees died, in 1846, along the malaria-poisoned bottoms of the Missouri river.

From robbery, murder and exile in Missouri and Illinois to success and independence in Utah, the history of the Mormons is a record of privation, hardship and endurance unequalled since the days of the Moors in Spain, the Huguenots in France and the Protestants in Holland, when murder sought to exterminate all heresy in the name of the Catholic church for the glory of God. It was the same spirit in the Protestant heart that sought the destruction of Mormonism. But no religion can be wholly bad, or lacking in points of great merit that could produce the magnificent results that have sprung from the Mormon occupation of Utah.

IN THIRTY-TWO YEARS.

Briefly, now, let us see what the Mormons did in Utah through the years when they were nearly the entire population and while the industries and the progress were almost wholly their own.

In 1880, thirty-two years after the arrival of the Mormons in Utah, they had 9,452 farms, the average size being twenty-seven acres. The population of the territory was then 143,963, of which 115,000 were Mormons, 99 per cent. of whom were living in homes of their own. To bring this land into productive farms there had to be done an inconceivable amount of work that was not directly productive. The land was covered with sagebrush and other wild shrubs and grasses that made it as hard to clear as swamp land in the east. In addition to clearing the land it had to be lined with ditches to carry water to the growing crops. On those 9,452 farms there were several thousand miles of ditching. All of this work was dead capital. It was the "plant" of the farmers and was put in solely by the toil of a people who never knew when it was "sundown." But it was done and the farms were yielding great crops of small grain, corn, potatoes—all the vegetables of garden and field, and the fruits—apples, pears, plums, apricots, peaches, grapes, berries—everything that the climate would sustain. Live stock had risen from zero to millions in the shade of the mountain. There were herds of sheep, cattle and horses, and the great American lard producer was not wanting. Home manufactories were prosperous at several points. Stores were in evidence everywhere. "Zion's Co-operative Mercantile Institution" was the center of a magnificent trade at Salt Lake, extending throughout the territory. Temples had been built or were under construction at four points in the territory. Meeting houses had been erected in every direction. Academies were being started in Salt Lake, Logan and Provo. The people were united and persistent in their determination to succeed, and, under the guiding will of Brigham Young, this most remarkable effort at colonization had been quietly carried forward in spite of the continual harrassment of the people by government officials, goaded by the anti-Mormon ministers of the east. In thirty-two years the exiled Mormons had become too strong to be despoiled again, and all that time this alleged destroyer of the American home, polygamy, was being practiced, and thousands of the most intelligent, honest, virtuous and industrious men and women of the state today were the offspring of such marriage relations. Why do not the Mormon haters of today attempt to destroy the force of this fact? Because they know that they would fail.

EDUCATION.

A common charge against the Mormons for years, and revived now, was that they were ignorant, illiterate and had no use for schools save to teach their theological dogmas. But in 1870, only twenty-three years after the first Mormon immigration, the percentage of school attendance in Utah was higher than in Pennsylvania, New York and Massachusetts. In 1881 the school population of Utah, from 6 to 18 years of age, was 43,353, and the average daily attendance was 44 per cent. There were then 395 schools in Utah. In 1888 the commissioner of schools, a government official, reports 344 school districts and 460 public schools in Utah. The school population was 54,943, of which 47,371 were Mormons. The number of scholars enrolled was 32,988, of which 30,721 were Mormons. The value of district school property was $542,755, and the amount paid for teachers in the public schools for the year ending June 30, 1888, was $293,085. Yet the anti-Mormon still screeches his old cry that those were Mormon schools.

Let us see. The school commissioner referred to was not only a United States official, but he was also a non-Mormon. Yet he reported that the 460 public schools of Utah were "non-sectarian." Then he enumerated eighty-nine denominational schools, of which only four were Mormon. The text books used in the schools, a list of which was given, sets at rest the charge that Mormons were opposed to education; and the average of the education of those who were trained in them is proof that they were not theological schools. According to the United States census for 1880 the percentage of persons in Utah of 10 years and upward who could not read was five. In Rhode Island at the same time it was seven, and in the United States at large thirteen. The average illiteracy in Mormon Utah, thirty-two years after its settlement by people absolutely without means and obliged to toil early and late to find a mere subsistence, was less than in twenty states and territories of the union.

THE DARK AGES.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

THE NINTH CENTURY opened with the world in a deplorable state of turmoil, confusion and ignorance. The most learned class of people were the Mahometans, who virtually preserved what degree of intelligence the world was in possession of, until the establishing of the printing press. Their religion spread through Asia, Africa and Spain in an alarming manner; they established schools of learning and were far in advance of the Christian, and can justly be praised for preserving and restoring learning in Europe.

The Greek Christians were advancing and making much progress through Russia, while the Romans confined their labors to the west of Europe, forcing all who came under their dominion to adopt their religion.

Ireland produced a number of eminent men in this century—men who were truly pious—and England turned out the good and learned Alfred the Great, who did much in placing England in the van of nations and advancing it to the front in letters.

Outside of a few illustrious men as above, Christianity had sank very low and became very corrupt. Their Bishops had become voluptuous and effeminate, passing their time away in the courts of Kings, being indolent, idle and luxurious. Our authority says that the inferior clergy was sunk in gross licentiousness, and minded nothing, but their own sensual gratifications; consequently they infected their flock, who naturally looked up to them for spiritual guidance, with the most heineous vices; and as before stated ignorance reigned, as but few could read or write at this period. The reason of this state of illiteracy lay in the fact that Europe was continually under arms and at war with the Mahometan. This, in connection with the ravages and insurrections of the barbarians from the north, kept them busy with the sword; and erudition and the sword ever did and ever will conflict and will never go hand in hand.

The Normans ravaged the country, pillaging, destroying and devastating the land, finally settling in France under King Godofred, 850 A. D. I mention this fact, because they played such an important part in the overthrow of nations in after years.

It was in this century that the woman, Johanna, sat in regal splendor, occupying the Papal chair, under the name of Joan. It is stated that in disguise, she attained to this office, being first a monk, fascinated, it is said, by the love of a monk, she sought his company in a monastry and advanced in the order, became a cardinal and finally occupiedthe highest position obtainable—Pontiff of Rome. It is said she held this position two years, between the reigns of Popes Leo, the IV., and Benedict, the III. This was universally accepted as a fact from this period until Luther's time in the sixteenth century. Then seeing that the acknowledgement of this woman would break the pretended great chain in the See of Rome, the evidence was denounced as false and rejected as a fable. The question as to the veracity of this is still dubious.

At this period the Roman Pontiff was anxious to extend his power and dominion, desiring complete control of both the ecclesiastical and political world. In order to further his ambition, the Pope Nicolas of Rome, excommunicated Photius of Constantinople, and vice versa; excommunications and anathemas were the order and were issued extensively. Thus the Roman and Greek church became divided and has remained in this state ever since.

Monastic orders were held in such honor, that kings and princes in numerous instances, threw off their royalty and adopted the garb of monks. These monks were unversally beloved and esteemed for their austerities, and in many instances ignorant and fanatical monks and abbots were chosen from the cloister and placed in high positions, governing principalities, being found at the head of nations in regal splendor, and acting in a manner entirely foreign to the vows they had made.

The empire of superstition and error had surely arisen on the ruins of virtue, piety and reason during this century. Relic worship also assumed an important innovation at this time, and was carried on to an alarming extent; becoming a fad and craze among the poor monks, who hunted through Palestine for all kind of relics and bones; and even the dirt that had been walked upon by a supposed saint, was worshipped. Clothing, carcasses, arms and legs brought big prices, as these things were supposed to contain great healing virtues and the owners to have special immunity and freedom from disease and sickness. Therefore these relics of departed saints, were sought for with great avidity, and the church was enriched thereby.

The doctrine of transubstantiation, which is the actual presence of the body and blood of Jesus in the Eucharist, was a principle of much discussion at this time. It was adopted as a dogma of the church, and stands today as a tenet of the Roman Catholic faith. However, the bread and wine, as originally designed by our Savior, to be used in the Sacrement, is not now partaken of in that great church, but simply the bread, or a manufactured substance that takes the place of the bread, and the wine is partaken of only by the priest. It is held up in the Mass before the gaze of an adoring populace, who believe that they actually partake of the flesh and blood of Jesus. Thus this rite of Sacrament, as instituted by our Savior, was changed from its simplicity of administration, as partaken by the twelve in the upper chamber.

Various other dogmas, such as image worship, predestination, the immaculate conception of Jesus, the trinity of the godhead, and many more subjects, were treated erroneously in the many discussions of an uninspired priesthood. At this time it would be difficult to find any resemblance to the church as instituted by Jesus the Nazarine.

Christianity in the ninth century was exceedingly corrupt, its members were groveling in darkness and sin, and the light of inspiration, connected with the sure word of prophecy, was entirely ignored, and unknown to the inhabitants of the earth during this age. Living Prophets and Apostles did not exist and were not believed necessary in the church. Nothing but a dead form was left, as the church was entirely divested of the powers and gifts characteristic of the church established by our Master in Galilee. Thus the world continued to sink from one folly to another, until the very semblance of Christ's institution had vanished, leaving the world in a woeful condition.

MARRIED

Alston-Darnell.

"At the home of the bride, Thursday evening of last week at 9 o'clock, occurred the marriage of Miss Josephine Darnell and Mr. James L. Alston, Rev. E. M. Bell officiating. The bride has spent her life in Manchester, while the groom will be remembered as having been sent here by the Mormon element of Utah to do missionary work, which task he recently resigned. Mr. Alston states that he is a graduate of medicine of the Utah Agricultural College at Logan, and upon receipt of a $1,500 wedding present from his father will go to Columbus, O., to take up the further practice of medicine and future residence. Mr. Alston also states that he has had three months' service in St. Mark's Hospital in Salt Lake City and was a sergeant in Battery B of the Utah Light Artillery during the Philippine campaign."

The above is a clipping sent us from a paper published in Ohio. Just how much is believed by the people there regarding him having graduated in medicine from an agricultural college depends entirely upon the intelligence of the people. So far as the young man's war record is concerned, the statement is really laughable. The young man was 18 years old last October, reached Chattanooga about three months ago, labored as a missionary a little over two months, then married a lady in Ohio some ten or twelve years his senior, surrendered his missionary license and has gone into business for himself. We trust he will try to be a good boy and not cause much trouble to the kind lady who has taken him to raise.

A farmer who should sit still and hope for a rich harvest when he had neither prepared the ground nor sown the seed would justly excite our ridicule: yet we do exactly the same thing when we hope that the months or years may yield to us fruits which we have never planted, and benefits which we have never earned.

Industry is the royal road to fortune and eminence.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR

The subject of this brief sketch, President John Taylor, was the third President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He was born at Milnthorpe, Westmoreland county, England, Nov. 1st, 1808. His parents, James and Agnes Taylor, were members of the Church of England. Naturally enough they taught their children adherence to the principles of that faith. Their son John early manifested a strong reverence for God and sacred truths. He was very prayerful, and thoroughly conscientious in his course. At the early age of 15 he exhibited an independence of character as well as such pronounced convictions of his own mind that he left the Church of England and joined the Methodists. Soon after becoming identified with the latter sect he was appointed a local preacher and labored diligently as such until he emigrated to America in 1828. While occupied as a Methodist preacher, and associated with a much older minister of the same persuasion, he said to his companion one day: "I feel impressed that I am going to America to preach the Gospel." And with this inspiration he also expressed the conviction that while they were doing and teaching about the best they knew, there was something lacking, and they did not possess the Gospel in its fullness, as taught by the Savior and His ancient Apostles.

Upon his arrival in America he made a brief sojourn in New York, Brooklyn and Albany, and shortly afterwards joined his parents in Toronto, Canada, who had preceded him two years previously to that place. While residing in Toronto he married Miss Leonora Cannon, of the Isle of Man, who is an aunt to President George Q. Cannon, who has for many years been a member of the First Presidency of the Church. His mind constantly leading into researches for divine truth, and being convinced that the churches extant were far from the one established by the Messiah, he associated himself with a number of well informed, independent thinking gentlemen for the purpose of studying the Holy Scriptures. Some of his associates were members of the same church as himself and laboring under similar convictions. They consequently felt free and untrammeled in their researches to follow their own impressions of the Scriptures, independent of any constructions which were placed upon them by orthodox "Christian" teachers and commentators. Through their careful and prayerful investigation they became convinced of and were much impressed with the clearness with which certain great truths (almost unnoticed by the preachers of his time) were set forth in the Bible, such as the ministration of angels in the last days, the restoring of the everlasting Gospel in all its ancient purity and power, the necessity of immediate and continuous revelation, the necessity of Apostles and Prophets, the inspiration and gifts of the Holy Ghost, the gathering of Israel, the coming and reign of Jesus upon the earth, and other glorious truths to be revealed in the last days. They concluded that the churches of Christendom were not founded upon the Rock of Divine Authority. If the Bible was true, they were false. Under such pronounced convictions they fasted and prayed much that if the Savior had a church upon the earth He would send a messenger unto them. In his eagerness to possess more truth and come nearer to its perfect fullness he investigated and received Irvingism, but shortly afterwards Elder Parley P. Pratt appeared upon the scene as a representative of the restored Gospel through the Prophet Joseph Smith. Brother Taylor, having heard the false rumors current about Joseph Smith and the "Mormons," received Elder Pratt very cautiously and asked him many questions by which he could compare the teachings of Elder Pratt with the Scriptures. They also invited the latter to address them in public, and after a thorough examination of his teachings John Taylor and a number of his associates were baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Brother Taylor was ordained an Elder by Elder Pratt, and a little later set apart by Elders Parley P. Pratt and Orson Hyde as presiding Elder in upper Canada. In the baptism of these people, which included the noble man of whom we write, was fulfilled a remarkable prophecy uttered in Kirtland, O., by Elder Heber C. Kimball upon the head of Parley P. Pratt, which, with other items contained in the prediction, was the statement that Brother Pratt should find in Canada a people prepared to receive the Gospel. This was literally verified. Elder Taylor was diligent and efficient in preaching the Gospel in Canada. He was a wood turner by trade, and plied his avocation to secure a livelihood for himself and family. In 1837 the Prophet Joseph, with other brethren, visited Toronto and under the Prophet's hands Elder Taylor was ordained a High Priest. He made several visits to Kirtland before removing with the Saints to the west, and was usually the guest of the Prophet Joseph Smith. During the great Apostacy of 1837, when many leading men turned away and became so embittered against the Prophet that the lives of men who defended him were endangered, Elder John Taylor stood up boldly in the Kirtland Temple in the midst of foes, and with that eloquent power which came from God, and which ever characterized Elder Taylor's speech, and declared that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the living God and had not fallen, as alleged by apostates. He was equally diligent in private conversation, in maintaining the integrity of the Prophet Joseph and spreading the Gospel among the people. From Canada he removed to Kirtland by request of the Prophet. From Kirtland he removed to Missouri, joining the body of the church in Far West in 1838. In his migration he preached the Gospel on the way and organized a branch of the church near Indianapolis, Ind. Before reaching Far West, himself and little company of twenty-four people encountered a mob, led by two ministers, Abbott Hancock, a Baptist, and Sashiel Woods, a Presbyterian. July 8th, 1838, the Lord, by revelation, called Elder Taylor to the Apostleship to fill the vacancy occasioned by the fall of John F. Boynton. At a conference in Far West, Oct. 5th, 1838, he was sustained by the vote of the Saints, and ordained an Apostle Dec. 19, the same year, by Apostles Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball, having been the same day sustained by vote of the High Council. Elder Taylor entered immediately into the duties of his new calling, and as in all previous callings soon proved himself truly an Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ. While a resident of Missouri he shared in all the persecutions heaped upon the Saints. He was so bold and powerful in his defense of their rights, and so terrible in his denunciations of the wicked that he was designated "The Champion of Right," and this title was ever after accorded him by the Latter-day Saints. On one occasion he was selected, with a small body of the Saints, to go and protect Adam-Ondi-Ahman. His influence to buoy up and encourage the oppressed was remarkable. The enemy at Adam-Ondi-Ahman, notwithstanding their superior numbers, retreated before this little band of faithful patriots, of whom John Taylor was a leading member. While Joseph and Hyrum Smith were imprisoned in Missouri Elder Taylor paid them several visits. He was selected by the Saints of Caldwell county one of a committee to draft a memorial to the legislature of Missouri, setting forth the persecutions, and asking that body for a redress of the wrongs imposed upon them. Himself and Bishop Partridge were also appointed to write a petition to the general government. Elder Taylor was among the number who, after the expulsion of the Saints from Missouri, returned to Far West to fulfill a revelation given July 8th, 1838, that the Twelve were to take their departure for their mission to Europe on April 26th, 1839, from the Temple grounds in Far West. The enemy having learned of this revelation, swore that it should not be verified. They were baffled, however. The brethren arrived upon the spot soon after midnight, held a conference, excommunicated a number of persons, and ordained Wilford Woodruff and George A. Smith to the Apostleship. On the 8th of August Elder Taylor left Nauvoo for England. He was sick for eleven weeks on his way. He left his family in the old military barracks at Montrose, Iowa, in very poor circumstances. Most of the Twelve and many of the Saints were sick, having just passed through the persecutions and hardships attending their residence in and exodus from Missouri. Elder Taylor was a man of great faith in God and believed thoroughly in preaching the Gospel "without purse or script." When traveling to a certain destination, if he had but a pittance he would purchase with that, transportation in the best conveyances attainable, thus placing himself among the best educated people in his travels. When his means were exhausted, with an inexhaustible store of faith, he would stop and preach the Gospel. The Lord would raise up friends who would give him money, with which he would proceed on his journey. In doing this he would never ask a human being for help. He asked the Lord, and his prayers never went unanswered. His course was pre-eminently the true pattern which should be followed by the servants of the Lord in missionary work. When they were about to sail from New York to Liverpool, himself and two other brethren were almost destitute of means, not having sufficient to pay one passage, much less three. Notwithstanding their predicament, a very short time before the vessel was to sail Elder Taylor told one of his companions to go and engage passage for all three to Liverpool. His fellow-laborers were nonplussed and asked where on earth could they get means in so short a time. Elder Taylor answered that there was plenty of means in the world and the Lord would send them enough before the vessel sailed to pay their way. His words were most remarkably fulfilled. He asked no person for money, and yet immediately after he made the prediction one after another came to them and proffered assistance, until enough was provided to meet their expenses to Liverpool. Another instance, which but illustrates the constant manifestations of Providence which characterized his entire life, occurred in the Isle of Man. He had secured the printing of some tracts, which he wrote in reply to the falsehoods circulated by ministers and others regarding the character and doctrines taught by the Prophet Joseph Smith. When the tracts were ready the printer would not deliver them until every penny was paid which was due him. Elder Taylor did not have sufficient to meet the demand, and being very anxious to obtain the tracts went immediately into a private room, and, kneeling down, told the Lord in plain simplicity exactly how much he needed to pay for the matter he had published in defense of his cause.

In a few minutes after his prayer was offered a young man came to the door, and upon being invited to enter handed Elder Taylor an envelope and walked out. The young man was unknown to him. The envelope contained some money and a little note which read: "The laborer is worthy of his hire," and no signature was placed thereon. In a few minutes later a poor woman engaged as a fish vender came to the house and offered a little money to assist him in his ministerial labors. He told her there was plenty of money in the world and he did not wish to take her's. She insisted that the Lord would bless her the more and she would be the happier if he would accept it, whereupon he received the offering, and to his surprise the poor woman's mite, added to what the young man had given him, made exactly the amount sufficient to pay the printer the balance due him

The promise of the Savior, "Ask and ye shall receive," was not a mere saying, but a living reality with President John Taylor. To him the promise meant exactly what it said. He arrived in Liverpool Jan. 11th, 1840, and immediately commenced his missionary work, preaching, baptizing, organizing branches, and with his brethren regulating the church throughout the British Isles. He introduced the Gospel into Ireland and the Isle of Man, extending his labors into Scotland. He published several tracts, setting forth principles of the Gospel and refuting falsehoods. He corrected the proof sheets of the Book of Mormon, and with President Young and Elder Parley P. Pratt prepared and published the first edition of the Latter-day Saints' Hymn Book. After a very active and successful mission he returned to America, arriving in Nauvoo July 1st, 1841. Upon his arrival home he found his wife very near to death, being seriously ill. He called to his aid about twenty Elders. They administered and prayed for her and she was restored to health. In October, 1841, John Taylor and Elias Higbee were appointed a committee to petition Congress for a redress of the wrongs heaped upon the Saints in Missouri. He was also appointed by the Prophet to present the petition. Elder Taylor edited the last three volumes of the Times and Seasons, by appointment of the Prophet. He also edited and published the Nauvoo Neighbor. As well as attending to his high calling in the Apostleship, he was a city councilman, one of the Regents of the University, and Judge Advocate of the Nauvoo Legion, all of which he filled with ability and distinction. Elder Taylor was very firmly attached to the Prophet Joseph Smith. He often attended him in scenes of persecution and trial. When Joseph and Hyrum were taken to Carthage and lodged in jail on false charges, and promised by the Governor of the state protection from mob violence, and a fair trial, Elders John Taylor and Willard Richards accompanied them as friends, and were in the prison when the awful tragedy took place, which resulted in the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Just before the assault made upon the prisoners, Elder Taylor sang the hymn, "A poor wayfaring man of grief." By request of Hyrum Smith he sang it the second time, although he expressed himself as not feeling in a very favorable mood to sing. Between 4 and 5 p.m. June 27th, 1844, an armed mob rushed up the stairs of Carthage jail leading to the apartment where the brethren were confined. They shot through the door, and a ball pierced the face of the Patriarch Hyrum Smith. It entered his head near the nose. He fell upon the floor, calmly exclaiming, "I am a dead man." While the mob were forcing the door open and pushing their guns through the opening Elder Richards held the door the best he could, while Elder Taylor parried their guns off with his walking cane.

Of a sudden the Prophet Joseph sprang to the window and leaped out. His motive in doing this could not have been to save his life, for he sprang into the open fire of his enemies. It must have been, as believed by Elders Taylor and Richards, to save the lives of the two last named brethren, by calling the attention of the mob from the inside to the outside of the building. His action had the desired effect, for instantly the mob rushed from the stairway of the jail to the ground below, and concentrated their murderous fury upon the Prophet, as he fell a martyr by the curb of the old well by the side of Carthage jail. Elder Taylor ran to the window and was shot in and near the thigh with four balls. He was about to fall out from the window when a bullet struck the watch in his vest pocket and forced him back. He fell upon the floor, not knowing at first what had forced him back, and thus providentially saved his life. Elder Richards, who escaped unhurt, dragged his body to a small room and covered him with an old bed. The mob soon dispersed in confusion, and as soon as convenient thereafter the wounded body of Elder Taylor was removed to Nauvoo, where he recovered, but carried one or more bullets to his grave forty-three years later. He was a man of wonderful vitality and nerve, bearing all physical pains, as he did trials and tribulations of another kind with fortitude unexcelled. Upon his restoration to health he resumed the performance of every duty, and was one with President Young and his brethren of the Twelve Apostles in presiding over the church. He helped the Saints in their troubles by every means in his power, assisted in the completion of the Nauvoo Temple, and suffered the trials of another great exodus when the Saints were driven from their homes in Nauvoo. He journeyed with the first company of the brethren to winter quarters, assisted in organizing the Mormon Battalion, and was from this point called with Elders O. Hyde and P. P. Pratt on a mission to Great Britain. He responded cheerfully, again leaving his family in the wilderness in tents and wagons. He arrived in England Oct. 3d, 1846, and performed an excellent work, in company with his associates regulating the affairs of the mission. He returned in the following spring and had charge of the large company of the Saints which entered Salt Lake Valley in the fall of 1847. In pioneer, exodus life, across the weary plains afoot and with teams, under trying ordeals, as in all other experiences, John Taylor was master of the situation. He cheered the Saints, by faith promoting anecdotes of past experience and history, with prophetic inspiration, pointed them to a future of long respite from mob violence. He could compose and sing hymns and pleasant songs with high moral sentiment embodied in them. One of the favorite songs he used to sing expresses the godlike love and charity of the man who had suffered even the shedding of his blood to vindicate correct principle. It was "Nay speak no ill, but rather speak of all the best you can." There was nothing in his nature and sentiments of a pettish or grovelling character. He spurned every sentiment that was low or dishonorable in thought, word or deed. His language and manner of address was always chaste and dignified to the very extreme. He spent two years in Salt Lake Valley, was active in founding and building the city of Salt Lake. He was ingenious in mechanism, and withal truly a philosopher under all circumstances. He built one of, if not the first saw mill in Utah, and worked in it himself. March 12th, 1849, he was chosen one of the Associate Judges of the provisional State of Deseret. In October, 1849, he was called on a mission to France, which he filled with marked ability and success. Upon his arrival in Boulogne, he was challenged to a discussion with several clergymen, the proceedings of which were published in pamphlet form in Liverpool and subsequently in Orson Pratt's works. His opponents found themselves utterly powerless to meet him upon Scriptural or reasonable grounds, and speedily resorted to subterfuges, lying and slanderous reports, all of which were refuted in a masterly manner by Elder John Taylor. During his mission the Book of Mormon was translated into French and German under his direction, the latter being published in Hamburg, where he introduced the Gospel. He also edited and published in France a monthly paper called L'Etoile Du Deseret, and in Germany a periodical entitled Zion's Power. During his labors several branches of the church were organized in France. He also wrote while upon this mission, and published it after his return, the sublime treatise entitled "The Government of God." He returned to Salt Lake Valley Aug. 20th, 1852. He labored with his hands, and traveled much, preaching the Gospel among the Saints. In 1854 he was elected a member of the Territorial Legislative Council, but subsequently resigned this position to fill a mission in New York, and to preside over the church in the Eastern States. At that particular time heavy attacks were being made upon the Latter-day Saints through the press. Elder Taylor published a paper called "The Mormon" in New York City, establishing his headquarters near the office of the noted writer and editor, James Gordon Bennett, to whose attacks Elder Taylor replied in such a vigorous manner as to surprise the anti-Mormon element in that city. His arguments were unanswerable, and as usual the opponents of the truth resorted to falsehood and buffoonery. He continued "The Mormon" until 1857, when he was called home on account of the threatened war against the Saints under the administration of President Buchanan. During the times and circumstances leading to the action of the government in sending an army to Utah, Elder Taylor was active and fearless in defending the rights of the Saints and denouncing the preachers and politicians who who were industriously circulating falsehoods against the Saints. His replies to Vice-President Schuyler Colfax's ungentlemanly and unwarranted attacks upon the Saints exhibit the fearless character of the man, as well as the clearness of his mind in penetrating the right and wrong side of every proposition under consideration. He was very active in his efforts to secure the admission of the State of Deseret into the Union. It was upon his return from the publication of "The Mormon" that President Young designated Elder Taylor as the best editor of a paper among the Latter-day Saints.

From this time on, for many years, his time was occupied in traveling, preaching, organizing and regulating the church in the various settlements of the Saints. He was many times a member of the Utah Legislature, and Speaker of the House. As a legislator he showed marked ability. He also served as Probate Judge of Utah county. He was present at the dedication of the St. George Temple, the first built in Utah. He took part with President Young in the organization of the Stakes of Zion. At the death of President Young in 1877, Elder Taylor was President of the Twelve Apostles, and in October, 1880, was sustained as President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and Prophet, Seer and Revelator to the Church in all the world. Apostles Geo. Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith were chosen as his counsellors. During the

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

In the Conference report of Jan. 20th the East Tennessee Conference report was credited to Georgia, while the Georgia was credited to East Tennessee.

Elders in all Conferences should be more prompt in aiding their Conference Presidents with stamp money for the forwarding of papers. Many small amounts make a large sum, and it becomes burdensome to those who look after your mail if you are not prompt in doing your part.

Let us take up the chisel of Faith and mallet of Good Works, and pound, pound away upon the crude rock of worldly wickedness, chipping away all iniquity, and when we have polished the stone with Gospel truth, then with the finer tool of the Holy Spirit let us carve these words, "Seek intelligence, which is God's glory."

TOO MANY PREACHERS.

The following was clipped from one of our exchanges. It is an editorial in answer to the question, "Are there too many preachers?" which was discussed affirmatively by the "Interior." The exchange to which we refer took issue with the "Interior," its argument, in part, being as follows:

Back in the seventeenth century, the question might have been raised, "Are there not too many emigrants going to the United States? there are already ten times as many families on their way thither as the number of cleared farms." The imigrants would have laughed in the face of the objector, and have replied, "Yes, but not too many to clear the farms; and the more that go together, the stronger are we against our enemies." So at the present, while the number of ministers may or may not be in excess of the number of self-supporting fields, it is not in excess of the openings and opportunities for planting the Gospel.

In the days of Christ, He bade His disciples to lift up their eyes and behold the fields already white to the harvest. How many self-supporting Christian churches were there at that day open to the ministrations of the disciples? Not one. There was, therefore, according to the argument of the Interior, an over-supply of at least seventy ministers. And yet Christ bade His disciples at that time, "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth laborers into His harvest." Matt. 9:38. Christ thought that under these circumstances there was not an over-supply, but an under-supply.

The Interior quoted statistics showing that there are twice as many ministers in the north as there are self-supporting churches, and argued that this is one forcible proof at least of there being too many ministers. It was to this point that the part of the editorial quoted referred.

There is no question that the world needs more ministers, for the spiritual requirements of man demand them. If there be any truth in the Gospel of Jesus, and we know that it is divine, if its principles will develop and perfect our natures and eventually exalt us in the presence of God, we truly need more men to teach and administer those laws to the human family.

The promises made by God through obedience to the Gospel are so great and glorious that their worth is incalculable. Through the Plan of Salvation we are insured peace and satisfaction throughout all eternity. Our attributes and faculties are to be perfectly developed in righteousness, and in the presence of our Eternal Father we are to live and grow in love, in mercy, and in justice, by reason of the intelligence we gain from God.

The Gospel is calculated to gratify every pure appetite of our natures—to satisfy every righteous emotion of our souls—and to supply every demand of the faculties of our minds. In a word, it is to purge mankind from all that is impure, from all that is sinful and wicked, and to tone all the finer sensibilities of his nature with all that is virtuous and good, and eventually make his whole being companionable to God and His angels. His soul will be filled with love, with mercy and with justice, while his mind shall abound in the wisdom and knowledge of righteousness and godliness; a cord of unity will bind every heart—liberty will be extended and peace and joy will fill every heart. This is the destiny of the Saints of God—those who obey the Gospel of Jesus.

Indeed we need men to teach us the means to this glorious end; and to say that men who are able and authorized to make clear these principles are too numerous as to advocate a measure that will oppose God and damn and curse His children.

But the question is who is able and who is authorized to instruct mankind and administer the ordinances of the Gospel?

In the kingdoms of the world no man can teach law until he understands it from those who are familiar with the principles thereof, and no man can officiate in those kingdoms until he is first duly authorized to that end, no matter how small the office he holds may be. A perfect knowledge of the law and proper authority to administer it are absolute essentials for the qualification of all officers, and by these principles are order and unity preserved. The finite wisdom of man understands this. But notwithstanding their clear understanding on this matter the Christian world either wilfully or thoughtlessly ignores these fundamental truths, and through their disregard their "Christianity" is a splintered institution, full of contrary dogmas and vain conjectures, which not reason and confuse imagination. only perplex the mind, but also amaze

Instead of the ministers getting their knowledge of the Gospel from God through the means of revelation which He established for that purpose, they go to a thousand and one schools and learn a thousand and one Gospels (?) which they season with sophistry and fables and feed to the hungering souls for truth. And instead of them getting authority from God to officiate in the ordinances of the Gospel, they read Paul's or Peter's or some of the Apostles' commission, which never was intended for them, and feeling impressed to preach they usurp the ancients' authority and immediately proceed to business. Because God is more lenient than man, His authority is usurped and His plans for man's development trampled beneath the dust. But there will come a time when all men—ministers and all—will stand before His throne, who will be answered by Him, when they ask, "Lord, have we not prophesied and officiated in Thy name?" with "Depart from me ye workers of iniquity, I never knew you."

The deplorable condition of so-called Christianity, filled as it is with disorder, contention and strife, making as it does more infidels than worshipers of God, fostering jealousy, hatred and malice in the hearts of men, yea, and even staining the hands of its followers with the innocent blood of their neighbors (many of the Latter-day Saints have fell martyrs by the hands of modern "Christians")—such a condition as this convincingly proves that there are too many ministers—as they choose to call themselves. They denounce revelation, they ignore authority, and they spread confusion and error, and create malice and prejudice in the hearts of men, for the which, reason unites with the Interior in contending that there are too many so-called divines.

We invite all men to investigate the Gospel of Jesus Christ as it has been restored, in these last days, with its pure principles, for truly the channel of revelation is reopened and authority to act for the Master committed to man.

For what doth it profit a man if a gift is bestowed upon him, and he receiveth not the gift? Behold he rejoiceth not in that which is given unto him, neither rejoices in him who is the giver of the gift.

Truth is obeyed when it is loved. Strict obedience to the truth alone enables people to dwell in the presence of the Almighty.

History of the Southern States Mission.

August, 1895—

But three days of August had passed when death claimed one of God's noblemen. Elder Charles Scott Hall, of the Texas Conference. Elder Hall had been troubled with chills for about two weeks, but at no time was his condition considered dangerous. On the morning of his death he arose early and went out upon the porch, where he fainted. He was carried into the house by his companion. Elder Heber W. Perry, and cared for, but passed away in less than half an hour. Elder Perry telegraphed to the office for money to prepare the body for removal home. President Kimball left Chattanooga for Fort Worth, where on the 5th inst. he met President Campbell, of the Texas Conference, in charge of the remains. On the same day President Kimball started for Utah with the body, arriving at Salt Lake on the 8th inst. Here he was met by his brother, J. G. Kimball, and both accompanied the remains to West Portage and spoke at the funeral services. Elder Hall had been laboring in the Mission about ten weeks, and was a faithful and efficient Elder.

President Kimball's trip to Utah prevented his attendance at the West Virginia Conference, which convened at Two Mile, Kanawha county, Aug. 10th and 11th. All the Elders laboring in the Conference were present, President Samuel Brinton presiding. Public meetings were held daily, being largely attended by a very respectable and intelligent audience, who were fed the word of God as it fell from the lips of the humble Elders. It was the design to hold the conference in the neat frame church owned by the Saints on Two Mile, but on the evening of the 7th, through the work of a fiend it was burned to ashes. Conference was therefore held in an adjoining grove. On the morning of the 16th President Kimball arrived from Utah and immediately left for Haran to attend the Virginia Conference, which was held Aug. 17th and 18th. Although there had been some threats made by bitter opposers, no molestation was offered, and a most enjoyable time was had. A special meeting was held for the Saints, in which they were instructed in their duties pertaining to tithing and the word of wisdom, etc.

The North Carolina conference convened at Mount Airy Aug. 24th and 25th. Four public and three council meetings were held. President Kimball and all the Elders spoke with much force and power. The Holy Spirit was poured out upon the speakers, the spirit of conviction accompanied the remarks made, and it was a time of great rejoicing.

Thirteen Elders arrived from Utah on the 28th inst. After being instructed they left for their fields of labor.

Elder Mathonihah Thomas was appointed President of the Virginia Conference, to succeed Elder G. H. Wallace, released.

During the month there has been considerable sickness in the Mission, especially in the Texas Conference, where several Elders have been troubled with chills and fever. Several remarkable cases of healing have been reported, and a great many baptisms.

HOW ONE FOLK TALKED.

(From Deseret News.)

From Chattanooga, Tennessee, papers, just received, we learn that some controversy has been going on in that city over attacks upon "Mormonism," made in the pulpit of the First Baptist Church. It appears that Rev. E. E. Folk had been engaged to lecture there on the subject of which he claimed to have made a study, his chief means of information having been acquired during a visit of "nearly two weeks" in Salt Lake City.

His lecture consisted principally of a repetition of gross slanders and off color stories, with burlesques of "Mormon" doctrine and perversions of historical facts. The purpose in view was to check the influence of the "five-hundred Mormon missionaries," who, he stated, were laboring in the southern states.

The Chattanooga News, which published a very full synopsis of the tirade, also gave place to an interview with President Ben E. Rich in reply to it. This is an evidence of fairness on the part of that paper, which, with other courtesies of a similar kind, is much to its credit in these times, when it is unpopular to publish anything on "the other side," that is our side of the "Mormon" question.

Mr. E. E. Folk, in "coming back" at President Rich, mentions his visit to this city and his interview with the editor of the Deseret News, whom he mentions as "one of the Twelve Apostles," which is about as accurate as many other of his statements. As he has made this reference, we here present the facts concerning his conversation with the writer of this article:

His card, presented when he came to this office, bore the name simply of "E. E. Folk, representing the Nashville American." He did not mention or hint at his ministerial position. He posed as a newspaper correspondent. We gave him, by request, an epitome of the doctrines and organization of the Church, and answered a number of questions very frankly, until he drifted into a series of which we had type-written copies, that had been furnished to others of the genus Paul Pry by the clique in this city which is engaged in raking up gossip and scandal, for the pruient and impertinently curious, who come here to poke their nasal organs into private affairs, for the purpose of smelling out something that will suit the perverted tastes of sensation-mongers. We then expressed our doubts as to his status as a reporter or correspondent of a respectable journal, and told him that no decent newspaper man would engage in such work, and no reputable paper would want such matter for publication.

It was evident that he was not inquiring into "Mormonism" in order to learn the truth concerning the system, but was acting as a tool to dig up something to gratify his own desires, and to dish up for the delectation of the depraved who cover their cravings with the cloak of religion.

Of course he has made the most of his opportunities, and in retailing the gossip and dressing up in fantastic garb the few facts he gleaned while here, he has succeeded in exciting large congregations. In the language of the Chattanooga News, "a more sensational statement was never made in a pulpit." A few samples of his assertions will suffice, without repeating the vilest of his charges against the "Mormon" Church and people.

He revived the dead and decayed story about Solomon Spaulding having written the manuscript from which the Book of Mormon was "concocted." He claimed to have interviewed President Snow. By his request we introduced him to that gentleman, who held no conversation with him at all, but discerning his caliber, turned him over summarily to the editor of the "News," who treated him with far more courtesy than he deserved.

Folk gave in his lecture a pretended history of the "Mormons," in which he informed his hearers that in Nauvoo "no one could be arrested without the consent of the city council." That the purpose of Brigham Young in coming to this place, was to "establish a government independent of anything on earth." That this region was ceded from Mexico "much to the chagrin of Brigham Young." That the "State of Deseret was admitted to the Union," but "polygamy being openly practiced, statehood was taken away." That the "murdering of the body to save the soul was a principle of 'Mormon' belief." That it was "nothing unusual to find the 'Mormons' lying, cheating, stealing, and murdering in order to carry their point." That Brigham Young preached "he would send every Gentile to hell, and that they had better supply themselves with coffins while lumber was cheap." That "Mormonism" taught that "unmarried women will be mere servants hereafter." That "unquestioned obedience to the higher authority is one of the requirements of the Priesthood, and all who will not thus submit will be damned." That "no one but 'Mormons' will be saved." That in Utah, "if you were to hang a petticoat on a bush, half a dozen men would immediately make for it." That "in one county it was found that 75 per cent. of the marriages contracted were forced,' 'and in one city of 3,000 there had been no marriages for two years that were not forced."

In addition to these pulpit utterances the slanders and indecencies that have graced the columns of a local contemporary, were repeated by the ministerial purveyor of such material who came here under the guise of a representative of a respectable journal.

The shameless falsehoods we have reproduced, serve to show the character of the discourse and of the Reverend (?) gentleman who delivered it. We are told that some of the members of the church where it was preached, left the building in righteous indignation. It is surprising that any sane and decent person would remain to listen to such an harangue.

The truth is, Mr. Folk came here with the evident intent to gather up just such scraps as he fed out to his open-mouthed audience. He found folks in this city ready to supply him with what he wanted. The questions given him to ask of "Mormons," indicated his source of supply. The egotism which lends some persons to think they can learn all about "Mormonism" and the "Mormons" in a visit of nearly two weeks," found in him a prominent representative. His mind and tastes were of the kind to which the vile stuff he accumulated naturally gravitated. And now he can pour it forth into willing ears, and also pose as an authority on the subject, for did he not spend "nearly two weeks" in the capital of "Mormondom," and is not that fully sufficient to constitute him an anti-"Mormon" expert?

We learn from our friends in Chattanooga, that, as usual after such outbursts, attention is being attracted to the truth and the agitation is doing good instead of the evil intended. They should not be slow to follow up the advantages thus obtained, and by simply preaching the truth in plainness, without noticing the source of those defamatory utterances, they will gather in the honest and fair-minded, who cannot be deceived by the hirelings that have falsehood for their refuge, and who make merchandise of the souls of men. Meanwhile, Rev. (?) E. E. Folk is perfectly welcome to publish, in full, everything that was said to him in the interview with the editor of the Deseret News.

"In order to do anything worth doing, we must not stand shivering on the bank and thinking of the cold and danger. Jump in and scramble through as well as you can."—Sidney Smith.

Mormons and Mormonism
By a Non-Mormon.

COPYRIGHTED.

[Printed by Permission of the Author, Chas. Ellis, Salt Lake City, Utah.]

The growth of schools in Utah is full of evidence that the Mormons were the friends of education. Remember that for years there was no money in Utah, yet the people built houses in which they lived, as well as hundreds of meeting houses. The first meeting houses were "boweries"—posts set in the ground, a flat roof of poles shingled with bushes cut in foliage. I have seen several of these old places of worship. But as soon as practicable every ecclesiastical "ward" had its "dobe" meeting house, which was also school house. But "Utah's best crop" would soon overflow any ordinary Mormon meeting house and more school room would become necessary. On Sunday the Bishop of a ward would say:

"My brothers and sisters, we need more school room in this ward. What will you do to provide it?"

"I will give a team ten days."
"I will give a thousand 'dobes."
"I will give two weeks' work."
"I will give twenty bushels of wheat."

Thus it would go, and the school room would come as a labor of love and without the passing of a dollar. Today there are no people in the nation so eager to learn as are many of the young Mormons whom I have met in my travels about Utah. The State University, the public schools, all schools are full. The Mormon Church has its special schools, as other sects have in Utah, and their theology has its place in the studies, but the Mormons have no desire to introduce Mormon theology into the public schools and are opposed to the introduction of any other theology, as of course they should be.

MORALS.

In 1876 there were thirteen counties in Utah without saloon, brewery, gambling house, brothel, lawyer, doctor, beggar, parson or politician, and the population was exclusively Mormon.

In the winter of 1881-2 there were fifty-one prisoners in the Utah penitentiary. Only five were Mormons, and yet the Mormon population of the territory exceeded that of the anti-Mormon 500 per cent. From 1877 to 1882 the jail of Salt Lake county received only three Mormons. In 1881 there were 1020 arrests in Salt Lake City, of which 103 were Mormon men and boys and six Mormon women; 657 non-Mormon men and 194 non-Mormon women. In 1882 the number of arrests in the same city was 1561, of which 188 were Mormons and 1373 non-Mormons. In that year there were sixty-six barrooms in the city, and sixty of them were kept by non-Mormons. There were fifteen billiard and bowling rooms and seven gambling houses, all kept by non-Mormons.

The above, as well as the following statistics, are taken from "The Palantic," published by A. M. Musser. From the Utah penitentiary records for the year ending June 30, 1884, Mr. Musser showed that, with the population of Utah 83 per cent. Mormon and the non-Mormon population only 17 per cent., there were thirteen Mormon and seventy-eight non-Mormon prisoners—a difference of 600 per cent. in favor of the Mormons. Add to this the difference in percentage of population and we have over 1000 to one in favor of Mormon morality as compared with that of the non-Mormon population of that period.

It should be understood that the above statement is not intended to characterize the whole non-Morman population. All through the Utah years there have been non-Mormons here who were most exemplary people. They came in to stay, to engage in business, to make homes. They have never engaged in the local disputes. They have never been anti-Mormons. Because they would not join the raid against the people they were for years sneered at as "jack-Mormons." The criminal element referred to in these statistics as "non-Mormons," it is safe to say, should have been put down as "anti-Mormons."

When the first edition of this pamphlet was issued the anti-Mormon paper of this city and several anti-Mormon parsons of Utah and Canada undertook to answer these statistics by claiming that the Mormons referred to were all "Latter-day Saints," while none of the "non-Mormons" were "Christians." For answer I will say that the record shows that of the seventy-eight "non-Mormons" in the Utah penitentiary and referred to above, forty-five were members of Christian churches. To show that this class of Utah non-Mormons were not worse than Christians generally, I refer to statistics furnished the Deseret News recently by Ephraim Ainsworth.

In 1889 Ohio had 942 convicts in penitentiary—826 of them belonged to Christian churches. In 1893 Canada had 11,810 convicts—Catholics, 4,395 Church of England, 3,621; Methodists, 1,624; Presbyterians, 1,495; other sects, 698; Atheists, none. In 1896 the Kansas penitentiary had 343 Methodists, forty-one Presbyterians, sixty-one Campbellites, other sects twelve. In 1896 the Michigan state reformatory had as inmates 226 Methodists, eighty-four Baptists, thirty-one Episcopalians, twenty-eight Congregationalists, eighteen United Brethren, 229 Catholics, sixty-five Presbyterians. From the Tennessee state prison, no date given, is reported 873 convicts—870 Christians and three who would not state their religion. Thirty years ago a Unitarian minister named Hatch made a careful investigation of criminal statistics of the United States and Territories and published the statement that 7 per cent. of male convicts in the penitentiaries of the country were ministers. Utah has had her full share of them in the last thirty years, though she has kindly permitted them to run away, making no attempt to capture them save in the case of a parson who killed his victim, cut her body up and attempted to burn it. A reward was offered for him, but he is probably sending heretics to hell yet for Christ's sake. It is said "there are none righteous, no, not one," that is, we all "live in glass houses" perhaps.

Coming back to Utah morals—I have ben told by a physician of long practice here that veneral diseases are much more prevalent among Gentiles than Mormons.

If the faces of children are an index to the morals and self-control of parents, many Mormons have only to point to their offspring to prove their own general purity. Indeed, it would be difficult to find finer types of manhood and womanhood than are to be seen among the Mormons, and this applies as well to polygamous as to monogamous offspring.

Right here, at the risk of being misunderstood, I want to say a word about Mormon polygamy. It was not established for the gratification of "lust," as has been so often averred, but was, I think, a conscientious effort to improve humanity by sterpiculture. It was the only considerable effort ever so made among civilized people. I think it would have been better to have given it a scientific instead of a theological basis. In the country at large monogamous marriage has long been degenerating. With its degradation society must sink to conditions that must eventually, if not arrested, destroy our civilization. Religion may insure humanity against fabled fire after death, but it cannot breed out defects of will and taints of blood. Nobility of person, life, character is born, not made by creeds. Humanity can never be Godlike or fit for "the kingdom" until it is bred up from its sometimes lower than "beastly" level. Mormon polygamy was the beginning of such an effort. It has been killed by ignorant prejudice. But soon or late the world will see the infinite need of wisdom and science in the production and development of children, and then it will be understood that the marriage system must be reconstructed. Mormon polygamy was not the "beastly" thing a nation of adulterers called it. It grew out of the belief that life is eternal, that there can be no marrying in the future life; that women not married here can never marry, but must be the servants of those who were married on earth for all time here and hereafter. It grew out of the belief that woman gains her "exaltation" in the kingdom with her husband, and he in part through the excellence of his family. It was the Mormon women who wanted polygamy. But no woman would enter that relation through "lust." She could only enter it by conquering her passions, and in doing that she prepared herself to become a divine mother. It is only when women can learn to do this and compel men to respect their rights in gestation, as all other female mammals do their mates, that mankind can be saved—from itself. I am not advocating Mormon polygamy, but the physical improvement of humanity as the natural and also the scientific basis of mental and moral improvement. Sometime this great truth will receive the recognition denied it now.

I come back now and say that, taking polygamy and all into careful consideration, the morals of the Mormon people have always been as good as the best in the nation, and through the thirty-two years when the population of Utah was almost wholly Mormon and "this people" had not come under the influence of those who wanted saloons, brothels and dance halls opened to tempt young Mormons, their morals were infinitely superior to anything to be found in the ragtag-and-bobtail element that for years existed on the western frontier and found in Utah the only oasis of the mountains.

A FOND GOODBYE.

A fond goodbye,
God sends thee forth.
A favored one thou art
Heaven's message to impart!
Be brave and firm; be pure and true;
What man has done, that man can do.
A fond goodbye!

A bright goodbye.
Where courage fails draw near to heaven
"Ask" receives the promise given.
Thy mission's field—with quickening pace
Toward Zion turn thy longing face.
The test is o'er and he has won
A mother's truest—a sire's "Well done."
Home, home again, praise God above
For life and all His wondrous love.
A bright goodbye!

SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES.

BY JNO. S. SEARS.

Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me. (John 5-39.) How often in traveling among the people do we meet those who say they have read the Bible from the time when they were mere children, telling you with pride that they have read the Scriptures from beginning to end many, many times. These people will trace the genealogies of many ancients, and can tell you much about the Prophets of old, as far as revealed by Holy Writ; yet how few know the true plan of salvation, as laid down by our Lord; claiming to believe in Paul's writings, yet contrary to his teachings will they give heed to fables and geneologies which minister questions rather than godly edifying. From among the thousands, yes millions of people who read the Scriptures, how many "search," as commanded? How many can tell what should be done to be saved? Christ meant that all of God's children should obey the one plan, and pass through but the one gate, if they would gain desired salvation; for truly His plan is universal and justice forbids salvation save by that one way—the straight gate; for wide is the gate and broad the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat. How different the roads. Two young men having grown to manhood, under the care of a loving mother, left home to battle for themselves. Journeying together for some time, finally they separated, each choosing a different path. The broad road having been trodden so much was very easy to follow, besides everything seemed so beautiful while looking along its flower-lined course. The air being filled with perfume, the people wearing their fine broadcloths, silks and finery added enchantment to one of these young men. As he journeyed along all seemed gay and happy, money, wine, etc., were much in evidence. On, on, did the mass of people go, and as this young man continued, what in the beginning seemed a pleasure was now tiresome; murder, robbery and evil deeds could be witnessed on all sides. Many would turn and retrace their steps, but no the surging multitude pressed forward, not seeming to care for the consequences. He that chose the straight way could tell a far different story. The path being very seldom traveled, was dim and rough, being lined with rocks, thorns and briers. Entering upon the path the other young man journeyed on, stumbling and falling; often bruising himself, yet arising again, and continued on. Satan appeared and tried to lead him astray. For, said he, why travel upon this rough path? Why not take the broad one, so easy to follow? Do you not know it is very unpopular to be seen upon this path; can you not see those people pointing the finger of scorn at you, hear them mocking and laughing? "Get thee hence Satan," and plodding his way along he went forth to receive at the end of his journey the plaudit, "well done, thou good and faithful servant."

There is as much difference between reading and searching the Scriptures as there is between digging a hole and mining. Nature bids all search out her riches, but suppose a man desiring to find gold should shoulder a pick and shovel, and going to the mountains should start picking away at mother earth without respect to location; what else could be expected but a failure? How different would the true prospector proceed with his labors, searching here and there, studying well the strata and noting well the ground, formation, etc. When once started aright, the vein is found and riches crown and repay for every effort put forth in truly "searching." The plan of salvation is plain indeed to them who will but do the will of the Father. Search as commanded, and when you have found the true plan, obey.

THE DARK AGES.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

The TENTH CENTURY was a period of unrest, the world being full of turmoil and disunion.

In the year 912, Rollo, the Norwegian, a famous pirate, and the son of a count being banished from his native soil for his many lawless acts, gathered a band of Normans and overran France. To secure peace Charles the Simple, King of France, gave Rollo a dukedom and great possessions, also his beautiful daughter, Giselda. The conditions were first peace, and second, that Rollo would embrace Christianity.

Rollo accepted the terms proposed, was baptised a Christian, was renamed Robert and became the founder of that great line of dukes who dictated the state affairs of nations in after years, who invaded England under Duke William, defeating Harold at the battle of Hastings and secured the English throne, gaining the title of William the First, the conqueror.

At this period the Ottoman empire was established on the ruins of the Saracen Dominion by the Turks, driving them from Persia and the East. Palestine and the Holy Land was and is still under the dominion of the Ottoman empire, the inhabitants of which are the followers of Mahomet. The Christians, who at this time were very fanatical, bigoted and headstrong, were determined to wrest this sacred ground from the Mahometans, and the authorities proposed the crusades to drive the Crescent, the Mahometan emblem, from Palestine and substitute the Cross.

When Mahomet was exiled, the moon was in its first quarter, and on account of his peculiar views, he took this token as his emblem, and the Crescent has since been looked upon by the Mahometans, much as the Cross is by the Christians.

The historian speaks of Christianity, in this age of the world, as a rotten system.

One of the Grecian Patriarchs, Theophylact by name, became vastly wealthy by selling church offices. He had agents employed in selling images, which were much sought after. He is said to have been a great lover of horses and dogs, having at one time over two thousand hunting horses to which he fed nuts, dates, dried grapes, steeped in wine, to which he added perfume. It is said of this extravagant pontiff, that while celebrating High Mass on holy Thursday, his groom brought him the joyful news that one of his favorite mares had foaled. He was so elated that he immediately threw down the lithurgy, left the church and ran in rapture to the stable. After having expressed his joy at the event, he returned to the altar and finished the divine service.

The above event shows the worldly nature of those in high ecclesiastical positions in the Greek church.

The same authority says, that degenerate and wicked as these Patriarchs were, they were less profligate and indecent than the Roman Pontiffs, who indulged in all sorts of indecencies and immoralities. They are declared to have been monsters and not men. Sergius the Third, was an adulterer. John the Tenth, was placed in the Papal Chair by the Empress Theodora, the splendid Queen of Byzantium, who was a lover of John. He was finally murdered by order of Marozia, the daughter of Theodora, who had a bastard son by the Pontiff Sergius the Third. This son was placed in the Papal Chair, and took the name of John the Eleventh. Such were some of the so-called successors of St. Peter.

This century was conspicuous for the number of Roman Popes who were crowned and uncrowned, at the pleasure of the great Emperors of Germany,—the Othos.

The custom of changing the names of the Popes upon election, commenced and was adopted in the year 996, thus we have so many Johns, Leos and Gregorys.

Concubinage and Simony, or the buying and selling of church offices, were indulged in, by the clergy and the election to ecclesiastical positions, did not depend so much on the qualifications of the applicant, as on the ability to buy such office, for they were bought and sold to the highest bidder. In consequence many times the most stupid wretches were raised to high positions in church and state.

The century generally was in a deplorable state of illiteracy. The laity were frightened into religeous fervor by the terrible depictions of hell. Purgatory was pictured in horrible colors before the poor ignorant people, who believed they could only escape the torments of the damned through the prayers of the clergy and of departed saints, which could only be obtained by paying money, or its equivalent.

Regions of the damned were obdurate to all but the Priests, and their influence only, could release a soul from this most terrible place.

The rosary was instituted at this time, and takes up considerable time in the Roman Catholic worship. It is a very prominent feature in their service, and consists of fifteen repetitions of the Lord's prayer, and 150 salutations, or ave marias for the Virgin Mary.

Many people during this century, believed that the day of judgment was at hand. The 1000 years spoken of in the 20th chapter of Revelations was generally looked upon as the great winding up scene, and as this was the Tenth century, the great day of judgment was looked for daily by the poor fanatics; they lived in dread of the torments which were looked for at the termination of this life, and the coming of Christ. This superstition spread, so that numbers sold out their possessions, gave the proceeds to the church and removed to Palestine, where they expected to receive Christ, and be prepared for His coming. If an eclipse occurred, or anything unusual happened, the cities would immediately be vacated by these cowardly Christians; they sought the rocks and caverns for shelter, where they might hide themselves from the great anticipated display. General confusion reigned and dispair was depicted on the blanched and terror stricken countenances of the populace, who sacrificed their earthly possessions to the church, while endeavoring to obtain spiritual preferments. In consequence of these dismal forbodings, the church became very rich. It certainly was a profitable misinterpretation of scripture for the prognostications of the corrupt clergy was so generally believed.

The coming of the Lord Jesus, and the ushering in of the Millennium, or 1000 years of peace, when Satan will be bound, has been anticipated and looked for, ever since Jesus ascended from Bethany. Paul said, "that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first; he saw the powers of darkness arrayed against the church of Christ, and the establishment of a great power, that would oppose and exalt itself, above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; that should sit in regal power, enthroned in the temple of God, and acting as God himself. This blasphemous power is from beneath and is discribed by John, as the whore of all the earth, who has made all nations drunk with the wine of the wrath of her fornications. By and through this power, being devoid of the inspiration of God through the living oracles, the world has been deceived throughout the "Dark Ages."

The glorious day of rest, when the earth shall receive its paradisical splendor, and be visited by the Son of God, who will come in the clouds of heaven, is a day looked for, with great anticipation, joy and pleasure, by the Christian, who expects then to get his eternal reward.

The Millerites and Adventists have named the day and made due preparations on occasions in the past. Modern Prophets (?) through their wisdom and learning, have set dates, looking with expectant anticipation for the advent of His coming and have stood gazing heavenward believing that their Christ would come with His glorious retinue of Angels, with all the hosts of heaven, in response to their puny calls. The word of God positively states, that He would not come as an expected guest, but as a thief in the night. And not even the Angels in heaven are cognizant of when the event will happen. Be ye also ready, for in such an hour when ye think not, the Son of man will appear.

The tenth century with its abominable wickedness, was hardly prepared for the reception of Jesus. The whole was as the foolish virgins, devoid of oil, the irradiating product was not to be had, the world was in darkness, and the renovating spirit of light was not in the earth at this time.

LIFE OF PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR.

thirty-three years the Saints had lived in Utah, many had been emigrated from distant countries by the perpetual emigration fund and were very much in debt, many of them to that fund. The year 1880 being the fiftieth or jubilee year since the organization of the church, President Taylor was moved upon to forgive the people their debts to this fund, and thus as in olden times make the captive free. This was hailed with delight by the Saints, and is remembered by the grateful, with a sense of love and esteem toward President John Taylor. President Taylor presided over the church with dignity and ability. He traveled and visited the Saints, as far as circumstances would permit. When the crusade against plural marriage came to be waged with bitterness, under the rule of the Edmunds-Tucker act, President Taylor, to prevent trouble and to place himself beyond the possibility of persecution for an infraction of the law, and rather than live with one family to the exclusion of the rest, living in the Gardo House, having for his housekeeper his venerable sister, Agnes Schwartz, while all his families occupied their own homes. He was a just man. Yet notwithstanding his observance of the law, his enemies were determined to arrest him, and if possible precipitate an eruption, which would give them a pretense for still stronger measures to oppress the Saints. Upon his return from Arizona and California in 1884 he appeared in the large tabernacle Feb. 1st and preached his last public discourse in that building. It was a powerful address, exhorting the Saints to faithfulness and forbearance, long suffering and charity in all their trials. From this time on until his decease he lived in exile, attending, however, from his place of seclusion by letters, epistles and otherwise to his public duties. During his exile one of his wives was called to the Spirit world, after a season of illness. During her sickness he was prevented from seeing her, as her home was closely watched by miserable spotters, whose characters were as far beneath that of President Taylor as a slough of corruption is beneath the glittering rays of the celestial sun. Being denied necessary exercise, to which he was accustomed, he became enfeebled in body and his life shortened. He died in exile July 25th, 1887, truly a double martyr. His blood was shed in Carthage jail, Illinois. His life was shortened by exile from home, under the oppression of unjust men and measures. His funeral a few days later was attended by many thousands of the Saints, who revered and loved the man of God who had gone to his life beyond. During the life of President Taylor he traveled thousands of miles for the Gospel's sake without purse or script, baptized many people, organized numerous branches of the church, published many tracts and several larger works, introduced the Gospel to new countries. He was the author of many choice hymns and poems. He received many revelations to guide him in his duties, as well as being a constant medium of inspiration, and received several revelations which were written for the guidance of the church. He uttered numerous prophecies. Before the Prophet Joseph was martyred he said to President Taylor: "Elder Taylor, you have received the Holy Spirit; if you heed His teachings the same will become within you a constant stream of revelation." Those who know what revelation is and knew President John Taylor know that the Prophet's words were literally verified. Among the striking prophecies he uttered was subsequent to the martyrdom of the Prophet Joseph, who had been virtually betrayed into the hands of a howling mob by the vascillating Governor, Thomas B. Ford, who had promised them protection. President Taylor prophesied shortly after that Gov. Ford would live until the flesh had well nigh withered from his bones, he would lose his property and die a pauper, the subject of charity. A non-Mormon lady who heard this prophecy, and also attended the funeral of Gov. Ford, testified, as did all the facts connected with the subsequent life, death and burial of Thomes B. Ford, that President Taylor's prediction was fulfilled to the very letter. President Taylor was a man of fine appearance; he stood about six feet high, his countenance was heavenly, and whosoever went into his presence, either in private or in public, felt intuitively that he was in the presence of a great man, a man of honor and merit. His abilities were varied, and though pre-eminently spiritual, he had a strong liking for good literature. He was not without financial ability. He left a noble family of wives, sons and daughters, to whom he bequeathed as a rich legacy his noble virtues of honor, self-denial, integrity, purity, faith and devotion to God. He taught them that whatever they did in life, whether spiritual or temporal, to do it well. He said, "When anyone looks at your work they will not say, 'How long did that take?' but they will say, 'Who did that work?'" He lived, labored and died the perfect exemplification of his favored motto, "The Kingdom of God or nothing."

LATTER DAY SAINTS
SOUTHERN STAR

"BUT THOUGH WE, OR AN ANGEL FROM HEAVEN, PREACH ANY OTHER GOSPEL UNTO YOU THAN THAT WHICH WE HAVE PREACHED UNTO YOU, LET HIM BE ACCURSED." GAL. 1ST CH. V.

VOL. 2. CHATTANOOGA, TENN., SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1900. No. 14.

CONFERENCE OF CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

An annual conference of conference presidents has become a fixture in the Southern States Mission and has come to be regarded as a time of refreshing and one of the leading events in each year's history of the Master's work in the South.

It is the purpose of these conferences to review carefully the prospects and progress of the Gospel in every part of the Mission, to devise ways and means, and the best uniform methods of preaching and publishing the Gospel, and by mingling in each other's society to become more firmly cemented in the bonds of brotherhood, thus tending to deeper interest in promoting peace on earth, good will to man.

Unqualified success attended the second annual conference of conference presidents held in this city February 17th and 18th. All who were fortunate enough to be present at the meetings and deliberations of the presiding elders in the Southern States Mission on these dates went away filled with the fruits of the spirit, bristling with ideas and plans for future work and determined to push on in the cause of truth with renewed vigor.

Socially the meeting together of these sons of Zion, as in all conferences, was a rare treat, an oasis in missionary experience, and the men who are the generals on the "firing line" vied with each other in brotherly affection. A trolley ride over the electric lines of Chattanooga, visiting points of historic interest, had been scheduled as the special social feature of the conference, but inclement weather caused this project to be abandoned and instead an old-fashioned "hand-shake" took place at the home of the office force at headquarters. It was a royal good time, due largely to the excellent management of Sisters Rich and Hyldahl. The very atmosphere seemed to savor of the breezes that blow from Teton Peaks, the valleys of the Wahsatch, and the mesas of the Gila, and for several hours Dixie's woods, plantations and whole-souled hospitality gave way to the snow tipped mountains, the fruitful vales and the happy homes in the West. The memories of "refused entertainment," "the straight forward big dirt road," "the friendly dry-goods box—the street corner pulpit," and the scoffs and cold indifference of the multitude, were over two thousand miles away and replaced by the delicacies of a genuine homelike lovefeast. In addition to the elders present, Sisters Nina Rich and Allie Hyldahl, we were also favored at this home gathering with the presence of two Chattanooga ladies, Mrs. Cantrell and her sister Miss Minnie Crow. To see some "Mormon" ladies, the real article from Zion, made every heart glad and no doubt inspired dreams of dear mothers, wives, sisters and sweethearts, far away in the Western highlands, who every day petition for Heaven's rarest flowers to strew the pathway of the absent ones that are declaring the glad tidings of great joy to the inhabitants of the South.

The first number of the evening's program was given by President Rich. He said the old mission house never gave a warmer welcome and extended to his honored guests a wandering commission with the authority to devour all the good things for the gratification of the inner man that came in their way. It is hardly necessary to say the commission was executed throughout the evening in "past master" fashion. After this introduction everybody indulged in a handshake, then came an impromptu program, a feast of fruits and kindred things, after which some of the old songs by all present, closed the evening's enjoyment.

The Conference.

The deliberations and meetings of the conference were held in the Congregational Hall, located on the principal business street, spacious and comfortable. The first session was held at 10 a. m., on the 17th. Pres. Ben E. Rich, presiding. Singing, "Ye Who are Called to Labor," Prayer, Pres. Sylvester Low, Jr. Singing, "Now Let us Rejoice in the Day of Salvation." The roll call showed that all the conference presidents were in attendance, as follows: Thos. H. Humpherys, North Alabama; David A. Broadbent, East Kentucky; Osmer D. Flake, Mississippi; Geo. E. Maycock, Ohio; Heber S. Olsen, Virginia; B. F. Price, Kentucky; John Peterson, East Tennessee; W. D. Rencher, Georgia; C. G. Parker, Florida; J. Urban Allred, Middle Tennessee; J. M. Haws, North Carolina; Sylvester Low, Jr., South Carolina; J. N. Miller, Louisiana; W. H. Bovle, South Alabama; L. M. Terry, North Kentucky, and David H. Elton, Chattanooga. There were also present Elders Geo. W. Skidmore, Florida, to succeed President Parker; G. M. Porter, Georgia, to succeed President Flake; W. W. Mackay, East Kentucky, to succeed President Broadbent, and E. L. Pomroy to succeed President Peterson, a number of visiting elders and the brethren laboring in the office. In all 42 elders were in attendance.

President Rich welcomed the brethren present and spoke of the disappointment in not having one or more of the Twelve Apostles with us as expected. In inaugurating these conferences it was hoped some of the Apostles would be present to instruct and counsel us in our work. Hereafter the conference of presidents will be held before the regular conferences. The prime object in meeting together was to inject new blood into our work by exchanging ideas and thereby avoid getting into ruts and improve our system of work.

In appointing conference presidents, no precedent would be followed and it had been thought a good plan to often select, hereafter, elders from some other conference to fill these positions.

President Rich made a concise report of the STAR and of the work in the Mission which showed that progress was being made. Announced the program for the conference as follows: 2 p. m., Counsel and General Instructions; 4 to 6 p. m., Private Consultation, and 7 p. m., a special meeting of the presidents to discuss methods, make recommendations and formulate questions on which explanations were wanted. On Sunday a fast meeting would be held at the Mission residence at 10 a. m. A public meeting at the hall at 2:30 p. m., and the remainder of the day after that to counsel.

Pres. L. R. Anderson made some explanation of railroad conditions, and Pres. Christo Hyldahl showed the financial condition of our commissary and what was necessary to keep up this help to our work, which closed the morning session.

Singing and benediction.

Afternoon Session, 2 p. m.

Pres. David A. Broadbent offered the opening prayer, congregational singing being indulged in before and after the same. The entire time was occupied by President Rich, who gave some valuable counsel. Elders should not make machines of themselves and do a thing simply because others did it. Let them make thinkers of themselves. In preaching they should preach the first principles of the Gospel and not the mysteries of godliness, but confining themselves to the first principles would not prevent them declaring the restoration of the Gospel through the Prophet Joseph Smith. Salvation for the dead and other deep subjects are pearls and should not be indiscriminately thrown before those who are of the world and cannot understand the principles leading up to these beautiful subjects.

In obedience with divine command Elders must not travel with money in their pockets, and depend upon the same.

There was no need for money in the country. In the working of cities where the laws prevented us from asking for food or entertainment, and it was a fight for bread, then only could provision be made by the Elders for food and lodging so they could carry on their work. This would still be making the Gospel free (the intention of Christ in sending out His Seventies), and going without purse or script if relatives or friends at home payed the necessary expenses. But this must only be done when conditions make it unavoidable and impracticable for the progress of the work.

Conference Presidents should take up the special letter of last year, on Tithing, Sacrament, and other subjects and bring it to the attention of their Conference, and if necessary go through their Conference again.

We are not ungrateful for the loyal support given us in the past, but do not allow your Conference to get slack in meetings, books and tracts. We are doing an injury to an Elder when he is not pushed. Wisdom in all things, but Elders who are pushed most develop fastest and Conference Presidents who push have the Elders to develop. When you have a dull scythe you put the whetstone on it and sharpen it up, and you are the whetstones to put an edge on your Elders when they get dull.

Singing: Benediction, President C. Hyldahl.

The Sunday Services.

At the Fast meeting on Sunday morning at the Mission residence the sacrament was administered and thirty-nine persons bore their testimony to the restoration and truthfulness of the Gospel. The Spirit of God was plainly manifest and the sweet spirit of peace pervaded the meeting.

The public service in the afternoon was fairly well attended and was made up of four short addresses by Elders Jeddie Stokes, Ben L. Rich, son of President Rich, David H. Elton and William T. Davis, all of whom spoke with freedom upon the message they bore to the world. Each said, in part, as follows:

Elder Jeddie Stokes.

"In all ages of the world, when the Gospel or a substitute thereof has been upon the earth, it has been taught to the people by men whom God authorized and filled with revelation and inspiration.

"In the whole Biblical record, all the counsel, all the instruction, all the laws and the precepts that have been given for the advancement of the human family have come from God through the medium of inspiration and revelation, and this avenue of divine favor was closed only when the people were guilty of disobedience and ungodliness.

"Communication with God is just as essential for the development of the human family as parental admonition is for the betterment of the little child.

"Let us reason for a moment. What is the fundamental principle upon which depends the success of a man's family—that makes his children useful, intelligent, cautious, obedient and good? For example we will suppose that the father is himself a worthy and a noble man, having all the traits of purity and goodness that mortality can claim; now, aside from the influence of his own perfection, what principle must he establish and maintain between his children if he would have those children grow up to be on an equality with himself? I answer that he must establish and maintain the principle of instructive and directive communication between himself and his children. How can the father expect these children to become morally, physically and intellectually developed, if he stubbornly refuses to teach them these laws? The sacred obligations of parenthood and fatherhood demand that he do his duty by his infants—that he teach them and that he advise them each day of his life; and the moment that he turns a deaf ear to their wants and withdraws the support of his guiding hand, just that moment does he sacrifice the name of father and the success of his children, and as a result his family will sink into disobedience, ignorance, corruption and sin; and most truly, even if such a man were possessed of certain traits of goodness, his very actions toward his children would declare him absolutely void of love, of mercy and of justice.

"All fathers realize that, if they would have noble children, they must teach them to that end, and as the little ones grow, their environments change and their demands increase, which necessitates new counsel, which will meet their requirements and be applicable to their condition. It would be unwise, uncharitable, yea, it would be even foolish, for any parent to simply write out a few rules and instructions and place them in the hands of his infant babe with the strict command, 'take this, son; this is your guide through all your life. I now close my mouth and deafen my ears against you; thenceforth and forever you must ask me nothing, no matter what obstacles of perplexty may confront you, no matter what your adversities may be or what your requirements are, for I am done with you; but still, my son, I demand of you to be virtuous and good, intelligent and true, even to the surpassing of your fellow-men.'

"The possession of such a 'dead letter' would be a poor guide indeed, and then imagine the final deplorable outcome of innumerable generations if this volume contained the 'fullness' of their counsel, advice and direction, and they were restricted alone to that. And how much of that book's contents which had been given to one single individual, and under environments peculiar to himself, do you suppose the multitude could utilize advantageously to themselves? I leave you to conclude.

"Just as it is with our families, so also it is with the great family of God. We are all the children of God, Acts 17:29, and He has commanded us through Jesus of Nazareth to be perfect even as our Father in heaven is perfect.

"To attain to this advancement we must know how it is done. We need daily counsel and admonition, and without it it is absolutely impossible to reach the destiny of perfection. Hence the fundamental principle upon which depends the success of God's family is His mutual communication with them. We call a father's communication to his children instruction, we call God's communication to His children revelation, and upon this principle of instruction, from the learned to the unlearned, from the superior to the inferior, from father to son, from God to His infants upon earth—whom we all are—upon this principle depends the development of the human family and the perfection of the children of God. So from the standpoint of reason we must conclude that we need more revelation from God, for the Bible, notwithstanding its truthfulness and its divinity, is not sufficient for us today. What have we to do with going to Damascus—to preaching to the Ninivites, building an ark, etc.? We can't apply these divine commands to us, because we are not Pauls, Jonahs or Noahs in this sense. If time would permit, the voice of Scripture on this point could be heard to concur with Reason in declaring the fact we need living revelation for our guidance."

Elder Ben L. Rich, Son of President Rich.

"To bear my testimony to the divinity of Mormonism certainly gives me happiness. I thoroughly realize the unpopularity of our cause. But if Mormonism be founded upon principles of truth, what matters it whether the winds of opposition blow and whine? Every reformation has met with unpopularity; every reformer has been persecuted, and it seems the extent in greatness of a reformation among men is measured by the extent of opposition which it invokes.

"Mormonism is no exception to the rule. It follows the examples made by truth in former ages. I say Mormonism is beautiful; it is progressive; it is everything which ennobles and purifies when seen as it is and judged from an impartial standpoint.

"Upon her face and clear brow her enemies have put a hideous mask, and in that guise they exhibit her to the ridicule of an unthinking populace, just as Christ was treated 1,800 years ago when he was crowned with thorns and robed in a cloak of scarlet, and, thus disguised, exhibited to the taunts of a fickle and howling rabble.

"The prince of darkness is enthroned in this world of ours. Men are his servants, to whom they dedicate and consecrate their lives and souls, and whenever truth makes its appearance in his kingdom, the great prince wills its destruction, knowing full well the survival of truth means the over throw of evil.

"And men are just as eager in executing his mandates as was the soldiery of Herod when that wicked potentate decreed the destruction of the babe of Bethlehem."

President David H. Elton.

"We have listened to the voice of Reason on the principle of revelation, and I rejoice in the opportunity of holding up to your view the plain declarations of Scripture on this same point.

"How a man can profess to be a minister of God and at the same time rob God of the right to dictate what he shall teach is an incomprehensibility to me. How they can teach mankind the personality of God—His will, and all that pertains to godliness, and not receive any directions or advice from Him above, is truly a perplexity, for God said, Luke 10:22, 'that no man knoweth who the Son is but the Father; and who the Father is but the Son and he to whom the son will reveal Him.' 'And this is life eternal to know thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent,' are the words of John 17:3. Now if this is life eternal—to know God and His beloved Son, and if we can't know them but by revelation, how dare a man even make the assertion that we need no revelation to gain eternal life?

"Again, Paul declares, 1 Cor. 12:3. that no man can say that Jesus is the Christ but by the Holy Ghost.' The true servant of God will not tell you of Jesus alone, but by the Spirit of God by which alone he can know the Son of our Master, he will make you acquainted with Him. And if he bears a testimony strengthened by knowledge of Jesus he bears the spirit of prophecy—for John says, Rev. 19:10, that 'the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy,' which by its very nature is a medium of revelation from God. In the face of these plain facts I cannot see how a minister can with consistency tell the people that revelation is done away; nor can I see how he can convince the people that they as Saints of God need no revelation. For on the day of Pentecost the Holy Ghost was promised to all who obeyed the Gospel, and those who obeyed the Gospel then received that spirit which leads and guides into all truth, and 'bears witness with our spirits that we are the children of God,' Rom. 8:16. This Spirit of God was a part of the Gospel 1900 years ago, and if it was then, and God is unchangeable, it must be today, and we bear testimony that it is. And this is not all. Moses says, 'Would to God that all the Lord's people were prophets.' Solomon says, 'Where there is no vision the people perish,' while Amos declares that 'surely the Lord God will do nothing, but He revealeth His secrets unto His servants the prophets.'

"My time is limited, so I will leave you to ponder upon these few remarks, which I hope you will strive to know as I know that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is true and has been again restored to earth, by which the channel of communication with God is opened and used today for the upbuilding of God's kingdom in the earth."

Elder W. T. Davis.

"The only aim that the Elders of Israel have in leaving their fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters and all that is most dear to them by ties of kindred and affection, is to better their fellow-man. They believe, in fact, know, as did Peter, Paul and the early Saints, that the message they bring is precisely the same as the one designated by Paul as being the 'power of God unto salvation' unto all those who will accept it and ever live in obedience to the same. The promise made by the Master, 'If you will do the will you shall know of the doctrine,' has been fulfilled on their heads, and with this perfect knowledge of what their mission is they go forth as the Apostles of old with the same message, traveling as Jesus commanded, two by two, without money, without food, and lodging only as the Lord brings friends to provide for them. They have sought and found the pearl of great price, the faith which was once delivered to the Saints, hence they go forth brave as lions, but meek and humble before their Maker. They are not unlike the early Christians, who, rather than to deny God's truth, would be torn to pieces on racks, fed to wild animals, burned at the stake and in furnaces, martyred in every way, all for the testimony of Jesus.

The Mormon Elders are bringing to you the same tidings that were so bitterly opposed in the days of Christ, and they are meeting with the same opposition.

"Let me assure you that there is not an Elder who would even harm a hair of your head. The only object they entertain is the salvation of the human family. They teach that even the appearance of evil should be shunned, and that obedience to the Gospel, with a pure, holy and upright life ever afterwards, will bring eternal life; that there is but one Gospel and one mediator between God and man, and whosoever tries to climb up in any other way shall be counted a thief and a robber. It is further taught that 'man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God;' that 'where there is no vision the people perish;' that the Lord will do nothing save He reveals His secrets unto His servants the prophets;' in fact, all truth, whether religious, scientific or whatsoever it might be, is for the salvation of man and is included in the great saving plan.

"Judge the Elders by their fruits, compare the doctrine with your Bible, and receive with meekness the Gospel taught by the Latter-day Saints, which is the 'power of God unto salvation.' It is our object to seek first the kingdom of God, to save ourselves, and to count no sacrifice too great to make for the salvation of the souls of man."

A quartetet composed of Elders Stokes, Parker, Elton and Summerhays rendered some sweet music.

President Rich announced that there would be preaching every Sunday in the Congregational Hall, to which all were invited.

There has been some adverse criticism on the following passage from the Book of Mormon:

"And it came to pass that after he (Coriantumr) had smote off the head of Shiz, that Shiz raised upon his hands and fell; and after that he had struggled for breath, he died." (Book of Ether, 15:31.)

It is claimed that the rising on the hands after decapitation is an impossibility.

The following from a dispatch to the Liverpool Daily Post of Feb. 1, 1900, on the occasion of the seizure of Spion Kop, in Natal, should effectually silence all criticism on that passage:

"There was an extraordinary incident in Wednesday's battle. One of the Lancaster men, while in the act of firing in a prone position, had his head taken clean off by a large shell. To the astonishment of his comrades, the headless body quietly rose, stood upright for a few seconds, and then fell."—Millennial Star.

THE DARK AGES.

By A. ARROWSMITH.

The eleventh century produced a very notable Pontiff by the name of Gregory, the Seventh, a very arrogant man, who would not stand opposition from any potentate on earth. He was the most ambitious, sagacious, crafty and interpid Pontiff Rome had known. He desired the whole world to bow in submission to his supreme power, issuing laws against simony and concubinage, compelling all priests to live the lives of celebates. He took all rights from rulers, both civil and ecclesiastical, investing all authority within himself.

The emperor, Henry the Fourth, of Germany, had the audacity to practice simony, or the selling of church offices within his realm, thus rebelling against the mandates of Pope Gregory for which he was compelled to beg absolution in tears. It is stated that he stood three days barefooted in the snow, seeking the clemency and forgiveness of Gregory, who sneered and derided this obsequious, abject monarch. Seven years later Henry succeeded in driving Gregory from the papal chair, after great wars and bloodshed, enthroning the Pope Clement, the Third, in his place.

The great religious crusades started at this period. Pope Gregory, the Seventh, organized armies to invade Palestine and drive out the Saracens, but his quarrel with the Emperor Henry stopped him from carrying out his project. In 1093, the renowned Peter, the Hermit, commenced preaching throughout Europe, inciting all Christians to this Holy war. He was a very fanatical character, but had power to sway the multitudes, and through his appeals, which were supposed to be tempered with divine approval, succeeded in gaining thousands of followers. He exhibited a letter, which he claimed to have received from Heaven, sanctioning these bloody wars. Thousands flocked to him, volunteering their services and advancing to this, the first, crusade against the Mahometans. The approval, sanction and blessing of the Pope, Urban the Second, was given to all who would swear fealty to the Christian cause and work to suppress and destroy the baneful influence of Mahometanism. Monks, artists, laborers, tradesmen, merchants, boys, girls, slaves, malefactors, prostitutes and profligates of every description were banded together to drive from Palestine the followers of Mahomet, who were supposed to be desecrating the land made holy by Jesus and the early saints. This mob, under the guidance of Peter the Hermit, were without the least martial law and order so necessary to military bodies and consequently failed in their expedition. The majority of these eleventh century mobocrats had no particular religious desire to gratify, the chief aim being plunder, devastation and spoil. Eighteen hundred thousand started in sections, under different commanders, leaving a track of rapine and ruin in their course. However thousands of them were slain for their temerity.

A band of 80,000 Normans, who excelled in military skill and display, was raised in France. These were led by very able commanders and conducted a fine campaign under Godfrey. The idiotic rabble under Peter the Hermit, was signally defeated and cut to pieces by the Saracens under the renowned warrior Soliman. This dispute as to the ownership of the land of Palestine engaged the attention of all Europe who were enthused with religious zeal and fanaticism. Princes and dukes mortgaged their possessions and enlisted in these wars which were conducted in the name of religion under the full approval of the Pope. This filled the people with a fervid desire to excel in making sacrifices. They willed their property to the church, clothed themselves in coats of mail and were even willing to give their lives for this misnomer, Christianity. Thus were they made fanatics of by their religious infatuation. Prince Robert, the son of William the Conquerer, mortgaged his Dutchy and his vast possessions in Normandy to his brother William (Rufus) that he might defray the expense of equipping soldiery to fight in Palestine. Many wealthy land owners gave up their possessions, expecting to lay down their lives if necessary, in this cause. In consequence the church was greatly enriched. Palestine was finally subdued and Jerusalem taken by Godfrey. The rabble dispersed returned home as glorious warriors of the cross, laden with relics of supposed sacred things which were adored and worshipped by the ignorant and superstitious wretches.

This century was particularly marked for its display of ignorance, frenzy and fanatical superstition. Religious bigots have been known in all ages, but I think at this time liberty and truth were as little known and practiced as at any previous time in the history of the world. The Roman Catholics would not tolerate anything that conflicted with their egotistical notions, and the Mahometans and Christians equally believed in exterminating each other to gratify their ambitious bigotry. This practice has been looked upon with much leniency in the past as it invariably appears in the guise of religion. The reformers in the sixteenth century were led by the same religious fervor. Luther in his great argument with Zwingli on the sacrement rite, believing in the Roman Catholic theory of transubstantiation, exhibited his stubborn bigoted spirit when he declared that he would not accept common sense, carnal arguments or mathematical proofs. It was the same intoleration that suppressed truth as taught by Bruno, Copernicus and Galileo, burning the one and torturing the other. John Calvin, the noted founder of much modern sectarianism, by his bigoted wickedness, burnt Michael Servetus to death by a slow fire because he had the temerity to question the trinity of the Godhead, not being able to comprehend the beauties in the absurd and fallacious ideas of the three in one theory. Throughout all ages, when truth has been introduced, it has met much opposition from religious bigotry. In late years Jenner the discoverer of vaccination barely escaped with his life. Simpson, the Scotch physician, the discoverer of anasthetics, only fifty-three years ago, was denounced throughout Europe and America by leading Protestant ministers. Not many years have elapsed since geology was denounced as being not a science but a dark art, introduced by the devil in confliction to the testimony of the divine record. Religious bigots started the fires in Smithfield and with their narrow and contracted views have ever been exceedingly cruel, burning, driving, mobbing and ill treating all who opposed them, or had views that conflicted with theirs.

At the head and in the van of the mobs raised against the Latter Day Saints, as against the former day saints, we find the same divine (?) pharisaical, long faced, religious hypocrites, who are just as ready to cry "crucify Him, burn him," and with blood and fire gratify their insatiable lust for power, with the sword and not with the peaceful weapons of reason and truth which Jesus, whom they pretend to follow, taught them. . Is it not true that the bloody wars in the past and present can almost invariably be laid to this vile spirit of bigotry and intoleration?

In this century, among the Roman Catholics, the people had a peculiar mania for torturing their own bodies and inflicting penalties on each other. D'Aubigne states that in Italy "nobles and peasants, old and young, even children of five years of age whose only covering was a cloth tied around the middle went in pairs by the thousands to church during the depth of winter and armed with whips, flogged and scourged each other without pity, the streets resounding with groans and cries from the poor ignorant sufferers." Such was the terrible condition of Christianity in the eleventh century.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

A man who gives his children habits of industry, provides for them better than by giving them a fortune.

At the special meeting of the Conference Presidents, among other things of importance, a letter was drafted to be sent to the Presidents of Stakes and Bishops of Wards in Zion, setting forth some recommendations for Elders coming to the south.

An exchange gets off this note: "If men are the salt of the earth, women are undoubtedly sugar. Salt is a necessity—sugar a luxury. Vicious men are saltpeter, stern men are rock salt, nice men are table salt. Old maids are brown sugar, good matrons are loaf sugar and pretty girls are fine pulverized sugar." Pass the pulverized sugar, please.

DECLINE OF THE TRIBUNE.

The Salt Lake Tribune, in its issue of February 14th, editorially defends the wholesale libeling of the "Mormon" people, in this city, by a pretended meek and lowly follower of the Lamb, Edgar E. Folk, and tells a deliberate falsehood to do it. The Tribune quotes from President Rich's interview, published in the Chattanooga News of January 24th and reproduced later in the Star, in answer to Folk's tirade, from the First Baptist pulpit of Chattanooga, and published in the Chattanooga News of January 22d. Then to accomplish its nefarious purpose of hoodwinking its readers, it quotes from Folk's article in the Chattanooga News of January 31st, a week after the reply quoted from, and says: "It was for the above that Ben Rich waxed wroth and asked, 'Suppose a Mormon Elder was to malign and make such statements about any people in the south as Mr. Folk made about my people, how long would it be before that Elder would be dangling at the end of a rope?" The fact of the matter is that the article quoted by the Tribune was not placed before the public here by Folk until after President Rich had replied to the infamous utterances of the Reverend in the First Baptist pulpit, of this city, and what caused "Ben Rich" to rise up in righteous indignation was such base and wholesale lies that the most bitter enemy of "Mormonism," his Satanic Majesty, must have blushed with shame. We wonder if the Tribune read the report of Folk's abuse, or, if it did, has it sunk so low as to sanction and defend such statements about honest, respected, virtuous "Mormon" men and women, as the following: "That in one county only 2 per cent. of the marriages were not forced." "In one city of about 3,000 there have been no marriages for two years that were not forced." "If you were to hang a petticoat on a bush half a dozen Mormons would immediately make for it," and "how old men bargained for and married girls 12 and 15 years old, because girls of marriageable age were not to be found."

It will be remembered that Folk went to Utah to learn for himself of conditions there—to know the truth, and, after a flying trip of two weeks he comes back and parades such rot as this before the public, declaring under the cloak of religion, like other hypocrites of the same ilk, that that is the way he found things among the "Mormons" in Utah. It is safe to say Folk never had any more intention of telling the truth when he came back from Utah than he has of hearing and obeying the voice of God, unless the almighty dollar is made a part of the contract.

Rev. (?) Folk's tirade was so disgusting that ladies of his own congregation left the building in disgust, and before the News would publish a report of the sensational effusion the manuscript was submitted to attorneys and the greater part stricken out on account of so much that was wholesale libel on its face. It is a wonder that any decent people remained to hear him through, and any public journal who defends such putrid untruths about respectable people is a foul blot on the community and a menace to the good government and progress of the state. Has the Tribune come to this?

If a "Mormon" Apostle were to say, from the pulpit in the Tabernacle that 98 per cent. of the Gentile women were void of virtue; that if you should hang a woman's petticoat on a bush half a dozen of the leading Gentiles of Utah would rush for it, and then should continue his remarks in such indecent language, that "Mormon" ladies would leave the building in disgust; if on its face his discourse was so libelous that it was found necessary to go through the hands of attorneys before even the Deseret News would publish the same; and if prejudice existed in Utah against Gentiles as it does against "Mormons" in the world, and courts of justice, and newspapers were not inclined to be fair, what punishment would the Tribune recommend to be meted out to the Apostle?

There was a time when P. H. Lannan was filled with enough honor that he could afford to be fair even to an enemy; upon one occasion he refused to allow the wife of his avowed enemy to give him information of a damaging character, and gallantly informed the woman proffering such testimony that he could not accept it from the home of him whom he despised, and advised the would-be informant to go to her husband's friends and not to his enemy with such information. Those who knew P. H. Lannan best admired him most for many honorable acts of this kind.

We are surprised that Lannan, if he still retains his old-time honor, would allow the columns of his paper to become the defender of a man who made such a wholesale attack upon the virtue of the "Mormon" ladies of Utah as did Rev. Folk. If Judge Goodwin, with his old-time big-heartedness, had witnessed the delivery of that tirade of blackguardism, and could have seen respectable ladies leave the church in disgust, we believe he would have hesitated before his anxiety to defend a slanderer would have caused him to utter such a deliberate falsehood as he did in his issue of Feb. 14th, by selecting a portion of a communication given Jan. 31st and saying this was the cause of "Ben Rich's interview," which appeared in print Jan. 24th, and in which Mr. Rich declared that if a "Mormon" Elder had delivered such a nasty, indecent, contemptible assault upon any people, in the south, it would not be long before that Elder would be dangling at the end of a rope. If Goodwin still retained the high-toned dignity he once possessed, when he gave notice that he would resign from the editorial chair of the Salt Lake Tribune if that paper could not adopt a more dignified crusade against the Mormon leaders than by referring to some of them as the "one-eyed pirate of the Wahsatch," he would not now be calling people blackguards as an excuse for opening his editorial columns in defence of a blackguard. If Lannan had Goodwin of a few years ago could have been present and listened to the filth belched forth by Folk's slimy mouth, they would have done just as some other respectable people did do, "got up and left." But perhaps Lannan and Goodwin of years gone by are dead.

In conclusion, can it be possible that the Tribune has sunk so low that they actually furnished Folk with his muck, and are now forced to defend him in order to screen themselves?

History of the Southern States Mission.

September, 1895—

On the evening of the 5th inst. Elders O. S. Taylor and C. W. Nibley, Jr., stopped with a family at Oak Grove, Westmoreland county, Virginia, where they were treated quite cool. Next morning before taking their departure the Elders asked for a drink of water, which was given them by a woman who was a Baptist missionary worker. Taking their leave, they had not journeyed far when both were taken violently ill and for about five hours were subjected to almost incessant vomiting. Upon recovering the Elders administered to each other, and immediately both felt relieved. The Elders were confident the water given them was poisoned, and that nothing but the hand of the Lord delivered them from its fatal effects.

Upon his return from Utah President Kimball went direct to Kentucky, where he met the Elders in conference capacity at Hawesville, Hancock county, Sept. 14th and 15th. All Elders laboring in the state were in attendance. Five public and three priesthood meetings were held. At the public meetings there was a large attendance, who heard the plan of salvation taught as was laid down by our Savior. Through the prayer of faith Elders Naylor and Spencer were healed, besides several believers were administered unto with good results. It was a time of great rejoicing among Elders and Saints.

On the 21st and 22d insts. the Middle Tennessee conference was held at Smyrna, Rutherford county. Four public meetings and three priesthood meetings were held. Interesting remarks were made by the Elders and much valuable instruction was imparted by President Kimball. A very fair and intelligent audience was in attendance, an excellent spirit prevailing throughout the conference.

The person suspected of burning the meeting house on Kanawha Two Mile, West Virginia, in August, is now a maniac. Surely swift retribution follows the evil doer.

During the present month the Elders have labored with renewed energy and with much success.

General good health prevailed, except in the Texas Conference, where several of the Elders are still troubled with chills.

October, 1895—

The warm months having been largely devoted to revisiting Saints and friends, the Elders are now resuming their labors with renewed energy and spirit. The labors during the summer have been very fruitful. Many souls have been stirred up to greater diligence and the untoward transgressor handled with righteous justice. Thus we find new branches organized, old ones revived, Sunday Schools established and strenuous efforts being put forth to lead, encourage and direct the Saints in the paths of truth and righteousness.

On Oct. 1st the Florida Conference was established, with James A. West as its President.

Three conferences were held during this month. The East Tennessee conference was held at Mr. Westley Barnett's, Anderson county, Oct. 12th and 13th. Four public and several council meetings were held; the spirit of the Lord was abundantly poured out upon all who addressed the conference. A very favorable report of the proceedings was given by the Anderson County News.

The North Alabama conference convened at Kossuth, Alcorn county, Mississippi, Oct. 19th and 20th. The place selected being in an isolated and sparsely settled section, the meetings were not largely attended, but those present were fed the "Bread of Life" as it fell from the lips of the humble servants of the Lord. At the council meeting President Kimball instructed the Elders with much force and earnestness, exhorting them to faithfulness, thus inspiring them with renewed energy and zeal.

On the 26th, 27th and 28th insts. the South Carolina conference was held at Lake City, Williamsburg county. The meetings were held in a spacious bowery which had been erected for the occasion. They were largely attended, some of the Saints and friends having traveled a distance of twenty miles in order to be present. In this, as in the other conferences, the Elders bore their testimonies and spoke upon the first principles of the Gospel. President Kimball's remarks were characterized with much force and plainness. This conference is one of the largest in the mission. The labors of the Elders have been very successful, one hundred baptisms having taken place since the holding of the previous conference.

During October thirty Elders arrived from Zion, the largest number that has ever yet arrived in one month.

In Maiden Meditation.

As I sit in my room looking out of the window at the violets and lilacs and apple blossoms; as the odor of the spring flowers and the fruit trees in bloom arises on the warm spring air and comes in at my casement window; as the hum of the dusty, yellow, busy bee reaches my ear and the silvery twitter of the birds comes pouring about me; how like, I think, is all the world to our busy human life. Those springing flowers, they are like children and young people, tender, fragile, innocent, not yet tried by the storms of life; not yet hardened or shriveled by the fierce heats, the passion of summer; nor ripened by the quiet, dreamy autumn, nor saddened by early frosts, nor chilled by the storms of winter.

Our minds are like the garden below my window. If carefully tilled and seeded in the spring time, a divine power will cause them to bring forth flowers and fruits. If they are not cultivated they will be overrun with weeds.

It is not enough, either, that we simply strive to keep down the weeds, without planting any seeds of wholesome fruits or lovely flowers; for even if we succeeded in this, our minds would simply be barren—a mental waste—a desert—like the alkali flats on the great American desert, or the burning sands of the Sahara.

It should not be our only duty to simply keep out evil seeds, we must plant good seed as well, which are sown only by the Good Sower, our Lord and Savior.

We cannot neglect to sow wheat, for the enemy will sow tares. He will come in the night, or when we are not aware, and fill our minds with evil, our mental soil with thorns and thistles.

Unless our mind is filled with good growths, the enemy will have easy access and will find a soil ready prepared for him.

"An idle brain is the devil's workshop;" or as another proverbial line declares, "For Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do."

The enemy of our souls has always the power to put evil into our minds unless we have filled our minds with good. We may not always be able to keep out the suggestions of the adversary, evil thoughts may arise unsought, evil promptings may uninvited beckon or urge us to wrong, but these things cannot take root without our sanction.

We can drive them away from us. We can refuse shelter to these birds of ill omen, these seeds of evil. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you," says the apostle. And he adds: "Draw nigh unto God and He will draw nigh unto you."

This is the secret then; not simply to resist evil, but also to do good; not merely the negative don't, but the positive do; not merely the exclusion of evil, but the cultivation of good; not the living up and weeding out of the tares, but the sowing and watering of the good seed so that our minds shall be gardens of the Lord filled with flowers and good fruits; that it may be said of us as the Prophet said of Israel in olden time: "How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!"

As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the rivers side; as the trees of lign-aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

Abstracts From Correspondence.

Elder Jas. H. Sullivan, of North Carolina Conference, writes to the Star and says that in the spring of 1898 he was convinced that the Gospel of Jesus Christ had been restored to the earth through the great Latter-day Prophet, Joseph Smith. He says:

"On March 20th of the same year I was baptized by Elder Lewis Swenson, and since that time I have greatly rejoiced in the cause of truth. In October, 1899, I was notified that my service was needed in the missionary field, and was called to labor in Goldsboro, N. C. It was here I was set apart for my labor and ordained to the Melchisedek Priesthood by Elder Lyman. I was afterwards called to labor in Onslow county, in company with Elder F. A. Gay. Since that time I have seen the promises of the Savior fulfilled (Mark 16-17). I have seen the sick healed, heard the gift of tongues, and interpretations, etc. Therefore I feel to bear my testimony to the truthfulness of the Gospel of Christ. I know that Joseph Smith was a true Prophet of God; that the kingdom which Daniel saw (Dan. 2-44) has been set up, never more to be thrown down, and that the signs are truly following the Latter-day Saints."

Brother J. C. Milsted, of Quitman, Miss., writes interestingly of his conversion to the Mormon faith. He, like many others, had preconceived notions and ideas of our faith, but unlike many of his fellow-Christians he set to work to show them wherein they were wrong, and, as he thought, pointing out to them the better way. He says that it was only a matter of a very short time before he was convinced to his entire satisfaction that the Elders were masters of the situation, and that he was as the clay in the potter's hands. The evil spirit at first tempted him to rise in open rebellion, and like many others use brute force, but on a second and more sober thought knew that the impulse was not from a divine source, and banished it from his heart. "I was invited to go to the Scriptures and search out the plan of salvation as taught by the Master. Like a flash of lightning it burst upon me that indeed I had only a dead form, holding fast to the letter, but refusing the living word. I now made a study of the word of God as never before, and am pleased to say to all men that the Gospel of Christ is upon the earth, with all of its gifts and powers and blessings. I was baptized on Oct. 1st, 1899, by Elder E. R. DeWitt, and am rejoicing much in the truth."

Had the Mormons been Methodists the praises sung over their success in Utah would have been heard around the world. But if they had been Methodists they would not have been driven out of the United States. Had they been bogus Christians they would have been too busy sending other people to hell to have ever thought of colonizing on a barren desert 1,000 miles from heretics. The sublime industry and heroic achievements of the Mormons among the mountains of the west have been studiously ignored and viciously misrepresented, not because of any real or suspected immorality or menace to "the American home," but simply and solely because they were heretics to other sects. Anti-Mormonism never did and does not now care for polygamy —it hates the Mormon Church. A mean, whisky-guzzling government official in Utah once said to me: "Damn 'em, all 'e rights 'e Morm's hez is t' pay taxes! 'Fthey don' like that I'm gitout!" That was for years the anti-Mormon spirit in Salt Lake City. The struggle was to get control and tax the Mormons out. That, too, was done largely. That is, many of the poorer Mormons were forced to leave their homes in the city on account of increased taxation levied by anti-Mormon officials. That old spirit is now revived by this new crusade, not because of polygamy but because the Mormons were compelled to take the power to levy taxes out of the hands of their enemies.

A popular impression has been craftily created by the anti-Mormons of Utah that its priesthood and polygamy are the cause of all hostility to Mormonism. The shallowness of the pretense is easily seen when you consider that the most vicious of anti-Mormons accept the Bible as the infalliable word and will of God. Yet the Bible teaches priesthood and polygamy. Hence priesthood and polygamy cannot be the secret of anti-Mormonism. The Protestants have been trying for a century to get God into our national constitution and to make Jesus Christ the ruler of the nation. Catholics and Protestants outnumber Mormons a thousand to one. As long as they believe in theocracy they cannot quarrel with the Mormons for holding the same belief. But if they were afraid the Mormons might get into the kingdom ahead of them they would become jealous, and jealousy is the womb of hate. The evangelical churches fought Mormonism from its appearance, not because of polygamy and priesthood, for there was neither priesthood nor polygamy in it then, but because it was a more enticing faith than their own. Mormonism was running smoothly and growing rapidly without original sin, total depravity and eternal torment as its steady theological diet. Therefore, it was infidelity. Therefore, it must be destroyed. Advocates of the undying worm, the lake of fire and the endless roast drove the Mormons out of the United States. When they made the Utah desert a prosperous land, adventurers crowded in to make speculation and riot among them, but found them united against invaders. That was put down against them. Yet a people driven into exile five times would be idiotic not to unite for their own protection and, as soon as possible, prepare themselves to refuse to be driven again. When their old enemies learned what advancement the Mormons had made in Utah they came to send them to perdition again, but it was too late. Then they raised the outcry against polygamy. That brought in the aid of congress, the destruction of the incorporated church and the confiscation of church property, but did not crush Mormonism. A thousand polygamists went to the penitentiary, and still Mormonism would not collapse. The Mormons did not hanker after salvation from a hot spell in another life. They were too busy. They had hell enough here. There was no brimstone in their conception of the hereafter. A few might falter, but the mass stood by their faith, submitted as best they could to the insolence of their enemies, waiting upon the Lord to rescue them. Then came the scheme to disfranchise them. Disfranchisement was the culmination of forty years of effort to conquer the Mormons. If this calamity should fall the people would be at the mercy of unscrupulous legislators who would practice the sentiment of him who said all the rights the Mormons had were to "pay taxes" or "git out." Before this danger the leader yielded and declared that to save the people from ruin he would take no more plural wives (he was then about 90) himself and would advise his people to do likewise. That was in September, 1890. Two weeks later the church, in conference, accepted the advice of its president that polygamous marriages should cease.

Then it was seen that the Mormons would not abandon their homes—that their persecutors should not grow rich upon property the fleeing Saints must sacrifice. They had conquered by yielding, and there was no other scheme to be sprung upon them. Those who hoped to crush Mormonism were forced to accept the situation. The old political status disappeared and Mormons and Gentiles came together as democrats or republicans, each party seeking to gain control of available public offices. Men who had for years studied how they might throw increased difficulties upon the Mormons were tumbling over each other in their eagerness to reach the Mormon leaders, to profess their profound esteem and to make known their willingness to aid the Latter Day Saints by accepting office at their hands. The new love was touching, but was it sincere? We shall see. The Mormons were rejoiced to find at last an atmosphere of at least seeming peace about them, and gladly gave their old enemies the offices they desired. The offices secured, the men who were going to "boom Utah" proceeded to a recklessness of "improvement" that increased public debt and taxes to an alarming degree. The Mormons disliked to protest; they could not "grin," so they bore it with long, sober faces. Then statehood was secured and the Mormons began to elect their own more cautious men. The new lovers, chiefly office seekers, scented defeat. The old snarl appeared. Startled politicians appealed to willing ministers who needed funds sadly—and the old outcry against the Mormons and polygamy was revived in 1898.

THE NEW CRUSADE.

What basis is there for this renewed fight against the Mormons? When Wilford Woodruff declared that he would advise the people to cease plural marriage, and when his advice was accepted by vote of the church, there were men living in Utah who were already in polygamy. Most of them were old men, yet there were young and middle-aged men who had more than one wife. All through the government fight against polygamy these men had lived with their wives as far as they could in secrecy. Would they be likely to abandon their wives when peace had been received?

To the Mormons, marriage is one of the most sacred of their ordinances. It is solemnized by a priest in the name of God. It is "sealed" in heaven also and is to continue forever. The true Mormon cannot ignore the claims of his plural wife without being false to his vows and his God. No manifesto of Wilford Woodruff, no vote of a conference, could annul a plural marriage or engage that any Mormon should cease to care for his plural wives. This fact was as well known by every non-Mormon in Utah in 1890 as it is today. It was understood by every gentile politician, by every representative of the government, by every minister in Utah that polygamists had been all along secretly living with their polygamous wives. All knew that this would continue, yet all agreed that no further notice should be taken of the matter and polygamy should be left to die its natural death. That understanding reached, no further effort was made to arrest "cohabs." Polygamists lived openly with their wives and, as was expected, children were here and there born—in one instance, at least, we hear of "twins." So matters stood from the close of 1890 for seven years. In 1897 we had a semi-centennial celebration of the arrival of the pioneer Mormons. In that "jubilee" Mormons and non-Mormons all joined heartily, including the ministers who have since become rabid anti-Mormons, including also the editor of the anti-Mormon paper who was so harmonious then that he delivered an address when the Brigham Young statue was unveiled, who was so far inspired by the holy ghost or some other spirit (he is more familiar with other spirits) as to declare in his paper that the Mormons had founded here the "new civilization. Yet at that very moment he and all non-Mormons in Utah knew that those who were in polygamy when "the manifesto" was issued, in 1890, had been living openly with their wives for seven years and that children were being born in some of the families. No objection was made, I repeat, until the Mormons, to stay the increase of public debt, begun to fill important public offices with prudent men of their own faith. There is no evidence that the church had anything to do with this. It was the work of men who owned property, and were anxious to protect it. That this is true is seen in subsequent political action. A majority of the Mormons are democrats. The democrats were rapidly getting control of the state. In the municipal election of Salt Lake last November the republicans elected their ticket over a known democratic majority of voters. Why? Because the republicans ran their canvass on the line of the anti-Mormon elections of a decade ago—the gentile democrat voted the republican ticket. That is, while the Mormons have kept the compact made when the people divided on national party lines, in 1891, the others have largely broken it and we have now the democratic and republican parties with the republican party working as an anti-Mormon party largely. The excitement in Washington over the fact that the republican Utah postmasters at Provo and Logan have been all along in the same boat with democratic Roberts is amusing because of the frantic efforts of men to show that they did not know that those men were old polygamists and had been living with their wives since the "manifesto" of 1890. Of course they knew it. No man could have lived in Utah since 1890 without knowing it. From 1890 until statehood came United States district attorney and marshal for Utah knew it and yet so generally was it understood that the old condition was to be left to die of old age that those officers made almost no effort to disturb "cohabs." The postmasters in Provo and Logan were chosen because they were influential republicans, and their wives did not count —then. The anxiety over them now is that this excitement will defeat the hope of the republicans to carry Utah in 1900, and when this whole matter is analyzed it is found that the anti-Mormon agtitators of Utah, with one exception, are republicans, and the exception is a democrat who, having most earnestly defended the Mormons ten years ago, was not recognized by them when they were distributing political offices. The Catholics in Utah are democrats and they have taken no part in this crusade. But the evangelical ministers and sects are republican. The Mormons are democrats, largely. The ministers have worked hard for 25 years to "save" the Mormons and yet have never "saved" one who was in good standing in his own church. When polygamy was given up, eastern interests in Utah missions fell, funds went low and the wolf was howling in the back yard. The politicians who had lived for years on salaries as government officers or later in state or city offices were in the same "fix"—they had to raise hell or starve—they did the first and, if I am not much mistaken, will do the second also or—"git out."

Florida Conference.

Written for the Southern Star.

Some two months ago a circular letter was sent out by President C. G. Parker to the Elders of the Florida Conference, notifying them that they would meet in the city of Jacksonville in conference Feb. 11-12, 1900. Pursuant to instructions in this letter, the metropolis of the "Land of Flowers" had for special guests in her hotels Saturday night, Feb. 10th, forty-four servants of God. The Elders entered the city in good health and high spirits.

Arrangements.

President C. G. Parker and his first counselor, George W. Skidmore, entered the city Feb. 1st for the purpose of renting a hall and making arrangements with hotels. In order that the flames of public prejudice might not be fanned by that class of people who disregard the heavenly injunction, "Prove all things," the public was kept oblivious of our purposes until Saturday evening, Feb. 10th, when handbills were scattered through the entire city. After making arrangements with hotels they secured the use of the Park Opera House, also having 2,000 attractive hand-bills printed. The two leading newspapers, "The Florida Times-Union and Citizen" and "The Metropolis," were paid to advertise our meetings through their columns, but were forced by public opinion to break their contract, not having backbone enough to stand for the right by keeping their word of honor in the face of public opposition.

Morning Session—Sunday, Feb, 11th, 1900.

Eleven o'clock was the hour appointed to meet in the morning service. Before the hour arrived the forty-four Elders were seated in a circle on the stage. They were anxiously waiting for President Rich to put in his appearance. The parquet was now filling up with people: about fifty Saints seated themselves near the stage. When the short hand on the clock pointed to 11 meeting was called to order by President C. G. Parker, who made a few introductory remarks, stating the object of our visit to the metropolis. He also made mention of President Rich's delay, stating that he would in all probability arrive on the 2 o'clock train. The fifteen selected singers then sang "Beautiful Day of Rest," after which the invocation was offered by Elder G. W. Williams. The hymn, "When shall we meet the dear Savior above," was next rendered. President C. G. Parker then announced the receipt of a telegram from President Rich, which stated that the train was delayed and he would arrive about 2:30 p.m.

Elder E. L. Pomeroy was then introduced as the first speaker. He spoke at some length on the unchangeableness of the Gospel, bearing testimony that the Gospel of Christ was the power of God unto salvation. Following Elder Pomeroy's remarks a quartette was rendered by Elders Parker, Sutherland, Busham and Lindberg. Elder N. U. S. C. Jenson was introduced as the next speaker. He discoursed nearly an hour on the necessity of continuous revelation. "O, my Father," was sung by the choir, after which the benediction was offered.

Afternoon Session—2:30 P. M.

President Ben E. Rich and Counselor L. R. Anderson arrived on the 2 o'clock train. In a very few minutes after alighting from the cars they were on the stage of the Park Opera House, shaking hands with the Elders. Promptly at 2:30 meeting was called to order by President C. G. Parker. A fair and representative congregation was present. After opening exercises President Ben E. Rich arose and spoke on persecution. He spoke to the point and made plain the fact that persecution was a heritage of the Saints of God; and that it was a distinguishing characteristic of those whom God had chosen out of the world. President Rich was followed by Counselor L. R. Anderson, who spoke on the loyalty of the Latter-day Saints, citing as proofs such incidents as the ready response of President Young to the call of the chief executive of the nation in the days of the war with Mexico—the unfurling to the breeze of the stars and stripes on Mexican soil, 2,000 miles away from civilization.

Singing, "Praise to the man," etc.

Benediction was offered by President Ben E. Rich.

Evening Session—7:30 P.M.

When the hour of commencing arrived the parquette of the Opera House was nearly filled, and people were still coming in. Meeting was called to order promptly at the hour appointed by President Parker. After the opening exercises President Rich quietly arose and stepped to a table standing on the center of the stage. In an unassuming manner he introduced his subject by reading Gal. 1:8 and 2 John 9:10. Having read this Scripture he stepped out a little nearer the front of the stage and entered into a detailed elucidation of the first four principles of the Gospel. The audience remained silent until the speaker made reference to the mode of baptism. At this juncture a number showed, by withdrawing, that they belonged to the class of which Paul wrote: "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts will they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears." After the speaker had shown what one must do to be saved —quoting Acts 2:38—he cited the condition of Christendom as proof that the world was not abiding in the doctrine of Christ. In alluding to the departure of Christendom from the Gospel annunciated by the Master, the President made reference to preaching for hire. He said Peter and Paul's way of preaching was out of fashion now. Eternal punishment was dwelt upon at some length. The speaker said that the "Big Hell," "Big Heaven" doctrine was responsible, to a great extent, for infidelity. At times, while the President was defending the justice of God by making plain the fact that all mankind would be judged according to their works, people in the audience could be heard to say: "That's so." He concluded his convincing and eloquent discourse by inviting the public to investigate the tenets of the Latter-day Saints, saying "there is more in Mormonism than you think."

Singing, "We thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet."

Benediction, Elder L. R. Anderson.

When the house was cleared the Elders were called to order on the stage by President Rich. The release of President C. G. Parker was announced. President Ben E. Rich said, in allusion to President Parker's work: "If the church can be as well satisfied with my labors when I am released as I am with President Parker's, I will be satisfied." Elder George W. Skidmore was then appointed to succeed President Parker.

Priesthood Meeting.

At 9 o'clock Monday morning, Feb. 12th, the Elders, with President Rich, Counselor Anderson and a few Saints, met at the Opera House in council meeting. After a quartette was rendered by Elders Parker, Bushman, Sutherland and Lindburg, prayer was offered by President Parker. After each Elder had been questioned by President Rich relative to his feelings, etc., President Parker made a few remarks relative to his labors in the Florida Conference. Elder H. L. Wester, of Sanderson, Fla., next expressed himself as feeling well in the Gospel, being followed by Thomas Canova, of Valdosta, Ga., who also felt well. President Rich then arose and spoke in power, making reference to many special duties of the itinerant Elder; urged faithfulness, purity and integrity. Before the close of meeting the names of Sister Andrews, of Jacksonville, and Elder A. C. Jacobson were presented to the conference to be prayed for. President Rich offered the closing prayer, making mention of these two names. At 2 o'clock the Elders received their assignments to field of labor.

Conclusion.

This conference was the most successful of any held of late years in Florida, and President Rich complimented the Elders on their arrangements. A great deal of prejudice has been allayed. I have been in the city several days since conference and have met with several people that were in attendance Sunday night, and they say they have never heard anything like it in their lives, being much pleased with the services.

N. U. S. C. JENSON,
Clerk of Conference.

South Carolina Conference.

The South Carolina Conference convened at Columbia Saturday and Sunday, February 3d and 4th, in what is known as the Krentzlin Hall on Main street. Those attending the meetings enjoyed the services very much, notwithstanding their disappointment in not having Pres. Ben. E. Rich present, he being called to Ohio on business. The first public meeting was held Saturday night being well attended. Pres. Sylvester Low called the meeting to order and after the opening exercises introduced Pres. L. R. Anderson as first speaker. Elder Anderson said that Mormonism, so called, is no idle dream, but the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ, that we should not judge a thing before hearing it, for our Savior was condemned by the people because they did not understand, nor would they listen to reason. In closing he would state that the Bible contains no record of the gifts and blessings enjoyed by the ancient saints, being done away, but bore a strong testimony to the signs and blessings being enjoyed today.

Elder Openshaw was the next speaker introduced and by scripture and reason showed that the words uttered by the servants of God today were as binding as in ancient times, that Noah did not prove his words from the Bible, but delivered the word of the Lord as he received it direct from Heaven. In conclusion Elder Openshaw said that the commission given to the twelve did not call Paul or those chosen after, but a new revelation must be given from Heaven. If that be the case then why not men be called today by new inspiration and not take the honor unto themselves?

Sunday at 10 a. m. meeting was called to order by Counselor Ray Mecham. Singing—How Firm a Foundation. Invocation by W. J. Hunnicutt. Singing—Praise to the Man.

Elder Bolin being called to speak took as his text 2nd Peter, 1:20. He referred to the fact that he was born in South Carolina, migrating at the age of 13 to Utah. He also stated that the people there were not as misrepresented by their opponents.

Elder M. M. Norman then spoke upon "The Object of Man's Existence," referring to the words of Amos, "Prepare to Meet Your God," Closing hymn, Hark the Song of Jubilee. Benediction by Elder Wood.

A sacrament and testimony meeting was then held, a good spirit prevailing. At 2 p. m. the afternoon services were called to order by Counselor Ray Mecham, singing Prayer is the Soul's Sincere Desire.

Opening prayer by Elder Oliver L. Fuller. Singing—An Angel From on High. A few opening remarks were made by Elder Mecham, who introduced to the audience President Low. In his remarks he plainly pointed out how a great apostacy had taken place and how again the true plan of salvation had been established in purity and plainness. The Gospel, said the speaker, was being taken to the rich as well as the poor. All must hear the message and were invited to investigate the teachings of the Latter Day Saints.

After singing, benediction was offered by Elder Hunnicutt.

At the evening meeting held at 7:30 p. m., remarks were made by President Low and Elder Mecham, who spoke upon the existing conditions of today. President Anderson endorsed what had been said and wanted people to judge us by our fruits. To consider the sacrifice made by the Elders in leaving all which is near and dear to them to bring the message which will exalt mankind if they obey. Appropriate closing remarks were made by President Low and Conference closed by singing "Love at Home." Benediction by President Low.

On Saturday and Sunday preisthood meetings were held where much good instruction was given, the sweet influence of the spirit filling all with joy.

A farewell hand shake and then did South Carolina's noble workers go forth to continue their labors of aiding their followers in righteousness.

OLIVER K. MESERVY,
Clerk of Conference.

EXHORTATION.

By ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

Written for the Southern Star.

Let us, with a willing heart
Labor for the cause of Truth,
While the Lord doth strength impart,
In the bloom of joyous youth.

With the glorious sun at dawn,
Let us don the righteous shield;
Onward in life's early morn—
Forward to the battlefield.

With the sword of Truth, in hand,
Armored with the shield of Love,
Soldiers of the Cross we stand,
Trusting in our God above.

Christ-our-Savior,-Lord and Friend—
Is our Captain in this fray;
"He who conquers to the end,
Shall be saved," we hear him say.

'Tis a contest fierce and long;
By the Spirit we are led;
And our Gen'ral makes us strong—
Equal to the task ahead.

On Mount Zion's tow'ring height
Stands the Holy men of God—
These will guide our steps aright—
In the path our Master trod.

Humble, faithful men of power,
Holding fast the "Iron Rod"—
Stand as watchers on the tower,
To declare the will of God.

Let us heed the words they utter—
Herein lies our safest guide,
Do not 'gainst their counsels mutter—
Nor the priesthood's power deride.

Through the prophets God has spoken
Since the earth began to roll—
Since the first great law was broken
Making man a mortal soul.

Through His prophet God is speaking
Warning words for saints today;
In the struggle we must seek Him
Pay our tithing, fast and pray.

Do not linger—Youth of Zion!
God our help in ages past,
Make you fearless as the lion!
Save you from the tempter's grasp.

Guard against reading too much, or too rapidly. Read rather with attention; lay the book often down; impress on your mind what you have read and reflect upon it.

THE DEAD.

Sister Lucy Gayler died Jan. 27th, 1900, having been a faithful Saint.

Brother Addison Hassell, a true and faithful Saint, died on Wednesday, Jan. 17th, of cancer of the eye. The deceased was baptized April 12th, 1896, and has ever filled with patience the positions of trust given him.

Sister Gernthy Rowenbark departed this life Jan. 16th, 1900. She was baptized in the fall of 1898, and although looked upon with scorn by many she had befriended (for she was an angel of mercy to friend and foe), remained firm to the end.

Word of the death of Elder Henry Ward Berg at Christiana, Norway, was received at the President's office, Salt Lake City, a few days ago. He was a resident of Provo, the son of O. H. Berg, the undertaker, and was set apart for his mission on Oct. 13th last. Deceased was born in August, 1878. The cause of his death was not given.

Sister Mary Maynard, residing at Bozarth, DeKalb county, Tennessee, passed away Wednesday, Feb. 21st. She was 23 years of age, having been a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints but a short time. In her trials and suffering she was ever patient, and leaves a husband, one child and a host of friends to mourn her loss. Sister Maynard bore a faithful testimony to the Gospel of our Lord and Savior.

Elder Stewart.

We are pained to say that a telegram received at this office announces that Elder Alva Stewart, of Mesa, Ariz., died at that place on Feb. 26th. Elder Stewart arrived home from the Southern States on the 24th. He was sick when he left Chattanooga the night of Feb. 19th, but it was not thought the same would result seriously. He labored in the South Carolina Conference and was a tireless worker and filled with the spirit of his mission. Particulars of his death will be given our readers as soon as they are received.

Guilt makes a man a coward; to be truly brave keep a clear conscience.

Sorrow, it should be remembered, is within us, and not in the things about us; so it is with joy.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF PRESIDENT WILFORD WOODRUFF

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

PRESIDENT WILFORD WOODRUFF.

The great and good man whose name and photograph appears with this number of the Star, was the Fourth President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He was born March 1st, 1807, in Farmington, (now called Avon) Hartford county, Connecticut. He, like his predecessors in the prophetic office of the Church, came of a sturdy, industrious race of men and women. His progenitors were among the early settlers of New England. They figured nobly in the American revolution, and naturally transmitted to posterity a love of liberty, and traits which go to make patriots and martyrs. Wilford Woodruff possessed all these admirable qualities of character. These were crowned with a veneration for God, and a strong religious element in his being which led him in early youth to the consideration of spiritual subjects. He was also very industrious. His father, Aphek Woodruff, was a miller, and Wilford assissted him in running the Farmington grist mills, and, though tender in years, proved himself a man in thought and labor. From 1827 to 1832 he run a flour mill for his aunt. Although religious he did not join any denomination until he was 26 years of age, because he found none which harmonized in doctrine and organization with the Church of Christ as described in the New Testament. When only a boy he would ask his Sunday school teacher why there were no Apostles and Prophets in this age, as in olden times. The answer he received only tended to disgust him with sectarianism. It was the same old story, "Apostles and Prophets are all done away with because no longer needed," and yet with all the learning of modern ministers they were unable to come to a unity of the faith as taught by the Savior and his Apostles. Under these circumstances Wilford Woodruff could only turn to the Lord in prayer for guidance, and find comfort in reading and believing the Prophecies and doctrines of the Holy Bible. In 1832 he felt a strong inspiration to go to Rhode Island. Why, he did not know, and having already arranged to remove with his brother, Azmon Woodruff, to Richland, Oswego county, New York, he did not heed the inspiration to visit Rhode Island, but moved to the state of New York. They purchased a farm and saw mill, settling down to the business of farming and milling. On the 29th of Dec. 1833, over a year from the time they left Connecticut, two Elders, Zera Pulsipher and Elijah Cheeney, came to that section preaching that an angel had visited the earth; restored the Everlasting Gospel, and that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the Lord. Wilford and Azmon Woodruff went to hear them preach, immediately receiving a testimony of the genuineness of their message, and offered themselves for Baptism. Wilford Woodruff was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Dec. 31st, 1833, by Zera Pulsipher. He and his brother who also embraced the Gospel, immediately read the Book of Mormon and received a testimony of its truth. About this time Bro. Woodruff learned that at the time he received the impression to visit Rhode Island there were Elders preaching in that state, and had he gone there, the opportunity to receive the Gospel would have been afforded him one year earlier. However, his prayers were answered, the truth had come. He lived in a day of Apostles, Prophets, Gifts and blessings, and his joy was indescribable. From that hour until he departed for a better sphere Wilford Woodruff proved by a life of devotion to the cause of God that he was grateful for his existence in this age of the world. As a peculiar coincidence when Joseph, the Prophet, was writing his Journal, some time later, having learned of Bro. Woodruff embracing the Gospel, and notwithstanding hundreds were being baptized, Joseph not knowing him, wrote under date of Dec. 31st, 1833. "This day Wilford Woodruff was baptized." To those who note the purposes of the Almighty in the destiny and history of his noble Prophets, may this brief statement of Joseph Smith not be truly taken as prophetic; indicative of the great character that Wilford Woodruff proved to be and foreshadowing his great destiny in the work of the Lord in the Last Days. Jan. 2d, 1834, a branch was organized in Richland and Bro. Woodruff was ordained a Teacher. In February he walked sixty miles to visit the Saints in the town of Fabius with Elder Holton. During this winter Elder Parley P. Pratt and others visited Richland. Elder Pratt became much impressed with Bro. Woodruff and immediately told him that his duty was to repair to Kirtland, join Zion's Camp, and go with that body to Missouri. He took this council, closed his business in Richland, and left for Kirtland, where he arrived April 25, 1834. He was invited to be the guest of the Prophet Joseph Smith, which invitation he accepted, having a glorious time in his acquaintance with the Prophet and other leading men of the Church. May 1st, 1834, he started with Zion's Camp for Missouri, which journey was accomplished with considerable hardship, but throughout all the varied experiences incidental to the journey, Wilford Woodruff was, like Caleb and Joshua, among the number who sustained the Phophet, and never complained nor murmured because of trial and privation. This experience went to prove the metal of the men, and prepare them for positions of responsibility in the Church. After accomplishing all that could be done as a body, the Prophet advised the young men without families to remain in Missouri. Bro. Woodruff sojourned with Lyman Wight in Clay county, spending the summer quarrying rock, cutting wheat, making brick and in other kinds of hard manual labor. During this time he was possessed of a strong desire to go into the world and preach the Gospel, but did not express his desires, lest he should be considered aspiring, this being farthest from his humble unassuming disposition. The Lord, however, knew the honest desire of his heart, and one day while walking along the road he was met by one of the leading Elders in that section, who said to him in substance, "Bro. Woodruff, it is the will of the Lord that you should be ordained a Priest and go on a mission." Bro. Woodruff answered, "I am ready." He was ordained a Priest and went on a mission to Arkansas and Tennessee: this was in the fall of 1834. Among the remarkable experiences of this, his first mission, he was grossly assailed by an apostate named Akeman, who when Bro. Woodruff was leaving his premises, came towards him in a savage manner as if to do him violence, when of a sudden Akeman, the apostate, fell dead at the feet of this humble servant of the Lord. This event had been shown to Bro. Woodruff in a dream, though he did not understand the full import, until it was fulfilled. Himself and companion traveled on foot without purse or scrip, going through Jackson county Missouri, where it was dangerous for a Latter-day Saint to be seen, and were frequently preserved in a providential manner from mobocrats.

Bro. Woodruff's first attempt at preaching was at a tavern, one Sunday in December, 1834. He was weary from a long walk through mud and slush, but the people desired to hear him. He enjoyed the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, speaking with freedom and power, testifying to the restoration of the everlasting Gospel. In their travels they frequently lost their way and were obliged to wade swamps, and to avoid expenses would travel down some of the rivers in small canoes. Between Little Rock, Arkansas, and Memphis, Tenn., they became exhausted while crossing an alligator swamp. Bro. Woodruff's companion left him in the swamp suffering with a severe pain in his back. He knelt down in the mud and prayed intently, when the Lord healed him and he went on his way rejoicing. Being joined by Elder Warren Parrish in April, 1835, they traveled together over 700 miles in less than four months, preaching the Gospel every day. They Baptised twenty in their travels. Elder Parrish also ordained Bro. Woodruff an Elder, placing him in charge of the branches they had organized in Tennessee. After Elder Woodruff was left to travel alone he extended his field of labor, baptized quite a number among whom were several of the Campbellite persuasion. In 1835, he traveled 3,248 miles, baptized 43, organized 3 branches, and held 170 meetings. Subsequently, in the spring of 1836, he traveled respectively with A. O. Smoot and Apostle David W. Patten.

After performing a faithful two years' mission, accomplishing the conversion and baptism of many souls, Elder Woodruff returned to Kirtland, Ohio, in the fall of 1836. In May of that year he was ordained into the second Quorum of Seventy by Apostle Patten and Warren Parrish. There he received his endowments, as far as they were given in the Kirtland Temple, and attended school. On the 13th of April, 1837, he married Phebe W. Carter, of the State of Maine. A few days later he received a remarkable Patriarchal blessing under the hands of the Patriarch Joseph Smith, Sr., in which much of his future life was plainly foretold.

During the troubles of 1837, when many leading men became embittered against the Prophet Joseph Smith, Wilford Woodruff was among the number who murmured not, and was true to the Prophet of the Lord. In May, 1837, he started on a mission to Fox Islands. En-route he preached the Gospel to his relatives in Connecticut and baptized a number of them. Aug. 20, 1837, himself and Jonathan H. Hale landed on north Fox Island, where they immediately commenced preaching the Gospel. The first fruits of their labors was Justin Eames, a sea captain, and his wife, who were baptized Sept. 3. These being the first to embrace the Gospel in this dispensation upon an island of the sea. "Great are the promises of the Lord unto they who are upon the Isles of the Sea." (Nephi.) Since then the Isles of the Sea have sent forth many souls to the fold of the good shepherd. A Baptist minister by the name of Newton first allowed them to preach in his chapel, then he opposed them, and was humiliated by seeing the best of his flock leave him and embrace the Gospel as taught by these Elders. Elder Ozro O. Crockett, of Preston, Idaho; who recently did missionary work upon Fox Islands, testifies that the aged people who lived on the Islands over 60 years ago, still remember Elder Woodruff and the remarkable work he and Elder Hale did in that land. Among the most conspicuous features of his labors in their recollection is that he baptized the best citizens and neighbors they had on Fox Islands. This is true as to both the North and South Islands. Two branches of the Church were organized and the two Elders returned to Scarborough, Maine, in October, where Elder Woodruff had left his wife with her father's family.

Elders Woodruff and Hale having parted, the former returned to Fox Islands in November, this time accompanied by his wife. He continued missionary work, baptizing a goodly number until persecution became so intense that he deemed it wisdom to return to Maine. Accompanied by Elder James Townsend, he introduced the Gospel into the city of Bangor and other places in the State of Maine. From this labor he returned to Fox Islands. In harmony with counsel from the Prophet Joseph, he advised the Saints to sell their property and accompany him to the Land of Zion. Early in 1838 he visited Providence, New York, Boston and his native town, Farmington, Conn. In this place he preached the Gospel to and baptized his father, stepmother, sister and other relatives, organizing a branch of the Church. Bidding his relatives a loving farewell, he returned to Scarborough, Maine, where his first child, a daughter, was born, July 14, 1838.

He again visited Fox Islands to encourage the Saints and prepare them for gathering to Missouri. While laboring in North Vinal Haven, Aug. 9, 1838, he received an official communication from Thos. B. Marsh, President of the Twelve, that he had been called by Revelation in connection with three other brethren, to bear the Apostleship and occupy a place in the Council of the Twelve. Thus his early dreams of Apostolic days were coming to a living reality, in which Wilford Woodruff himself was to be one of the Apostles. He was requested to come to Far West Missouri, as soon as he could arrange his affairs. He was told that he should prepare himself to carry the Gospel to Great Britain, with his associates, the Twelve, the following year. With great promptness he set about preparing the Saints on Fox Islands to gather to Missouri. About one hundred people had embraced the Gospel chiefly through his labors, upon the Islands. About fifty of these now prepared to gather with him to Missouri. Bro. Nathaniel Thomas sold his property and had considerable money. To assist his brethren and sisters Bro. Thomas loaned them about $2,000, which was placed in the hands of Elder Woodruff for their benefit. With this he purchased ten new wagons, ten sets of harness and twenty horses. When he had done all he could to make ready the Saints, he preceded them to Scarborough, Maine, to prepare his own family for the journey. The company were counseled by President Woodruff to start by Sept. 1st, but they failed to do so, and did not leave until the early part of October. In consequence of this late start the journey was a very hard one. Oct. 13, 1838, while crossing Green mountains, Elder Woodruff was taken very sick. A little later his wife was stricken down and came nigh to the gates of death. Both, however, were restored to health by the power of the Almighty. Respecting this new experience of migration, of which he did so much in later years, Elder Woodruff wrote the following in his journal:

"On the afternoon of Oct. 9th, we took leave of Father Carter and family in Scarborough and started upon our journey of two thousand miles, at this late season of the year, taking my wife with a suckling babe at her breast with me to lead a company of fifty-three souls for their journey from Maine to Illinois; to spend nearly three months in traveling in wagons through rain, mud, snow, and frost."

Upon arriving in Rochester, Illinois, Dec. 19, 1838, he learned of the persecutions and unsettled condition of affairs in Missouri and concluded to stop in that place the rest of the winter. In the spring of 1839 he removed his family to Quincy, Illinois, and from this point accompanied the Twelve to Far West, and was ordained with Elder Geo. A. Smith, to the Apostleship April 26, 1839, on the Temple site, by President Brigham Young, assisted by other members of the Twelve. After returning from Missouri he moved his family to Montrose, Iowa, where he was severely attacked with chills and fever. While still sick he started Aug. 8, 1839, on his mission to England, leaving his wife also sick, and like all the families of the Twelve, in destitute circumstances, so far as temporal necessities were concerned. To New York he traveled with private conveyance, stage, on foot and as best he could. In company with Elders John Taylor and Theodore Turley he arrived in Liverpool, England, Jan. 11, 1840, having been five months, accomplishing the journey. The Elders who now go to Europe from Salt Lake City perform the journey in about two weeks, and under palatial circumstances compared with those surrounding Elder Woodruff and his companions sixty years ago. He was assigned to labor in the Staffordshire Potteries, where he was successful. In the following March the Spirit of the Lord prompted him to go South. He had plenty to do where he was, but he heard the voice of the Spirit and obeyed. He went South to Worcester, where he met Mr. John Benbow, a wealthy farmer, who told him that in that vicinity there were about six hundred people, including forty-five ministers, who had dissolved themselves from the Wesleyan Methodists for the purpose of an independent research after Truth. They owned several houses of worship, and styled themselves "The United Brethren." Elder Woodruff commenced at once to lay before these people the Truth as God revealed it, to the Prophet Joseph Smith, bearing witness as an Apostle of the Lord to the Ministry of Angels, and the complete restoration of the Ancient Gospel in these Last Days.

The ministry of Elder Woodruff was not attended with the eloquence of speech, nor the well skilled argument which attend the labors of some men, but there was an earnestness in his talk and movement, and an honest straitforward, Godlike simplicity in his simple statement of Truth accompanied by the influence of the Holy Spirit which carried early conviction to the hearts of all who were honestly seeking after Truth. In eight months labor, chiefly by Elder Woodruff in Herefordshire, Worcestershire, and Gloucestershire, eighteen hundred people were brought into the Church. This included the six hundred United Brethren all but one. Two large Conferences were organized. In August, 1840, he accompanied Elders H. C. Kimball and Geo. A. Smith to London, where they introduced the Gospel under very difficult circumstances. On the last day of August, 1840, the first convert in London was baptized. His name was Henry Connor. Elder Woodruff remained in London but a short time when he returned to Herefordshire, and Staffordshire, strengthening the Saints. From thence he attended Conference in Manchester, and labored most of the following winter in London, visiting also several other parts.

While in England the adversary made desperate efforts to impede the progress of the Elders in their ministry. At one time evil spirits attacked Apostle Woodruff and Smith, in a literal manner, when, by the exercise of faith and the authority of God by these brethren, these spirits departed. Bro. Woodruff saw them as literally as he could see the physical being of people tabernacled in the flesh. After a very prosperous mission, he returned to America, arriving in New York May 20, 1841. Meeting his wife at Scarborough, Maine, after two years absence. A month later they returned to Nauvoo, where they arrived Oct. 5th, and were heartily welcomed home by the Prophet Joseph Smith. He become a member of the City Council of Nauvoo, and served the interests of the city with energy and efficiency. His time during the winter of 1841-42 was mainly occupied in attending meetings and performing manual labor. In Feb. 1842, Apostle Woodruff became the business manager of the Times and Seasons. In July of the same year going on a mission to the Eastern States for the purpose of collecting funds to further the building of the Temple and Nauvoo House. He returned to Nauvoo Nov. 4, and again spent the winter in Nauvoo, and much of the ensuing year. He received his Endowments in the Nauvoo Temple under the direction of the Prophet Joseph Smith. He built a brick dwelling for himself and family on a lot given him by the Prophet Joseph. His Nauvoo residence like that of many of the leaders of the Church, still remains in a state of fairly good preservation. In the spring of 1844 he was called on another mission to the Eastern States. When about to take passage on a steamer from Portland, Maine, to Fox Islands he learned of the Martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. He immediately went to Boston and met in council with the Twelve, and with them returned at once to Nauvoo, where he arrived Aug. 6th, 1844, and took part with his brethren of the Twelve in presiding over the affairs of the Church. This being their right and duty, agreeable to the Revelations of the Lord to the Prophet Joseph Smith. Wilford Woodruff was a personal witness to the power of God as it rested upon President Brigham Young, on the occasion when the latter was transfigured in the presence of the people, so that he appeared in person, and spoke as with the voice of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

Aug. 12, 1844, Apostle Woodruff was called to preside over the British Mission, departing from Nauvoo Aug. 28, 1844, and reached Liverpool Jan. 3d, 1845. He presided with ability and much industry over the mission about one year when he returned to Nauvoo early in 1846. Just in time to participate with the Saints in their great Exodus from Nauvoo. He with many others, left their homes and property which they toiled to procure, under trying ordeals to the disposition of their enemies very few receiving more than a nominal price for their hard earned homes. He was active in helping the Saints to migrate, not only looking to the comfort of himself and family, but to the well being of his brethren and sisters on every hand.

Early in 1847 he joined the Pioneer company, consisting of 143 souls, 140 men and boys and three women. After a toilsome journey they entered the valley of the Great Salt Lake, July 24th, 1847—a day never to be forgotten, and to be handed down to all generations of the Saints as a day of rejoicing and celebration. It was then Mexican soil, but the Mormon Batallion helped to make it a part of American soil. The Stars and Stripes were soon unfurled by these loyal patriots, and the foundation of a great western commonwealth established, which is destined to become the pride of all honorable and upright people in our broad land of liberty. Future generations will do us justice, and the names and deeds of such men as Wilford Woodruff will yet be taught to children in the school room, as worthy the emulation and following of all who love virtue, liberty and truth. President Young was in feeble health when the pioneers entered the valley, and Apostle Woodruff had the honor of conveying him in his carriage into the valley. In 1847 he returned to winter quarters, being present Dec. 5th, 1847, when Brigham Young was made President of the church.

Brother Woodruff was among the most constantly industrious men the world has ever produced. He attended as first consideration to the duties of his calling, and then his manual labors in building homes and redeeming the soil from sterility, were unexcelled. From the toils of redeeming the desert he was called in 1848 to perform another mission in the Eastern States, from which he returned after diligent labor in 1850. He was the same year elected a member of the Senate of the Provisional State of Deseret, subsequently occupying a place for several terms in the Territorial Legislature. He was also the first President of the Horticultural Society of Utah. Every position, whether religious or otherwise, he was called to fill, he did so with distinction and credit. No man took greater interest in fruit raising and farming than Apostle Woodruff, as well as in all enterprises looking to the general well being and self-sustaining powers of the people. He labored with his hands as well as his head. Much younger men than himself were not his equals in the performance of heavy labor. No class of labor, however laborious or undesirable, which was honorable in the sight of God, would Wilford Woodruff ever ask any man to do that he would not do himself. He cut hay with a scythe, he cradled wheat by hand, he followed the reaper, and bound the golden grain in bundles; he pitched to the rack the bunches of hay and the bundles of grain. He worked upon the threshing machine. He planted, irrigated, gathered and hauled from the farm, potatoes, corn and all other products of his well tilled land. He planted vineyards, orchards, made ditches, watered, and pruned the trees and bushes of his orchard. He made roads, built bridges, hauled wood from the canon, made adobies and did all forms of manual labor which came in his way. There was not an idle thought in his brain, not a useless nor impure sentiment in his heart, not an idle bone, nor a drop of idle blood in his body. He was honest, unassuming, faithful and industrious. He had been designated in the days of Joseph as "Wilford the Faithful." He deserved such a title, and maintained it to the end. His industry was so conspicuous a part of his being that when, at the age of 90 years, one of his grandsons excelled him a very little in hoeing some vegetables in the garden, he said with apparent humiliation: "Well, it is the first time in my life that one of my children has ever outdone me in hoeing." He continued his hard labors upon the farm, whenever at home, until beyond the ripe age of 75 years, when the duties and conditions associated with his calling were such as to occupy his entire time and attention. In the early history of Utah—1852—he accompanied President Young on an exploring expedition to Southern Utah. In October, 1853, himself and Ezra T. Benson were called to gather fifty families to increase and strengthen the settlements in Toole county. (to be continued.)

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

THE ATTRIBUTES OF GOD.

The God of the Bible can walk, talk, see, hear, feel, taste, and smell—in fact He has all the attributes of man, only in a more perfect way. He walked with Adam in the garden, walked, talked and partook of food with Abraham on the plains of Mamre. Wrestled with Jacob, conversed with Moses in the burning bush, and talked with him as one man speaks with his friend. Was seen by Moses, Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu sitting on a Sapphire throne, afterwards was seen by Isaiah, who described His glorious appearance, and when Stephen was stoned to death He was seen on the left hand of the Son of God, who is described as the express image and brightness of His glory.

The Bible God is in every way an exalted being, and the Bible appears to speak of Him in the likeness of man, as it says, "Let us make man in our own image, and in the image of God man was made."

What is the conclusion of this Scripture. It is that God our Father who sits on His throne with His son Jesus, is an exalted being, patterned in the likeness and after the image of man, as man was made in His likeness and image, and after the appearance of His Son Jesus, who was in the express image of His Father, and is spoken of as our Elder Brother. Philip wanted to see the Father, and Jesus said, He that hath seen me hath seen the Father, which all would imply that God is like the Son Jesus, and that the Son Jesus is in every way like unto man in appearance and traveled about in that manner in the valleys of Gallilee while He was in the flesh. So that the Christian faith should be that we are in very deed the offspring of God, the brothers and sisters of Jesus and when we say Our Father who art in Heaven we should mean it, as He is our Father in very deed.

THE SALARY OF THE PASTOR.

The above is the caption of an article which appeared in an exchange of recent date. The article commences as follows:

The regular and prompt payment of the salary of the pastor has a powerful effect upon the progress of religion in the community in which he labors.

It seems that money does give many of the ministers of today inspiration, proving that their God is gold. How is it that money has such a powerful effect upon the pastor by the prompt payment of his salary? Is it possible that money inspires them as does the Holy Spirit true servants? Is it not a fact that when they do anything it is because money has hired them? Taking this as a fact, then, money is the moving cause of all action with them. How different did the ancient servants of God travel and preach. They were sent out two by two without purse or scrip to preach a free Gospel; no mention was made by them that money would have effect upon their preaching. No, they trusted in God, and the power of their preaching was not in money, but faith in God and the guidance of the Holy Spirit which was promised to them. When the promised comforter came, you do not hear of the Apostles waiting for a salary, but departed as commanded two by two, taking no money, knowing of a surety the Heavenly Father would provide. These same ministers who say money causes religious progress in their community, if they are promptly paid, cite as their pattern the very Apostles who went forth without money. They preached a pure message of peace on earth and good will to men. Continuing, the article says: "Too often the sexton and the choir and the coal man and the gas bills are paid, and the minister is left to suffer."

Of course the minister should first be paid, no matter if the coal man, sexton, choir and the rest never get their salary. If the pastor is paid it will so inspire him that he can tickle the ears of the coal man, etc., and get them to wait, but in order for the work of God to go on "the pastor should have his salary."

Again we read as follows:

It is a censurable waste to secure a minister who has received a college and a theological seminary education, and who is intellectually and spiritually and in every way equipped to do a valuable work, and then, by the failure to pay the promised salary, compel him to waste a large portion of his time in doing the work of a menial, or worse still keep him so worried and anxious and troubled as virtually to paralyze his usefulness.

To be sure, if people have promised to pay a minister a certain salary they should keep their contract, but whoever heard of a true servant of Christ entering into a contract to preach for hire? Mankind are warned to beware of hirelings who divine for money, making merchandise of the souls of men. A college and theological seminary education does not call men to the ministry. If so, why are there so many theological graduates without positions? The Scriptures teach us that no man taketh the honor of administering the things of God unto himself, except he be called of God as was Aaron. He was called by new revelation, by a Prophet of God. If the best educated men are first called, and if education insures one a standing in the ministry, why were ignorant fishermen called before Paul? Why not these ministers claiming to be the servants, go forth as did, and does the true men of God? One minister, in a discourse not long since, said he would like some of those who thought he was not kept busy to get on a horse and follow him around; he would wear them out. This man had twelve churches to visit, which occupied Saturday and Sunday of each week. If that man could but follow the Mormon Elders on foot—wading through swamps and rivers; over mountains, hills, etc., and often compelled to remain out of doors all night. The wearing out part with this minister should he follow and do as they, would be that he would get nothing for his trouble and hardships endured. If he advocated such an unpopular doctrine as they, his faith would fail, for only the possession of the Spirit of God will enable men to leave all cherished ties, and make the sacrifice which the Elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints do.

November, 1895.

Owing to the sickness that had existed in the Texas Conference during the summer, and being unable to attend the Conference held in July, President Kimball concluded to meet those Elders in conference capacity later in the season. Accordingly Conference convened at Van Sickle, near Greenville, Hunt Co., Nov. 2 and 3.

All the Elders were in attendance, President A. S. Campbell presiding. The meetings were fairly well attended and the people were taught the principles and doctrines of the Gospel of Christ. President Kimball spoke with much plainness, acquainting his hearers with the true condition of the people of Utah, religiously and socially. In addition to the public meetings several spirited council meetings were held and the rich portion of the spirit was poured out upon all present. After a brief illness Elder Daniel J. Stewart, of the Kentucky Conference, died of typhoid fever at Tompkinsville, Monroe Co., Kentucky. Elder Stewart was kindly cared for during his illness, by his companion, Elder F. E. Allred. Although Elder Stewart had only been in the mission field three months, yet he was a tireless worker for the cause of truth.

After returning from the Texas Conference, President Kimball proceeded to West Virginia, where he met President Brinton and a portion of the Elders in conference capacity. The public meetings were well attended; the remarks of the Elders were listened to attentively.

On the 13th inst. nineteen Elders arrived in Chattanooga from Zion. After spending two days in the city and receiving instructions, these Elders separated for their various fields of labor.

On the 20th inst. Elders Wiley Nebeker and Amos Rogers, who had been laboring in the city of Tallahassee but two days, were arrested on the charge of being a public nuisance. They were brought before the mayor and after a most farcical trial were sentenced to a fine of $250 each, or two months' imprisonment. They were informed, however, that in case they would immediately leave the city, judgment would be suspended. This they concluded to do, being accompanied to the outskirts by the Chief of police. Thus in this enlightened age, in our boasted land of liberty, two humble servants of the Lord were arrested without provocation, expelled from a state capital; yet those very people claim to believe in religious toleration.

December, 1895.

The month opened up bright and clear with the prospect of much efficient work being done. The arrival of twenty Elders on the 12th inst. added strength to the Mission.

On the 20th Elder W. E. Rydalch was appointed President of the West Virginia Conference to succeed Samuel Brinton, released.

The year which is now drawing to a close has been a most successful one. The number of Elders in the Mission has been increased to 303, several thousand copies of the Voice of Warning have been distributed among the people, as well as thousands of tracts. New fields are being continually opened, old ones revisited, the Saints stirred up to diligence and every effort put forth to advance the work of the Lord. During the year 555 new members have been added to the fold in the South. The Saints have been taught the necessity of paying their tithing, and seeing the blessings gained by so doing, responded.

One new Conference, Florida, has been opened. There has been considerable sickness in the Texas Conference; otherwise general good health prevailed.

The Elders are as a rule traveling without "purse or scrip," yet they lack for nothing and are richly endowed with the Spirit of the Lord. Thus closes the year 1895.

THE DARK AGES.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

The TWELFTH CENTURY witnessed the Christian church still struggling for ascendency, striving after absolute power and dominion over the whole of Europe, with the avowed intention of establishing a theocratic government with the Pope at its head.

At this late period in the history of Christianity, Finland and the whole north was still in a barbarous state and had not been subjected to the civilizing influences of Rome and in order to bring them in subjection with the rest of Europe, a holy war was instituted against them.

The method employed by the early Christians and taught by that meek and humble Master, who was the founder of the divine scheme of salvation, was entirely ignored at this time. The sword was used and the convert having been taken by force was caused to suffer all manner of indignities, subjected to baptism, whether he willed it or not, or whether he accepted the doctrine as true or false. Bloodshed, cruelty and oppression were used and the convert usually despoiled of his possessions, which were divided between the holy (?) warriors, or went to enrich the church.

Early in this century the second crusade was started, but returned proving a total failure. The third crusade was fairly successful under the brave Richard (the lion hearted) King of England, who played havoc among the Saracens and won fame as a Knight of the Cross, being a famous warrior and noted for his skill and bravery in these religious wars. Both of these crusades entailed great loss of life and wealth, accomplishing but little towards subduing the Mahometans.

The renowned Becket, a man who worked hard as a Monk in trying to establish the ruling influences of Rome in England, was murdered in this century. For his austerity and arrogance he has been looked upon with hatred by his enemies and loved, canonized and sainted by the Catholics.

At this period also commenced the selling of indulgences by the bishops. This was a nefarious system, introduced to exact money from the lowest dregs of society, who took license from the fact that they might pay for and obtain the indulgence and right to commit crime, the stipulated fee being exacted according to the nature and enormity of the crime. This privilege was granted by the church, being one of the means adopted to enrich the same. This was also the principle reason for the rebellion of Luther in the sixteenth century. In his day there was great disunion among the orders of the Monks as to who had the right to peddle off indulgences. The Augustines, Dominicans, Franciscans and Benedictines being jealous of each other for the favor of the Pontiff. Luther's opposition and denunciation of Tetzel, appeared to be of a jealous nature more than because of his great desire to overthrow the system that Tetzel represented, as one was a Dominican Monk and the other an Augustine. Both these orders vied with each other for supremacy and the favor of the Pope, with the privilege of selling the indulgence which would give a man license to murder, steal, commit adultery or any other crime in the decalogue, providing he would pay the stipulated fee, which was regulated by the Bishop, or Monk, favored with the dispensing of such.

Heretics at this time were looked upon with great hatred, being much sought for by the crafty and wily priest who under the smallest pretense or shadow of heresy, that would indicate guilt, would burn them at the stake or otherwise murder them. Many innocents suffered death in this way, their main guilt many times consisting in being caught perusing the Holy Scriptures, which, which were not intended for the reading of the laity. This may account, in a great measure, for the prevailing ignorance. Before printing was established, the books which go to make up the Bible were all written separate and copied in writing by hand, on papyrus or parchment and were consequently very expensive, being in use only among the clergy. The truths which the books contained were withheld from the laity by this extremely fanatical and superstitious priesthood, they being fearful of an exposure of the many frauds they were practicing at this time. Should the laity happen to obtain and read any portion of the divine record, they were immediately subjected to the rack or the torture prepared for the heretic. In this age of books and printing, when the light of the Gospel and its liberty loving truths are revealed on the housetops, as it were, it is hard for us to understand the condition of the poor Christians in the twelfth century. The fact is the priests were afraid of truth and knowledge, as their dominion could only be swayed by the iron chains of despotism and ignorance. The poor, innocent laity have in many instances been dragged before the inquisitorial tribunal, branded as heretics, subjected to the rack, torn limb from limb and finally burned, for their temerity in reading the Holy Word.

During this century, the doctrine was much advanced, that Saints died with an amount of good deeds to their credit. These good deeds were left to the Church, which through the Pope, had the power to issue them as indulgences, to counterbalance the many sins that the ungodly committed. This relief from sin is so far reaching that even the sinner in Purgatory can gain liberation and freedom from its torments, upon the payment of money or its equivalent to the priest who officiates as proxy for the departed.

The Waldenses, a sect inhabiting the vales of Piedmont in Switzerland, arose in this century, and established a grand reform. The founder had the Gospels translated from the Latin to the French and found that the Romanists had departed entirely from the true faith. This sect lived lives of comparative purity within the fastnesses of the beautiful Swiss valleys, but they were compelled to seclusion, through fear of being martyrd for their heresy. Many evidences are still extant of the bravery and fortitude of these early reformers.

Wickedness was very marked during this century and ignorance reigned to the extent, that men who presumed, even to be God, or the Son of God, could get a large following, who would accept their testimony without qestion. In consequence many ambitious Monks practiced their perfidy upon the poor credulous people, to the extent that the Priest was looked upon with a veneration that exceeded all bounds and in the superstitious worship of man, God in many instances was forgotten, or given secondary consideration. God apparently turned them over to their own folly and wickedness and they inflicted such penalties and torments upon themselves that they created the Hell which they merited for their many misdeeds. The Devil surely reigned supreme and with blood and horror, transformed the very nature of man, which would naturally worship God, into an idolater, who would bow at the shrine erected by a ruthless and polluted generation, paying homage to dead Saints and looking upon the Priest with awe as God's inspired vicegerent and infallible messenger. Even at the close of life, in the last hour, should penance have been neglected, absolution for sin could be obtained through the administration of the last rite, "extreme unction." And perchance should the sinner get into Hades by committing venial or grave offenses, the prayers of the church, through the Priest, Monk or Nun were still effectual in obtaining redress or immunity from the torments thereof. The liberality of the church was unbounded in its forgiveness of sin, and crime was looked upon with impunity, as absolution was so easily bought.

It has been my privelege to know many Catholics who take license by this indulgence. They will attend confession pernaps once or twice a year, pay the Priest, confess their sins so far as they can remember them, assume an air of penitence and perhaps will be repentant for a few days, then fall back into the same system of fraud and deceit, gambling and drinking with their attendant evils. Many of such characters (if we are to believe the authority of the church, of which I am speaking) upon the separation of the body and spirit, at death, are ushered into the realms of bliss. It is thus we find the Priest administering this indulgence, comforting and consoling the red handed murderer on the scaffold, who may have debauched virtue and murdered innocence. In spite of this guilty and wicked offense, the church will offer absolution and forgiveness, placing this man, all reeking with blood, into the abode of purity and holiness, to dwell with God and His Angels. In this way the church gives mercy more than her due and robs justice. On the other hand this same church will assist in paving Hell with innocent infants, because they are unfortunate enough not to have been baptized. Thus mercy is robbed and justice is perverted into horrible tyranny. The innocent, whom the murderous villain has untimely deprived of life mortal, must dwell as an immortal in Hell and suffer the torments of the damned.

Oh, inconsistency, thy name is Roman Catholicism. Mercy thou art basely robbed and justice perverted into an ignoble and tyrannous superstition. While love and truth are unknown, as the selfish greed of money, opulence and splendour, show that the beautiful attributes of God are forsaken and the world is worshiping at the shrine of Mammon. Justice, Truth, Love and Mercy being torn on the rack of a giddy fanaticism, called Christianity.

Mormons and Mormonism
By a Non-Mormon.

To make clear the subsequent action of the chief factor in the new crusade it is necessary to call attention to what is known as "the amnesty." By act of congress polygamous Mormons were disfranchised. When peace was declared these men wanted their disability removed. A well-meaning, but not sagacious Mormon took it upon himself to secure that result. He went for advice to the man who had tried for years to obtain the disfranchisement of all Mormons. That person seems to have expected such a visit. He advised a petition to the President of the United States for amnesty. The unsuspecting Mormon swallowed the hook and asked his adviser to write such a petition. It was, perhaps, already written. The adviser, swearing he would never consent, consented and the petition was produced. It was carried at once to President Woodruff, lying sick at home. The sick man, unable to even read the petition, signed it. With his name attached it was taken to the Apostles and all signed. The petition went to Washington, and, after much unavoidable delay, was granted. But the course of the writer of the petition, in the new crusade, his continual use of his petition against the Mormons, might possibly be taken as evidence that he was shrewdly forging a weapon that he might use against his quondam friends if his love for them should grow cold, or if his ambition were not satisfied. That is, it was well known here that when statehood should come to Utah The-man-who-wrote-the-petition would be a candidate in the first state legislature for the office of United States senator. It was necessary, therefore, to have a republican legislature. To that end the writer of the petition exerted himself to defeat the democratic party in the election of 1895. The democrats were frothing over a suspicion that prominent Mormon church officials were secretly aiding the republicans. Democrats were crying bad faith on the part of the church. The-man-who-wrote-the-petition defended the church officers and charged the democrats with intent "to give Utah a black eye;" with a desire "to keep immigrants from coming here;" with "the awakening of unworthy suspicions against us all;" with trying "to alarm the country;" with committing "an outrage." A few days before election, in 1895, The-man-who-wrote-the-petition, the man who, for more than a year, has found nothing too scurrilous to publish against the Mormons, the man who expected to be elected to the senate in January, 1896, said:

"There is not a man, woman or child in Utah who for one moment thinks there is any agreement or thought of restoring polygamy, or that it could be possible even if such a thought was in the mind of a few bigots."—Salt Lake Tribune, Oct. 19, 1895.

"There is going to be no revival of polygamy; there is going to be no return to church rule." (The same, Oct. 22, 1895.)

The legislature was republican, but The-man-who-wrote-the-petition was "not in it." In the race for senatorship he was shut out in first heat. That straw of ingratitude broke the candidate's editorial back and he seems to have waited for an opportunity to use his petition. The Deseret News says he was paid for it at the time it was written, or, perhaps, concocted, but the action of the legislature was a deadly frost and the bloom of his young love for the Mormon church was killed.

THE SECRET OPENED.

In 1897, the Mormons aided and abetted by many of the most influential non-Mormons, made a non-partisan effort to secure much needed municipal reforms. The movement was largely successful, but was hotly denounced by the office seekers of the republican and democratic parties as a "trick" of the church to restore political control over its people. In Sale Lake City the feeling was bitter and an attempt was made to resurrect the anti-Mormon "liberal" party. Failing in that, the excited politicians appealed to the clergy. A Presbyterian paper in Salt Lake began the publication of sundry articles running back into early Mormon literature, culling the crudities, slips and discrepancies to be found therein and using them to condemn the Mormons and Mormonism of today—a course that would be paralleled by attacking the Presbyterians of the present with the fanaticism, folly and worse of "no papacy" days. This publication was scattered over the country and started up the smouldering anti-Mormon fire. The smoke encouraged the clergy in Utah to believe that there actually might be something in their sensational talk about polygamy. Then they got together in the summer of 1898 and adopted a series of resolutions declaring that plural marriages are still being contracted, that the Mormons control the state, injure the public schools and that old Mormon Utah is on deck again. A few weeks later came the state democratic convention to nominate candidates and B. H. Roberts was nominated for congress. He was one of the men who were in polygamy when plural marriage was stopped. From the day of Roberts' nomination the writer of that petition, found his opportunity and from then until now has not ceased to villify the Mormons. He insisted that the election of Roberts would create a storm and then created it himself—a very common trick of false prophets. He revelled in his petition. That is, he sprung the trap he himself had set. I think he was trying to force the Mormon church to declare for the election of the republican ticket, for there was to be another election of a senator in 1899.

In addition to his use of the petition he reprinted the testimony of President Woodruff before a Master in Chancery and tried to prove that the manifesto of 1890 prohibited cohabitation among those then in polygamy. He knew that the president of the church could not annul a marriage. He knew that the hearing was held preliminary to a decree restoring what remained of the escheated church property. He knew that property was worth millions of dollars and the church needed it. There was not an attorney engaged in that hearing who did not want the church to get back its property. There was not a non-Mormon in Utah then mean enough to wish that the church might not get it. But there must be a record to the effect that polgamy had been given up. So President Woodruff consented to say that he included "cohabs" in his manifesto. At that time the editor of the Salt Lake Tribune was friendly, as I have shown, and although it now seeks to brand President Woodruff as a liar it said then that the manifesto "went only to the point of plural marriages," and added "we believe that the rule laid down has been as sacredly kept by this people as it would have been by any other people; that the Mormons and Gentiles have a right to say that the change amounts to a transfiguration." The measureless infamy of the disappointed office-seeker now seeking to pile odium upon the honored dead will be a fitting monument to his malodorous memory in Utah for years to come; and if our good old friend did stretch the truth to save that property it was a lie like that of Hugo's nun, the recording angel dropped a tear upon the slate and rubbed it out.

All this insanity of excitement through the country over alleged polygamous marriages has been created by a few men who are now laughing over their success in fooling the people. They have hunted these mountain states over—have imported special aid from New York—have declared that plural marriages are being contracted, and yet have not been able to find one case. Defeated in that they have arrested several men for "unlawful cohabitation" and advertised that as proof of polygamous marriages.

Avowing, with maledictions upon it, that polygamy is the "twin-relic of barbarism" and must die, they yet will not let it die, but drag it from its senile sleep, enhorse and caparison it like a waxen image of some old Catholic saint and lead it in triumphal procession through the land to excite the clamor of women gone hysterical through brooding in nightly loneliness over the clandestine amours of their monogamous husbands with other women more charming than themselves!

If polygamy were permitted to die a natural death the evangelical churches would lose their last foothold against the rising tide of Mormonism. It is not polygamy that disturbs them, but the steady growth of the Mormon church. Right or wrong, there is a current running to the Mormon church with increasing volume and velocity. The Mormon church and faith have been a boon to hundreds of thousands as poor as were those who heard Jesus gladly. It is today nearer to being a successful effort to inaugurate the Brotherhood of Man than anything ever tried.

IN CONCLUSION

I want to say that what is here presented does not err from truth and was not written with either knowledge or consent of any member of the Mormon church. It stands upon my personal knowledge. I am not a member of any church, and view all sects philosophically. I cannot perceive that any religion has been of divine origin, in the theological sense of the terms. To my mind they are all human, very human in their origin. But, conceding to all the rights of intellectual liberty I claim for myself, I question not the right of the people to any religion that satisfies them. In so far as creeds and dogmas impose upon credulity, I claim the right to protest. Thus I have long protested against Calvinism in all its varieties as a wholly unjustifiable cruelty forced upon humanity through its ignorance and fear. I gladly admit that theology, like everything else, is subject to the progressive influence of the ages, and realize that the God of Calvin is not as mean as he was 400 years ago—has been much improved in the last 100 years under our free government and public education. I cheerfully concede that all theologians mean to be honest in the dogmas they create, and I believe that all churches sincerely endeavor to hold their people to defined standards of moral life. But I lay this against them—that they would have men and women practice moral living, not because it is right, not because it is the best thing to do for itself, but to secure a definite reward after we have ceased to live here, a reward called "salvation" from threatened ills and horrors that exist only in the excited imagination of ignorance and superstition. It is childish—it is the mother bribing her boy with bread and jam, or frightening him with threats of "the bad man."

You see, then, that I am one of that class of persons called by all the professors of all the thousand and one varieties of so-called Christianity "an infidel." It is the easiest thing in the world to call people by opprobious names, as the history of these unpopular Mormons makes manifest. In fact no new thought appears that is not infidelity to some older one—no new issue that is not maligned by the satisfied believer in some old one. The term "infidel," as applied to persons who think for themselves, do their own business with the Infinite and decline proffered rewards based on fear of God, is one of merit rather than reproach. Jesus was the great infidel of his time—crucified for truth derided by the prevailing orthodoxy of his day.

There are two kinds of infidelity in the world. One comes by growing up out of existing beliefs, the other by falling below them. The only harmful infidelity exists in the churches, and consists of professing one code of morals and living another. For instance, all Christians call Sunday the Lord's day and pretend to keep it holy, a sacred day devoted to the worship of God. Yet half of them, in this country, keep it as a day of frolic and dissipation. That does not harm the day, does not injure God, but it makes hypocrites of professing Christians. They are infidels who have fallen below their religion. For instance, again, take the seven million names of American people who petitioned congress to expel the Utah congressman. It is safe to say a large percentage of the signers were children who did not know what they were doing, but whose names were taken by Christian adults with intent to deceive. It is safe to say a large part of the adult signers were women guilty of the murder of their unborn children, monogamous wives guilty of marital infidelity, and men guilty of adultery or fornication or both, for these crimes are very common, and such criminals are ever loudest in defense of "virtue." Here is the infidelity that kills, and it is caused by good (?) Christians falling below the level of their professed religion. Again, great indignation has been expressed that Mormonism should dare to say that the three women who were the constant companions of Jesus were His wives, but no objection is heard to the natural inference that if not His wives they were His mistresses. Polygamy was common in Jesus' day. Possibly the other, the unnamed relation, was common too. It would be vastly more moral to say of the "Savior of the world" that He had three wives than that He had three mistresses. But, no, the blind guides will accept the mistresses rather than admit the polygamy! Thus Christianity chokes on a gnat of new thought, but swallows a camel of old habit. Hence I say the only dangerous infidelity is in the churches. I state the facts and leave them.

A long study of religions convinces me that all mean to do good, yet fail, in great part, because they work for a wrong purpose. That is, they work, not for this life, but for one to be sometime somewhere "above the stars," in a locality that has never been more than a myth; and the object of working for that unreality is to escape another mythical locality below the earth, in the earth or somewhere else equally uncertain. This would do in a world peopled with ignorant savages, but will not do for intelligent men and women. This fact is recognized by the churches. They spend their money chiefly to carry their religion to the "heathen," realizing that it is useless at home. The religions of the world need reconstructing. They have much to learn and unlearn. I know of no church working so zealously for what it belives to be the good of humanity as Mormonism. I know its leaders, its system, its work. Its directors, as a whole, are sincere, conscientious, clean, honest men. If they err, it is not from evil intent. To them the presence of God is a living faith. It may be an error, but the faith is there, and the work is the result.

Mormonism is peculiar in this: it does not regard this life as a preparation for an eternity of idle psalm-singing in a future existence Lord-knows-where, but a school of moral training for an eternal life right here after "the resurrection." To this end it aims to make its people intelligent, capable, honest, moral, successful now, as the proper means of reaching the greatest happiness then. This may be wrong, but it is the faith, and it has a practical basis for a possible end. Its enemies say it is based on fraud. Well, it is said they cannot demonstrate that Christianity was not based on fraud—cannot demonstrate that Jesus ever existed. But Christianity is here and, whether He lived or not, it will remain. If it should transpire that Joseph Smith was not the founder of Mormonism, that the engraved "plates" had no existence, Mormonism is here, the faith is here, and it too will remain. We can only dismiss all questions of "fraud" and choose—the best. The best is that which is most beneficent in practical helpfulness. Tried thus, Mormonism possesses merits that cannot be ignored by any who would concede equal rights—fair field and no favors—to all. I see in it what to me are weaknesses, but in what system do they not exist? They are the weaknesses of its youth and are being outgrown—would be outgrown faster but for the malevolent opposition that drives it back upon itself. But iet no enemy of Mormonism flatter himself that it can be killed by vituperation. It is the most remarkable movement in the religious world since the days of Mahomet—the most wonderful religious movement in forty generations. The thunder and lightning of its enemies cannot strike it down. It must fall, if fall it must, as other religions have fallen—by its own decay after it has lived its natural life. Keeping Roberts out of congress will not arrest its course, and it is highly probable that the time will come when the American people who want no church interference with our national government may be glad to have the aid of the now maligned Mormons.

Consider that there are today 1,700 young Mormons tramping over this continent in city, town, and hamlet—young men who are so circumspect in all their deportment that not even the most bitter enemies of their faith have the hardihood to raise their voice against them—young men who are steadily making the fundamental principles of their faith known to the people. There has been nothing like it in the world for hundreds of years, nothing in so-called Christian countries since the steady persistence of the Protestants on the continent and in Great Britain and it is going to produce great results. The Mormons might be called the non-Conformists of this country and in spite of all efforts to the contrary they are going to wield an influence upon its future. One of the Utah men in Washington fighting the Mormons was honest enough to tell the truth when he said in a public meeting: "It is not polygamy but Mormonism we want to check." But it won't check or warp and is growing, and I write with a growing interest in its success. In 1718 there came 900 non-Conformists from Ulster county, Ireland, to Boston. They were Scotch-Irish Protestants seeking religious freedom. They introduced the Irish potato into New England. Some of them gave to older Yankees a few potatoes with instructions for planting them. They grew, blossomed, and bore fruit, but the Yankees cooked the seed balls and said they found them anything but good. Next spring when spading up their gardens they found the potato crop. Mormonism presented to Christian sects a new theological potato, so to speak. They tried it, ate the wrong end of the growth and denounced it. But there will come a new spring in which old sectarian gardens will be plowed up and then the real fruits of Mormonism will be discovered—and will be found to be both palatable and healthful.

I know but three ways of living in society: You must be a beggar, a robber, or a stipendiary, i. e., a worker for wages.—Mirabeau.

The Kindness of Two Great Men.

It isn't only in story books that kindness to others is rewarded. An exchange tells a charming anecdote of Finiguerra the master of early engraving.

The artist, in mastering the new and difficult art of engraving upon metal, had acquired a singularly keen eye and delicate touch.

Being a kindly man, he sometimes placed both his sure hand and his fine tools at the service of his friends and neighbors, in performing for them some of the simpler operations of surgery, until he acquired a reputation for skill in doctoring their hurts.

One day a poor laundress, in wringing out a garment in which a needle had been carelessly left, ran it deeply into her hand, a part remaining embedded in the flesh. She was in much pain and stopped at the house of the artist. Entering his studio, she hastily set down her wet and heavy bundle, begging his assistance. Finiguerra, after long and delicate manipulation, extracted the broken needle. The woman thanked him and turned to go, lifting her bundle from its resting place.

Then he saw that she had set it upon one of his engravings. Like all others at that time, it was a plate of engraved metal, complete in itself, and regarded as a single and sufficient picture, exactly as if it had been a painting.

But as the damp bundle was raised, Finiguerra saw that it had received an impression from the engraved picture beneath, and his quick mind seized at once the suggestion of the possibility of indefinite reproduction from a single original.

So that from the kindness of a great artist to a poor washerwoman sprang the discovery which has placed the beautiful products of the engraver's art within the reach of all of us today.

When Sir Humphry Davy was a boy about sixteen, a little girl came to him in great excitement:

"Humphry, do tell me why these two pieces of cane make a tiny spark of light when I rub them together."

Humphry was a studious boy, who spent hours in thinking out scientific problems. He patted the child's curly head and said:

"I do not know, dear. Let us see if they really do make a light, and then we will try to find out why."

Humphry soon found out that the little girl was right; the pieces of cane, if rubbed together quickly, did give a tiny light. Then he set to work to find out the reason, and after some time, thanks to the observing powers of his little friend, and his own kindness to her in not impatiently telling her not to "worry," as so many might have done, Humphry Davy made the first of his interesting discoveries. From this beginning he went on with his experiments as to the chemical agencies that produce electricity. On these subjects he delivered lectures which made him famous as one of the greatest chemists of this or any other age.

We have a half belief that the person is possible who can counterpoise all other persons. We believe that there may be a man who is a match for events—against whom other men being dashed are broken—one who can give you any odds and beat you in the race.—Emerson.

THE DEAD.

ELDER ALVA T. STEWART,

Letters from Mesa City, Ariz., bring us the particulars given below of the death of Elder Alva T. Stewart. Brother Stewart left here for home on the night of Feb. 19th. As stated in last week's issue he was sick when he left here but it was thought the care and influences of home would speedily restore him to his wonted health and strength. Elder Eli C. Openshaw, who accompanied our sick Brother from this city home, writes: "With the exception of a little delay, occasioned by a wreck, the homeward journey was a pleasant one. Elder Stewart stood the trip fine and I thought he was getting well; the last two days he seemed much better. We arrived home Saturday. 24th, about 10 a. m."

Elder M. A. Stewart, brother of Alva, and recently of the Middle Tennessee Conference, gives us the following account of this sad affair: "Our dear brother came home to bid us goodbye before going on another and greater mission, but so quick was the call that many of his loved ones did not have the chance to welcome him home, or say goodbye before he was gone on his second mission. Our heavy sorrow was greatly modified when we saw how his spirit departed without calling forth a struggle but left him while in the sweetest slumber. We had told him the night before, on retiring, to rest in the morning and not get up until refreshments were brought him. When my wife went to his bedside in the morning so peaceful was his look that it took a second examination to convince her that our brother was dead. Judging from his position his breath must have gone out like the passing of a pleasant dream. His spirit left his body the night of the 25th. It was a great shock to my father who is 81 years of age and in poor health."

"Elder Alva Thomas Stewart was born at Richmond, Lake county, Utah, June 2d, 1877. His father, Alvin F. Stewart, joined the Church in the Prophet Joseph's day, in Illinois, and passed through the many hardships incident to those days, emigrating to Utah in 1853. In 1867 he was left a widower with a large family. The latter part of this year he married Eliza Barnett. The result of this marriage was nine children, the deceased being the seventh child. When Alva Thos. was three years of age his parents moved to Arizona; three years later the mother died with smallpox and once more the happy home was broken up.

"Young Alva lived with his brothers and sisters until he was able to do something for himself."

Elder Stewart arrived in the missionary field in June, 1898, and labored as a traveling Elder in South Carolina up to the time the sickness, of which he died, came upon him. He had good health until about three weeks before starting for home.

Brother Stewart was faithful and true and sacrificed all for the Gospel. He sold everything he had to get means to perform his mission. He died a martyr to the cause of Truth and for his goodness and fidelity many will yet rise up and call him blessed.

He probably died with quick consumption which was no doubt brought on by overwork, so zealous was Brother Stewart in the Master's cause. He died for his fellowman and will be crowned in Heaven.

Elder Stewart was an unmarried man. May God bless and comfort the hearts of the grief stricken family, for though they have the knowledge that he that loseth his life for the Savior's sake shall find it again, yet the loss is great.

ELDER BRYAN W. PECK.

Trouble, it seems, never comes singly, and the Southern States Mission finds itself called upon to mourn the loss of another of its valiant warriors for truth. The Elders of the South as well as the Saints will be pained to learn of the death of Elder Bryan W. Peck, of the Middle Tennessee Conference. He died at 5:40 a. m. Feb. 27, near Ai, Putnam county, Tenn., the cause of death being a severe attack of the measles, terminating in acute bronchitis. His sickness was not considered serious until Saturday, the 24th, when he took a change for the worse. At Brother Peck's bedside were his companion, Elder Don C. Brimhall, Elder J. H. Belnap and President J. Urban Allred, who, with others, did all in their power for his relief, and when the end came he passed away as though going to sleep.

Fortunately, our brother was among Saints and friends during his sickness; especially kind were the Saints, including Brother Andy Vaugn and family, at whose welcome home Brother Peck remained during his last sickness, where day and night loving hands ministered every earthly aid possible. Dr. W. E. Sypert, of Ai, attended Brother Peck from the beginning and did all in his power for the recovery of the patient.

The body, accompanied by President Allred and Elder Belnap, was taken to Nashville, where President Rich was waiting to have the corpse embalmed and prepared for shipment home. The body was in a good state of preservation and was sent home in charge of Elder Belnap, and on March 4 a telegram announced that he had arrived safely in Ogden, Utah, and delivered his charge to the relatives of the honored dead, who met him there.

Elder Peck was a single man, 22 years of age, and lived with his parents in Gentile Valley, Bannock county, Idaho. He began his missionary labors last October and although of a reserved disposition was exceedingly earnest and very faithful, in the performance of the many duties incident to missionary life. He did not complain during his sickness, which in all lasted nearly two weeks, but seemed resigned to the will of his Heavenly Father. To know him was to love him and in Elder Peck we have lost a man of God, whose labors and presence we shall miss greatly.

Like Elder Stewart and others before him, he died in the harness, which makes for him salvation sure and the blessings due the faithful certain.

To the dear ones who are called to forego the pleasure of having with them in this life our dead brother, it is cheering to know that thousands of prayers go to our Father to comfort their hearts and strengthen them in their hour of tribulation, with the sweet influence of the Holy Spirit. Be comforted, for there is no more noble thought than that he gave his bright young life for God and humanity.

HER HERO.

A widow had two sons,
And one knelt on his knees,
And sought to give her joy
And toiled to give her ease;
He heard his country's call
And longed to go; to die
If God so willed, but saw
Her tears and heard her sigh.

A widow had two sons,
One filled her days with care
And creased her brow and brought
Her many a whitened hair;
His country called—he went,
Nor thought to say good-by,
And recklessly he fought,
And died as heroes die.

A widow had two sons,
One fell as heroes fall,
And one remained and toiled,
And gave to her his all!
She watched "her hero's" grave
In dismal days and fair,
And told the world her love,
Her heart, was buried there.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Elder J. N. Miller.

Elder J. N. Miller, President of the Louisiana Conference, was born in Coalville, Summit county, Utah, March 3d, 1870. He comes of sturdy pioneer stock, his grandparents, on both sides, being early members of the Church, passed through the bitter fire of persecution incident to that time, and both were forced by ruthless, red-handed mobocrats, to leave their homes. His grandfather Miller filled several missions and had the distinction of baptizing President Brigham Young. His grandfather, on his mother's side, was a Jew, receiving the Gospel in England. He was master of several languages and was teaching the Prophet Joseph German at the time of the Prophet's martyrdom. He went to Salt Lake Valley in 1848, and was one of the first manufacturers of matches in Utah.

Elder Miller's early boyhood was spent in the district school during the winter and tending flocks and herds through the summer months. At the age of 18 he moved with his father to Carbon county, Utah. From this time until he entered the ministry his career was a varied one. He attended the Brigham Young Academy one year, taught school in Carbon and Freemont counties, of his native state, and followed merchandising, mining, ranching and railroading, at different times and places.

President Miller is a married man. He arrived in the missionary field in April, 1898, like many of the servants of God, selling nearly all his goods and chattels to get money to enable him to leave his family and engage in the service of the Master. He was assigned to the Louisiana Conference, first laboring as a canvassing Elder, then as a traveling Elder, finally succeeding Elder Lewis Hobson in the Presidency of the Conference. He was with President Hobson when a mob took them in charge, holding them prisoners in the woods for twelve hours, an account of which appeared in the Star shortly after.

ELDER J. N. MILLER,
President of the Louisiana Conference.

President Miller is loved for faithfulness and unswerving integrity by those who know him. The Louisiana Conference should grow and prosper under the leadership of such a man.

History of the Southern States Mission.

January, 1896—

Father Time having departed, taking with him 1895, the new born year of 1896 was ushered in with the most favorable conditions prevailing throughout the Mission. General good health prevailed; new and fruitful fields were opened: prejudice was rapidly disappearing, and in all sections good treatment was accorded our Elders. Many meetings were being held and every effort put forth to place the Gospel before the people.

On the 23rd inst. twenty-four Elders arrived from the West. After spending two days in the city these brethren left for their various fields of labor. The weather during the month was unusually mild and very favorable to canvassing.

February:—

On the 16th and 17th President Kimball met the Mississippi Elders in Conference capacity. One public and one council meeting was held, the latter lasted seven hours, and was a spiritual feast for the Elders. They were fully instructed regarding their duties. The Louisiana Conference was organized with Swen L. Swenson as President. A portion of the Mississippi Elders were selected to labor with the Louisiana, which bids fair to be a very fruitful field. Twelve more Elders arrived in Chattanooga on the 19th inst., while two who had gone direct from Salt Lake reported in Texas. James E. Hart was appointed President of East Tennessee Conference to succeed John R. Halliday, released, while Samuel P. Oldham succeeded Frank L Beatie, released.

On the 25th inst., Elders M. O. Miner and D. C. Hess were staying with Saints at Craddock, Fannin county, Texas. About sundown the following note was thrown inside the gate:

"Honey Grove, Texas, Feb. 23, 1896.
To the Mormon Preachers of Fannin County:

You all have been here long enough and we will give you three days to get out of Fannin county, and to stay out. If we catch you in this county any more we shall have your scalps. You all can do just as you please, for you know what is best for you all. But we can tell you there is but one thing: if you can be found in Fannin county, when the three days are out we shall have your scalps.

We have give you good warning and in time. Yours truly,
Fannin and Lamar White Caps Company.
Dictated by 64, Club No. 3."

No attention was paid to the above threat. The following day President A. C. Dalley and Elder S. H. Wells arrived at Craddock and the remainder of the week was spent holding meetings among the Saints. On Sunday, March 1st, a Sunday school was organized. Monday the Elders left for Lenard, about twelve miles distant, where a series of meetings were held. The latter part of the week they returned to Craddock. On Sunday the Elders met with the Saints in Sunday school and meeting, expecting to separate and return to their various fields of labor the following day. President Dalley and Elder Miner being unwell stayed at Bro. Bryants where meeting was held, while Elders Wells and Hess went home with Bro. Gregory. About 11:30 p. m., after all had retired, the house of Bro. Gregory was surrounded by a mob of twenty-five or thirty men. Bro. G.— met them at the door and was informed that they wanted those ———— Mormon Preachers. They then began crying "Shoot 'em out!" "Shoot 'em out!"

Mormonism All Embracing.

Deseret News.

The "Mormon" faith is a huge maw gulping a dozen denominations, says Rollin Lynde Hartt in the February Atlantic. Are you a Baptist? The "Mormon" believes in immersion. A Methodist? The "Mormon" obeys his bishop. A Campbellite? The "Mormon" claims a yet closer return to Apostolic ordinance. A Theosophist? The "Mormon" holds to pre-existence. A Spiritualist? The "Mormon" hears voices from the dead. A Faith Healer? The "Mormon" heals by the laying on of hands. A Second Adventist? The "Mormon" awaits the Messiah. A Universalist? The "Mormon" says all will be saved. Massing his proof, he declares his peerless religion the one immutable, eternal faith, lost in the early age and restored in the latter days, though glimmering in broken lights through all the creeds of Christendom. "Bring me from Europe or Asia," said Brigham Young, "a truth that is not a part of 'Mormonism' and I'll give you a thousand errors for it, if you can find them." Said a "Mormon" at Harvard, "Sunday by Sunday I go to service in the Appleton chapel, and there I hear nothing but 'Mormon' doctrine." Limited only by the broad bounds of Christianity, this faith is an amalgamated and co-ordinated parliament of religions.

There is now only one line operating through double daily service from Missouri River points to California, and that line is the Union Pacific.

"The Overland Limited" is the fastest train in the west, and its equipment of Free Reclining Chair Cars, Buffet Smoking and Library Cars, Pullman Dining and Sleeping Cars is unsurpassed.

No other line offers equal facilities for California travel. For further particulars and advertising matter, address J. F. Aglar, General Agent, St. Louis.

SKETCH OF PRESIDENT WOODRUFF.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

Apostle Wilford Woodruff, during the fifty-one years of his life in Utah, performed missions at home and abroad, in America and Europe, and filled many positions of honor with credit and distinction. When President John Taylor succeeded to the Presidency of the church Elder Woodruff became the President of the Twelve Apostles, which place he filled with honor, until subsequent to the decease of President Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, in 1889, became the President of and Prophet, Seer and Revelator to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. During his Presidency of the Twelve, President Woodruff spent much of his time in exile, owing to the unholy crusade against the Latter-day Saints. During this time, like John the Revelator, he was favored with visions and revelations of the Holy Spirit. On one occasion the departed Prophet, President Young, appeared to him, as he traveled along a road in Arizona, to attend a conference, and urged upon President Woodruff the necessity for the Saints to more thoroughly secure the companionship of the Holy Spirit and keep it with them. President Woodruff was greatly interested in the salvation of the dead, combining works with his faith, he secured from New England large geneaological information concerning his dead progenitors, and for their salvation he would work in the Temple whenever possible; his family and friends would assist. He was so thoroughly loved by the Saints and respected for his interest in the salvation of the dead that on one anniversary of his birthday several hundred of the Saints in St. George and vicinity joined him in the St. George Temple and received ordinances in behalf of his deceased relations. About this time one of his choicest and most spiritual-minded sons, Brigham Y. Woodruff, was drowned in Bear river in Cache valley. President Woodruff, having allotted much upon the future of this noble son, was very much wrought up because of his death. Although he never murmured at the providences of the Almighty, he inquired of the Lord to know why it should be thus. The Lord revealed to him that as he was doing such an extensive work in the Temples for the dead, that his son Brigham was needed in the spirit world to preach the Gospel and labor among those relatives there. He had a similar manifestation subsequent to the decease of Apostle Abraham H. Cannon. The latter was a wise man in council, and although young in years, President Woodruff felt his loss very keenly, and wondered why he was taken. The Lord revealed to President Woodruff that there was a work for him in the spirit world, that Abraham H. Cannon was one of the very purest and best men of this dispensation, and fully prepared to move in a more exalted sphere. Many manifestations of the Spirit were given to President Woodruff from the time he embraced the Gospel until the time of his decease. During his administration as President of the church, dating from April 7th, 1889, George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith, acting as counselors, President Woodruff did much to encourage the cause of church school education, making, as trustee in trust, as liberal appropriations as the church could afford to sustain the Stake academies and other church schools. In 1890 President Woodruff issued the manifesto respecting the discontinuance of plural marriages in the United States, and later the political address, which provides that men who are called to spend all their time in the ministry shall not run into politics to the neglect of their spiritual calling without being properly released for that purpose. This does not abridge the rights of any man, since it is no part of a citizen's duty to seek for office. If all men were like President Wilford Woodruff the office would always have to seek the man, and when it does no barrier is placed in the way of his acceptance.

President Woodruff for many years, and up to his death, was President of the organization instituted by President Young, known as the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Associations, throughout the church. He showed great love for the young people. In this capacity he was greatly loved and respected by the young people of the church. He attended their conferences when feasible, and constantly bore to them his testimony as an Apostle of the Lord, that Jesus is the Christ and that Joseph Smith was a mighty Prophet of the Lord, standing at the head of this dispensation. Inasmuch as a certain class of people in the United States who are not Latter-day Saints, claim to believe in the divine mission of Joseph Smith, and yet deny the succession of authority to President Young, and also attribute to President Young the authorship of doctrines revealed to Joseph Smith the Prophet, we here introduce the testimony of President Wilford Woodruff. Be it remembered that he was an Apostle before the Prophet's martyrdom, five years, and consequently was his associate, a personal witness of the Prophet's teachings, and the last remaining Apostle at his death, who held the Apostleship in the days of the Prophet Joseph Smith. This testimony was borne to two hundred young men by the Prophet Wilford Woodruff when he was 91 years of age, when he soon expected to stand in the presence of the Redeemer and give an account for every word spoken, and every deed done in the body.

Officers Y. M. M. I. Meeting of May, 1898:

President Woodruff addressed the meeting. He said:

I am deeply interested in the position we occupy. The Lord has appointed the place we are in when the blessings were given of Joseph. We are the sons of Joseph. Here is the place where we are going to stay. No power beneath the heavens will ever drive this people from these mountains. This was a desert when we came here. President Young went to work with a will like a man. I was with him when he took his first walk from his carriage across the site where this city now stands. When he reached the place where the Temple now stands he stuck his cane into the ground and said: "Here will be built the Temple of our God." I thought that was a strange prediction, but I lost no time until I cut a sage stake and drove it into the very spot where he had marked. That was before any survey had been made or any street made, and on that spot, indicated by Brigham Young, and where I drove the stake, the Temple now stands. Men tried to persuade President Young to go to California, but he replied, "I'm going to stay here to build a city here, a Temple and a country."

Young men, the vision of my mind is upon your position. Upon your shoulders rests the mission of carrying on this work of converting the children of men to the Gospel of Christ from the sins of the world. There is nothing the children of men can be engaged in that is equal to the converting of the souls of men. The only office I ever asked the Lord for was to be permitted to go and preach the Gospel. You hold the power of the priesthood in your hands. I was present in Nauvoo, when the Prophet, Joseph Smith, gave the keys of the Kingdom of God to the twelve Apostles. He was with us about three hours.

He was full of the Spirit of the Lord. His face was clear as amber. He said: "I stand at the head of this dispensation and God has given me every key of the priesthood, every power of the priesthood. I am going away (we did not then know what he meant.) This kingdom will depend on you and I now roll the responsibility upon you, and God requires it at your hands, and if you do not carry it on you will be damned.'

Joseph never bestowed upon Young Joseph any key or priesthood or authority. God is not with the Josephites, nor are the ordinances of the House of the Lord with them. I was once riding on the cars from this city to Provo, and a man named Short took occasion to walk up and down the car, declaring that Joseph Smith never taught nor practiced plural marriage, and never instituted the covenants and endowments of the house of the Lord. That Brigham Young and those with him were the authors of these things.

I rose up and said to him: "You say what is untrue." I received my endowments under the hands of the Prophet Joseph Smith, and he taught me the celestial order of marriage, and he had plural wives, and several of his wives are in Salt Lake City today. Joseph was the author under God of all these things. Brigham Young, George A. Smith and many others received their endowments from Joseph, and their wives were given to them by him in the celestial order of marriage. I shall be a witness of this in the Spirit world and I shall meet you all there. The day is not far distant when you will see great events in the earth and sorrowful judgments. God bless you.

President Joseph F. Smith said that President Woodruff was one of the last living witnesses of the things about which he had spoken. Sister Bathsheba W. Smith, who is still alive, and her husband, received their endowments from Joseph, and the Prophet Joseph had conferred all keys and powers of the priesthood upon the twelve Apostles. He urged upon the young men present to make note of the testimony borne by President Woodruff that hereafter in the generations to come they could testify that they had heard him bear witness of these truths.

President Woodruff's 90th birthday was celebrated March 1st, 1897, by a grand gathering of his friends and admirers at the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, which was filled completely and was attended by the Governor and members of the Legislature and many other public officials, Mormons and non-Mormons. President Woodruff made a notable speech on that occasion, speaking with great vigor and clearness. After an appropriate program was rendered, President Woodruff, with his wife, Emma Smith Woodruff, 59 years of age, whose birthday occurred on the same day, was seated in front of the lower stand and held a reception, which lasted over an hour, almost the entire assembly passing by and shaking hands with the venerable President and his wife. Notwithstanding his advanced age, he received a party of his immediate friends at dinner at his residence, the same day, manifesting no signs of fatigue after the ordeal he had passed through. On July 20, 1897, he officiated at the great Pioneer Jubilee celebration, when the statue of President Brigham Young was unveiled and the dedication prayer by President Woodruff was offered. In the afternoon, he attended a meeting of the Pioneers, which was held in the Tabernacle, and was there presented with the gold Pioneer badge, which had been designed for the oldest Pioneer present.

On July 22d, he was honored by being crowned with flowers in the Tabernacle by the children who had marched in the procession to the number of about 10,000. They were represented by Ida Taylor Whittaker, grand daughter of the late President Taylor, who said:

"As one of the descendants of Utah's 1847 Pioneers, I crown you, the oldest of that noble band present here today, and pray God's blessing on you and all your Pioneer companions."

President Woodruff frequently testified that two powers had been at work with him all his life, one to destroy him, the other to protect him and enable him to complete his mission in honor upon the earth. The following statement prepared from one of his discourses will be of interest to the reader:

"During his eventful life, President Woodruff met with a number of severe accidents, many of which would have killed an ordinary person. He frequently remarked that he had broken nearly every bone in his body except those of his spine and neck. Because of his remarkable recovery from these disasters, he reached the conclusion that there were two powers seriously affecting his life—one engaged to destroy him, and the other to preserve him. He recognized in the latter the hand of divine Prividence, protecting him for a wise purpose. The following chapter of accidents which befell him was prepared under his personal direction:

When 3 years of age he fell into a cauldron of boiling water, and it was nine months before he was considered out of danger. When 5 years old, he fell from the great beam of a barn, striking on his face; three months later he fell down stairs and broke an arm. Soon after, he broke his other arm. At 6 years old he was chased by a mad bovine, but he fell into a posthole and the animal leaped over him. The same year he broke both bones of one of his legs in his father's saw mill. When 7 years of age, a load of hay on which he was riding was tipped over upon him, and he was nearly suffocated. When 8 years old, a wagon in which he was riding was turned over upon him, but he was not seriously injured. When 9 years old, he fell from an elm tree, through the breaking of a dry limb, fifteen feet to the ground, and was supposed to be dead, but he recovered. When 12 years old, he was drowned in Farmington river, Conn., but was brought up by a young man from thirty feet of water. He suffered greatly in his restoration to life. When 13 years of age he became benumbed with cold, while walking through the meadows, and went into the sleep of death, becoming insensible, but was found and was restored. When 14 years old, he split his instep open with an ax, and was 9 months getting well. At 15 he was bitten in his left hand by a mad dog. At 17, he was thrown from an ill-tempered horse over the horse's head on a steep hill amid the rocks; he landed over the rocks on his feet about a rod ahead. It broke his left leg in two places and dislocated both his ankles. In eight weeks he was out of doors on crutches. In 1827, while attempting to clear the ice out of a water-wheel, a full head of water was turned on, his feet slipped into the wheel, but he plunged forward head first into three feet of water and escaped being crushed to death. In 1831 he was again caught in a wheel twenty feet in diameter, but leaped out against a jagged stone wall, and escaped with a few bruises. During the winter of that year he suffered severely from lung fever. In 1833, the day he was baptized, a horse, newly sharpshod, kicked a hat off his head, and ten minutes later he was thrown from a sleigh, without any box, on which he was driving, lighting between the horses, and was dragged with the sleigh on him to the bottom of a hill on a snow path, but escaped unharmed. In 1834 he narrowly escaped death twice from the discharge of fire arms, a rifle ball passing within a few inches of his breast, and a musket, heavily loaded, being snapped with the muzzle pointed at his breast. In April, 1839, in Rochester, Ill., while riding on the forward axle tree of a wagon, he was thrown so that his head and shoulders were dragging. His horses took fright and dragged him about half a mile till they ran into a high fence. He was bruised, but no bones were broken. While going to St. Louis, in July, 1842, he had a severe attack of billous fever, and on returning to Nauvoo, in August, was confined to his bed for forty days, and appeared to be stricken with death, but he recovered by the manifestation of the power of God. Sept. 12, 1843, at 5 p. m., he left Boston on the Portland Express. Six miles south of Kennebunk, after dark, the train was wrecked, several cars were smashed to pieces, the engineer killed, some of the passengers had bones broken, but he escaped unhurt. Oct. 5, 1846, when with the camp of the Saints on the west bank of the Missouri river, while cutting some timber, he was crushed by a falling tree, his breast bone and three ribs on the left side were broken, his left arm, hip and thigh were badly bruised, and he was internally injured, yet he rode two and a half miles over a rough road and was then carried to his wagon, when President Brigham Young and his Counselors laid hands upon him and rebuked his pain. He had no physician, was able to walk in twenty days, and in thirty days from the time he was hurt he was able to work again. On the 21st of April, 1856, while helping to move an ox that had died from poison and had been skinned, his arm was inocculated with the virus, and seven days afterward he began to swell, and his whole system appeared to be impregnated with the poison. President Young administered to him and promised him he should recover and live to finish the work appointed to him on earth. He subsequently recovered, although dead flesh had to be removed from his arm with instruments and lunar caustic.

From the time President Woodruff was a boy he kept a complete journal of his daily life. Many items of important history would doubtless have been lost, had it not been for the journal of Wilford Woodruff. For many years he was the Church Historian. His long personal experience and the accuracy of his journal assisted him very much as Church Historian.

From the year 1834 to the close of 1895 Wilford Woodruff traveled 172,369 miles, held 7,555 meetings, attended 75 semi-annual Conferences, and 344 quarterly Conferences; preached 3,526 discourses; established 77 preaching places in the missionary field; organized 51 branches of the church; received 18,977 letters; wrote 11,519 letters; assisted in the confirmation into the church of 3,952 persons, and in addition to his work in the St. George temple, labored 603 days in the Endowment House in Salt Lake City. He traveled through England, Scotland, Wales, six islands of the sea, twenty-three states of the United States, and five territories.

During the latter years of his life he suffered from insomnia, and occasionally went to the Pacific coast, where upon the sea level he could sleep better and would recruit. It was upon one of these visits to the coast that he became prostrated, and passed peacefully away Sept. 2, 1898, to his glorious rest. A portion of his family and President Cannon and others were at his bedside. His remains were brought home for interment. The funeral occurred Sept. 9, in the large tabernacle, was attended by many thousands of people, and by the general authorities of the Church. He left a family of noble wives and children to mourn his departure but they were not alone in the bereavement, for many thousands knew and loved President Woodruff as a Prophet of the Lord, a humble, honest, upright man of God. He fought the good fight. He kept the faith, and will wear the crown of eternal lives promised to those who leave all and follow the Lord, who came up through much tribulation, who wash their robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb, for such is the unblemished record and history made by President Wilford Woodruff.

A Spiritual Feast.

Shelby County, Ky., March 7, 1900.

President Ben E. Rich,
Chattanooga, Tenn.

Dear Brother:

By request of President Terry I write you a synopsis of a spiritual feast enjoyed by the Henry, Owen and Franklin county Elders as a result of the late Conference of Conference Presidents held at Chattanooga. The Elders of the above named counties met March 5th, in Haidens Bottom, Henry county. One council and two public meetings were held, at all of which the influence of the Holy Spirit was greatly manifest. The people were very kind and ministered to the Elders in a way very much appreciated by them. Those of special mention are Bros. Messick, Ellis, Onan and Bondurant. May God bless and prosper such noble souls.

Tuesday, the 6th inst., the Elders met in a school house to hold their council meeting.

Each Elder bore his testimony, feeling to thank his Heavenly Father for the privilege of meeting with his fellow laborers. The Elders have come into the vineyard to proclaim the Holy Word; to bear testimony of the restoration of the Gospel through Joseph Smith. Each Elder realized that council given should be obeyed, that obedience was better than sacrifice. Elders are as watchmen set on the watch tower, to warn people of danger. President Terry gave much valuable instruction, fully explaining the important advice and council received at the meeting of Conference Presidents held at Chattanooga recently. Wednesday morning the Elders took leave for their various fields, each wishing the others a hearty good bye and success in their labors.

Your Brother in the Cause of Truth.
JOHN H. BANKHEAD.

Let us be content to work,
To do the thing we can, and not presume
To fret because it's little.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

The mill of the gods grinds slowly, but it grinds very fine.

Every attempt to make others happy, every step forward in the cause of what is good, is a step nearer to true manhood.

The Star extends sympathy to Elder J. B. Coles, in the loss of his wife. May God bless and comfort him. Elder Coles labored in Mississippi and was released last June.

We will be glad to have the Elders and other of our readers contribute articles for the Star. Write your experiences, or your thoughts on any good subject—it will help you and it will help to make the Star more interesting. Write short articles and to the point. Our space is limited and we cannot publish all, and "if at first you don't succeed, try, try again."

BIGOTRY IN JACKSONVILLE.

In another column we give an account of a cowardly assault on Elder Jenson, in Jacksonville, while he and Elder Wixom were holding a street meeting; and because of the actions of the half intoxicated coward, the tenth century Chief of Police orders the Elders not to preach any more on the streets of that city. Then the two by four Florida Times-Union and Citizen, chimes in and says it was just right; advocates mob violence to American citizens, simply because they do not hold the same religious views, and at the same time holding up to the public this intoxicated bigot as a man of noble character after their own heart and as representing the good people of Jacksonville. Shame on such men, they disgrace the name of America and are not worthy to be American citizens; far less to be custodians of the rights of the people and moulders of public opinion. Thank God, such beings do not voice the sentiments of the best people, of Jacksonville or of this country. If they did we would still be in the dark ages, and burning at the stake would be in order.

Of course as every circus must have a clown, so also is a street gathering incomplete without a crank to disturb. This case was no exception to the rule. While Elder Jenson was speaking a certain individual demanded he answer a question put to him. This was done, but seemingly not to the satisfaction of the disturber, who struck the Elder a cowardly blow in the face. Next morning one of the leading papers came out saying the Elder received merited punishment. Such men as will print things like that are the ones who incite men to anger, causing them to raise mobs and do bodily harm to innocent persons.

Those who allow such articles to appear in the columns of their paper, will be held responsible for the greater part of the damage inflicted upon the servants of God.

Some one should take pains to inform the Chief of Police and the narrow contracted newspaper, above mentioned, that Jacksonville is in America, a part of the United States; that the fundamental principle underlying the government is freedom and liberty. It might take some time for them to comprehend Americanism, but then they could grow in grace, and it would be better for the next generation.

These Elders had violated no law; they cast no reflection upon southern ladies, and if they had received justice the officers would have said, "Gentlemen you have a right to preach the Gospel as you see it; although we differ religiously you are Americans and shall be protected in your rights. We have no right to stop you from preaching on the streets, unless all others are prohibited, the law is no respector of persons." However, it is the same old story, they are "Mormons" and cannot expect rights when they worship different from us.

May we ask what the police officer would have done had it been any other kind of meeting? Would he have said, "I must have a warrant?" Is it necessary to have a warrant every time a disturbance is raised, and let the culprit get away while going to get one? What a glorious condition we should have if this were the case. At least it would be glorious for thugs and "athletic young men." Had it been other than the dispised "Mormon," who was injured, would not the Florida Times-Union and Citizen have denounced the affair as an outrage, and called upon the Chief of Police to stop such business? But what could be expected from a newspaper that did not have backbone enough, or is so prejudiced that it could not publish the proceedings of a "Mormon" Conference, even as a matter of news; or notices of a "Mormon meeting after it had agreed to do so, having been paid for publishing such notices?

The trouble in Jacksonville, no doubt, is simply this: the people were going to hear the "Mormon" Elders and learn of their side of the story. This fact did not suit those who evidently love darkness rather than light, and do not want to allow others what they ask for themselves. They are too narrow-minded to hear both sides, and like some of old, dismiss the question by asking, "Can any good come out of Nazareth?" This done, they do not go and see, but justify themselves in trampling in the mire law, order, and the sacred Constitution, to accomplish their unmanly and unchristianlike purposes.

Why not treat the "Mormon" question along the lines of reason and civilization? When force is resorted to is it not an admission that the question cannot be successfully met by fair means? We ask no special favors, but we do ask for our rights, as loyal citizens, appealing to the broad-minded people of Jacksonville to give us justice. If some do not want to hear "Mormonism" from a "Mormon" standpoint, they are not forced to go and listen, but should not interfere with the liberty of others and say they shall not go because it does not suit them. If the Chief of Police of Jacksonville and the Florida Times-Union and Citizen lift their puny hands to stay the progress of the work of God, they will sooner or later find they are kicking against the pricks; and reap the vengeance of a just Creator. Gentlemen, be Americans, and stand on the Constitution of the Republic. Be men and fight what you believe to be error with the cudgels of reason and Scripture. Give your opponent a fair chance to be heard and not disgrace our fair land and advanced civilization by advocating cruel persecution and brute force. We commend for your reading the fifth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles.

RIGHT WILL YET BE MIGHT.

Recent occurrences plainly show that Satan and his agents are still at work. Whenever mobbings of Mormon Elders have taken place in the south, or elsewhere, people living in the vicinity of the cowardly deeds have ever been willing to throw the blame upon ignorant people. Satan has many tools, each fitted for a certain labor, and he is using every one of them. It is an easy thing to make some believe that mobbings are conducted by an ignorant class, but upon investigation, nine cases out of ten will show either a so-called minister, or a newspaper the instigators.

The money grabbing preachers, and peanut political newspaper sheets are often, if not always, tools through which Satan accomplishes his low designs. But here is a clipping from a good, pure, religious Christian (?) paper.

The Christian and patriotic people of the country must remember that the exclusion of Roberts from congress is not the end of Mormonism in Utah or anywhere else. It is of the utmost importance that the agitation against the abominable system be kept up till it is obliterated, and that in the meantime we should very diligently seek to so evangelize all our people as to have none who may become a prey to the plausible delusions of the Mormon emissaries who are all over our land. This abomination in the sight of God and man should be obliterated.

This only corroberates what we time and again have asserted through these columns. That the recent fight in congress was not so much against B. H. Roberts, but was only a ruse to damage Mormonism, if possible. The so-called Christian churches have ever been jealous of the steady growth of the Mormon Church. They have used the foulest means to overthrow Truth, yet it lives. Men have been martyred for this dispised, unpopular doctrine, but others have stepped gallantly forward to continue the sacred work. Many of the Christians today are like those of "ye pilgrim times;" those who in the face of desolation, starvation, and hardships boldly demanded of an oppressive government their rights. Yea more did they do, they denounced kingcraft, establishing a government built upon the foundation of religious and political liberty to all. The battle was fought, and right became might. Then did those very people who made such an effort for freedom, do the thing they had fought against. Just as soon as they had a little authority, they proclaimed that all must bow down to them; must see all things like them. To be sure the end of Mormonism, so-called, is not at hand in Utah, or elsewhere. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was established by divine inspiration, and will continue to grow. Preachers may rant and roar, newspapers may befoul their sheets with falsehoods, yet be it remembered a Judgment Day is not far hence. Then will mankind know that the hated Latter-Day Saints are the blessed of God.

THE DARK AGES.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

THE THIRTEENTH CENTURY opened with the same conditions of war, bloodshed and turmoil that characterized the preceding century. Hordes of Tartars came rushing from the northeast, and like grasshoppers, destroyed all before them. Christians and Mahometans suffered alike and they played havoc with the religious world. They overran the whole east and these war-like Tartars have left the impress on the world of being a bloodthirsty, savage and untamable race.

In this century the Christians made two crusades into Palestine, but as in the preceding century, they were unsuccessful in accomplishing any good, entailing the loss of many lives, the expenditure of much wealth and bringing many evils upon the land. However, the Christians subdued Prussia, and the whole north of Europe, and by bloodshed, rapine and cruelty, compelled the people to acknowledge their supremacy and become Christians. This was the usual way of making converts at this period of the world's history.

Roger Bacon, an eminent scholar and philosopher, graced the earth in this century of darkness. He was a man who loomed up at least six hundred years ahead of his time, and who, in his spiritual existence, made great advancement, a giant among pigmies, a rose among thorns, an oasis in a desert, rays of light in darkness. Poor fellow, he came untimely, was not appreciated, and was incarcerated in a loathsome dungeon, where he spent many years of his life, "wasting his sweetness on the desert air."

John, the King of England, was a noted character of this century. He was a vacillating, weak monarch, who actually signed over and bequeathed to the Pope, all his kingdom, considering himself an abject vassal under the great Innocent the Third, the Pontiff of Rome. He was satisfied to fawn at the feet of this Pope, who subjected him to great ignominy and disgrace. This king has ever since been the hiss and by word of the nation he tried to govern and is considered a contemptible wretch for his weakness in thus giving up his kingdom. However, in the year 1215 the English Barons, who were the backbone and strength of the nation, compelled John to sign the great Magna Charta, which guaranteed many rights and privileges to the common people, who were governed by the Barons during the feudal age.

Dominic, a Spaniard, and Francis, a converted reprobate, lived in this century and were the Fathers and instigators of the Monastic orders called respectively Dominicans and Franciscans. These two orders of mendicants were favored by the Pope, having covenanted to convert or destroy heretics. At this period they established the inquisition, which was a bloody institution, and a terror to all Europe. All who were not in league and sympathy with this means of extirpation, were secured as victims, and hundreds of lives have been sacrificed before the tribunals of this wicked institution. In Spain the cruel tortures of this order were especially felt, and many an innocent life was sacrificed on the altar of bigotry and intolerance. Instruments of torture of all discriptions have been found in the cold dungeons of the Spanish inquisition. Little boys and innocent females were not exempt from the cruel hands of these fanatical mendicants who posed as the Lord's anointed. If a man was accused of heresy, he was imprisoned, brought before the inquisitors and made to fully retract. Refusing to do so he was placed on the rack, where his limbs would be torn asunder, his flesh ripped piece by piece from his body, and the most cruel, ingenious and exquisite tortures man could devise were administered, to make that man a Christian. If the above wicked means were not enough, they would take the life of their victim, which in most cases was a happy release and very welcome.

In this century, whipping was indulged in to a great extent, that the body might be made subject to the spirit and also as a means of purging it from sin. Many would inflict these penalties upon themselves and was really devout, believing that these acts of penance would give them control over the body and would be pleasing to God. It was thought by many that a baptism of blood was more acceptable to God than a baptism by water, and they would thus flog each other relentlessly, in many instances, till the flesh was torn from the bones, these inflictions being borne with fortitude and courage as they were expected to bring a remission of sin. This was carried on to an alarming extent in Italy, and the streets resounded many times with the cries of the sufferers. Those who inflicted these tortures and macerated their bodies, giving their possessions to the priesthood, were considered the most devout and holy. They blindly believed all the priesthood said and aided and abetted them in their work of exterminating heretics.

The doctrine of transubstantiation was universally taught in this century, and various innovations crept into the church. It was taught that a full remission of sins was granted to all who visited Rome during the jubilee year, which was held every quarter century. This was the means of enriching the headquarters of the church, Rome, as thousands would gather there during the jubilee year to enjoy the temporal festivities and get the spiritual preferments.

Various sects started in this century, perhaps the most important being the brethren of the free spirit; and the Apostles, but after much blood had been shed, they were speedily extirpated by the inquisitors, who showed no mercy.

A false Prophet also arose named Joachim, who said that the Angel with the everlasting Gospel spoken of in Rev. 14-6, had consigned his message to him. That God held sway, from the beginning to Christ, and the Son held sway, from Christ to the year 1200 A., D. Then the Holy Ghost took charge of affairs, and that he was the embodiment of that Holy Ghost. This man was believed by not a few and had considerable of a following.

When we look back to the thirteenth century, with its misery and ignorance, we feel shocked at the blasphemous assertions of Joachim. In this nineteenth century of enlightmenment Joseph Smith makes some very startling statements. He declares that the Angel spoken of in Rev. 14-6, referred to above, came in this century, in fulfillment of the vision as seen by John on Patmos, and restored "the everlasting Gospel." The Angel's name was Moroni, an ancient inhabitant of the American continent, who was the custodian of a divine record, which is now in print, called the "Book of Mormon," being the history of God's dealings with the ancient inhabitants of the American continent and containing the everlasting Gospel as delivered to them by Jesus Christ, the Author. This message of Moroni was later confirmed by the visit of John the Baptist, also Peter, James and John, prominent characters in the primitive church. Other holy men came in this "the last dispensation" and restored the keys that had been lost in the "Dark Ages."

This man Joseph Smith was a true Prophet, and did not presume to be anything but a humble servant and messenger of salvation. His work from beginning to end is stamped with divinity and truth and cannot be gainsaid. It has withstood the prejudice and opposition of the most erudite minds of this learned century, and comes from beneath the crucial test of truth, more pure. It embraces all truth and compares strictly with the system inaugurated by Jesus Christ. Unlike the fraudulent pretensions of Joachim, who desired the opulence and worship of mankind, Joseph Smith took no honor unto himself, but gave all honor, power and glory to the Master. The work and system that he has been instrumental of inaugurating in these the "Latter days" is filled with truth and will come off triumphant, as "truth is mighty and will prevail."

In taking a retrospective view of the spirit of darkness, I am constrained to acknowledge the goodness of God, in the establishment of His work in these last days in a land of liberty and under a constitution that provides for due exercise of religious freedom. The wisdom of this can be fully appreciated when we understand the religious slavery that existed for hundreds of years in the "Dark Ages." Every vestige of truth that showed its head in those days was immediately crushed with the despotic heel of Paganism and wholly extirpated. In the thirteenth century any man who presumed to oppose the Roman Church must have been bold and intrepid, as it inevitably meant death by torture or the destructive element, fire. One hundred years ago witches were condemned and burned at the stake by religious fanatics, and even in these days of light and truth we find the same bigots, who would still crush and extirpate truth, if they had the power. They, like the good (?) Pharisee and the powerful Roman Church of the "Dark Age," would do it in the name of religion. The history of the drivings, mobbings and the murdering of the Latter-day Saints will verify the truth of the above statement.

Abstracts From Correspondence.

Editor Star.—Please grant me space in your valuable paper to tell its many readers how much valuable truth the Mormon Elders have brought to us. We had long been halting between two opinions, until these men of God, made plain the true plan of Salvation. Elder Hunt and Tingey are true gentlemen, and we know they are messengers of Truth. I have had the privilege of showing the Book of Mormon to four preachers, one Methodist and three Baptists. I told them having read the book through twice I believed it to be a correct history of the tribes of Joseph: the book which Isaiah predicted should come forth. If they could condemn the book to show me how and what by.

H. A. R. MULLIS.

Dear Editor:—A little space in the Star will be much appreciated by me, as I wish to say a few words in behalf of the Latter-day Saints. When the Elders first visited Green county, Mississippi, they called and left a tract and card with us. I paid little attention, and carelessly threw the literature aside, thinking it was of little value. A year rolled by, when I had the privilege of hearing the Elders preach. I did long to know if they were true or false teachers. What joy filled my heart when I realized they were God's anointed. Indeed their words to me were as bread to a hungry man. Since I have joined the true Church of Christ, and can bear my testimony to the truthfulness of the Gospel. I know Joseph Smith was a true Prophet of God. May those who are in darkness behold the true and shining path of right, is my prayer.

MRS. ARVIE BREWER.

Southern Star:—Having been a constant reader of your valuable paper I can say I am much interested in its inspired writings. For six months I have been a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and know of a truth it is the only true Church on the earth. I know the Elders are the servants, teaching the fullness of the Gospel; that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the Heavenly Father. I send my best wishes to the many readers of the Star. I feel thankful to my Redeemer that I live in this the dispensation of the fullness of times. May God continue to bless us is the prayer of your Sister in the Gospel.

THE OUTRAGE IN JACKSONVILLE.

Under the caption "Resented an Insult," "Mormon Missionary Receives a Merited Punishment," the Florida Times-Union and Citizen, of Jacksonville, Fla., of March 7th, published the following:

For several evenings past certain persons, claiming to be agents of the Latter Day Saints, have been addressing crowds of varying size and interest at the intersections of downtown streets. Their audiences have been mainly of those who were attracted by curiosity, and have not been enthusiastic over what they have heard. One of these meetings was thoroughly broken up and the speaker badly demoralized last night by an athletic young man, who resented certain imputations made by the speaker.

It is sufficient to say that the remarks reflected on the purity of southern women, and when an explanation was demanded the speaker made a reply wholly unsatisfactory. His questioner delayed not a second on the order of his striking, but landed a blow on the missionary's solar plexus that entirely unfitted him for further service last night. Several bystanders wanted a chance to repeat the chastisement, but the missionary left speedily for a safer part of the town.

Under the glaring headline of "Orders from the Chief of Police," the same paper had this to say on March 8th:

"For several weeks past representatives of the Latter Day Saints have been in this city, preaching their peculiar doctrines and scattering their literature about among Jacksonville citizens. For several evenings open-air meetings have been held at the intersections of Bay street with other thoroughfares, which have attracted crowds of passersby, who have stopped to listen to the speakers, apparently as much from curiosity as from any other motive.

One of these meetings was interrupted on Tuesday evening by a young man, who claimed to have heard calumniating remarks upon the virtue of southern women. Inquiring of the speaker as to whether such remarks had been made, the speaker returned a reply that was unsatisfactory to the questioner, who promptly delivered a stunning blow to the elder.

This representative of the Latter-Day Saints called at the Times-Union and Citizen office, presenting a card bearing the name of Elder N. U. S. C. Jenson. He presented also a communication over his signature, in which he entered a defense of the position that he had taken on Tuesday evening. He asked that, in the spirit of fairness, he be allowed to state that he had made no reflections on southern women any more than on those of any other part of the country, believing that they included in the grand total a similar proportion of outcasts as those of any section of the United States or of any other country on earth. He claimed that among the women of the south were some of his best friends and that he could have no object in maligning them.

The police were informed of the occurrence yesterday and Chief Vinzant at once issued an order that no further meetings of this nature shall be held upon the streets, or in the open air, without the written permission of the mayor, or of the acting mayor in his absence. It seems hardly possible that the present executive officer of the city will give such permission, and it, therefore, seems quite probable that if further meetings of this nature shall be held, it will be in violation of law, and will subject the missionaries to arrest and punishment by the authorities.

Elder Jenson, in reply to the questions whether or not he and his companion will attempt further meetings in Jacksonville, said that they had considered it unwise to hold any more here, as they could not use force against force and shotguns. There was a strong prejudice against their doctrines in this community, he declared, which rendered it unwise to remain here longer."

Elder Jenson writes us the following particulars of the incident in question:

"For some time we have been holding meetings on the streets of this city. They have been attended by large crowds, which usually have paid the best attention to what we had to say.

"Last Tuesday night, after my companion, Elder J. A. Wixom, had discoursed on doctrinal topics, I took it upon myself to prove that the motives of the Church were good; that 'Mormonism' did not debase women. To make the first part of my proposition apparent I laid down as a premises that 'a people with evil motives will invariably exhaust all means to keep the public oblivious of their motives.' Arguing from this proposition, I cited the fact that Brigham Young gave $500 towards the erection of the first sectarian church in Utah, and asked: 'Does not this act on the part of President Young repudiate the idea that the motives of Mormonism are evil?' 'Would a people with evil motives assist the world in becoming acquainted with them?' 'Does not this act of President Young breathe forth a spirit of fairness and tolerance?' 'Do you know of a religious organization in the annals of ecclesiastical history that has proven itself as consistent as the Mormons?' 'Yes,' answered a gentleman in the audience (who was said to be editor of one of the leading papers of the city). 'Which one?' I asked. The gentleman did not answer my question, but asked, 'Is polygamy consistent?' I politely answered that that was not the question, as we did not now preach the doctrine of plurality of wives. 'They did at one time,' responded the editor. 'True,' said I; 'and the Bible teaches it now; do you believe the Bible?' 'Yes,' was the immediate response. 'Very well, give me five or ten minutes and I will let the public know what you believe,' I answered. Our audience was growing continually and numbered probably 500 people, composed of both sexes. All kinds of remarks could be heard. Some said 'Run them out;' others responded 'amen;' still others were cursing and profaning, and some asked, 'How many wives did Jesus have?' Suffice it to say we felt that Jesus spoke the truth when He said 'I send you forth as lambs among wolves.'

"In the midst of the turmoil I asked for silence, and when it came spoke for a few minutes on polygamy from a Biblical standpoint, citing instances in the sacred record of polygamists who were the acknowledged servants of God, taking care to preface my remarks that we did not preach or teach polygamy, but spoke for the information of those who were oblivious to the fact that we gave Scriptural reasons justifying that principle.

"I stated in the course of my remarks that Abraham, who was a polygamist, talked face to face with God, and that any of the 'D. D.'s' of our time had not been so honored.

"When I had finished, a middle-aged man, half intoxicated, pushed through the crowd, and, approaching me, asked, 'Do you say that southern women are not pure?' This was calling me to account for something I had not said, and not knowing what to say, I hesitated about answering, when the intoxicated man became impatient, repeated the question, and added with an oath that if I said all southern women were not all pure he would hit me. I was in a dilemma; if I said all were pure I would break the commandment 'thou shalt not lie,' while if I did not answer it would look like cowardice; so I answered that not all were pure, which most people, if sober, will bear me out in saying. I had no sooner spoken than I was struck on the right jaw. I made no attempt to resent this cowardly attack, but turned to the audience and said: 'Gentlemen, you see that is the kind of argument that the world uses against 'Mormonism.' I am but 24 years of age; I have been preaching only two years, yet I will willingly meet any three Doctors of Divinity in your city on the question, 'Is Mormonism Biblical?' 'We cannot, nor do not want to meet you with shotguns and muscle; there are only two of us and we are 3,000 miles from home.'

"The police, not wanting to interfere by arresting the coward who struck me, for fear of public opinion, advised us to leave. All present did not sanction the unwarranted attack. We will ever appreciate the kindness of the wealthy Jew who owned the property on the corner where we held our meetings. He is a man of honor and integrity, and exhausted all means to have justice dealt out to us. As soon as I was struck he came down from his rooms in breathless haste, took the officer by the arm and pointed out to him the disturber, but the officer said for a pretense, 'I must have a warrant.' Five minutes after the trouble the drunken assaulter was seen where he was before the meeting—in a saloon.

"Yesterday we called upon the Chief of Police and found him raving mad. He said we must not preach on the streets. 'If you do,' said he, 'you might be mobbed out,' citing as proof of the correctness of his opinion my treatment of the night before. We also called upon the editor of the Florida Times-Union and Citizen and offered a written explanation for publication, but they did not publish it.

"We believe it unwise to hold further meetings on the streets of this city at present, for we can get neither justice nor protection from the powers that be."

A GOSPEL LETTER.

BY MRS. ALLIE HYLDAHL.

(By permission we publish the following letter written by Sister Hyldahl to a lady who is investigating the Gospel. It will interest Star readers and may aid other investigators in their search for truth.—Ed.)

A letter, at this day, would scarcely be complete without an apology, and I assay to crave leniency in your judgment for my long silence, which has partially been due to my physical inability owing to the vaccination craze prevalent in this section of country at present. I have, however, thought of you the more, and at least expressed a silent wish to again enjoy the pleasure of your congenial company.

I thank you very kindly for your favor of the 21st ult., and am much pleased with the interest you manifest in your research after truth. It should, indeed, be the ambition of our lives to seek knowledge of our earthly mission, and when gained, if only partially, perform it to the glory of God's cause in the earth. I sometimes think that we fail wholly in comprehending the importance of our presence here in mortality, and think of it as only a matter of fact, when in truth we were sent at the fiat of an all-wise Father, for a great and glorious purpose.

I do not mean to be egotistical when I say that a part of the grand opera of life performed on this worldly stage is required at my hand, and that it is my duty to not only play my part, but to play it well. We have all a part to take, some remaining on the stage until snow that never melts crown their heads, and they grow high in years in the service of their Master, while others have but a single song to sing, when they are called to leave for higher spheres and diviner plays, but they have performed their duty, better, perhaps, than many who dreamed all the day long of things to be accomplished, of glories to be won, of destinies to be reached, but never took the initiative step.

I have never before so truly understood the method pursued by the Christian world, in its efforts to gain an eternal exaltation, when this life shall be no more, and while we, as a people, bid them god-speed in their race for victory, with truth on their standard and Christ for their Chieftain, yet with sorrow in our hearts we deplore that so few are willing and courageous enough to obey that Leader they strive to follow.

You say in your letter that you firmly believe, and have faith that all will be well with those who try to do right and lean upon the Lord for aid, no matter to what church or creed they may be numbered.

I am strongly reminded of that saintly centurion, Cornelius, whose prayers and alms had ascended even before the throne of God and were held as a memorial in his favor. No doubt this good man sought to please God, sought to keep His Commandments and do His holy will, but that was not enough. It would scarcely have been any part of wisdom for this righteous man to have said what you expressed in your letter, and if he should have done so, we have no reason to think that such a course would have received the approving smile of a just God. We read in the Acts of the Apostles that an angel appeared to Cornelius and assured him that he would be rewarded for all his good deeds, and that God was pleased to bless him for his faithfulness. Bless him with greater wisdom, greater faith, with charity in greater abundance than before, but also that he was to call for one Simon, called Peter, who would teach him the plan of life and salvation as taught by Christ and the Apostles, and that he was to obey it. His sincerity of belief was not enough, praying was not enough, nor the giving of alms. These indeed are principles all belonging to the Gospel, but does not constitute the Gospel of Christ. In Matt. 15 we are told that there shall be many who will worship Him in vain. Evidently they will lean upon the Lord for aid, and perhaps seek to please Him in numerous ways. They will call upon His name, they will do many great works in His name, yet it shall be declared unto them, "depart ye from me, I never knew ye." Well may we ask, "Who shall abide in the day of the coming of the Lord?" and cry out, "What shall we do to be saved?"

These questions, while of great significance and wondrous magnitude, are much more easily understood than generally believed. The plan of salvation is simple, and not hard to fathom, if we are in possession of the Spirit of God. But we must at once understand that there is something for us to do, and that faith is but one principle out of the many of that plan. The Scriptures, from lid to lid, abound in commandments that we are to obey, principles that we must believe in and ordinances that we are to accept, which will be efficacious in bringing us eternal happiness, if officiated in by one having the proper authority, and on the promise that we remain faithful to the end. There is no great thing that we can do, and thereby lay claim to the blessings promised the faithful, but it is a continued research after truth, a constant climbing upward and onward. Work! Work! Work! There is no stand still, always progressing, having for our motto "Be ye perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect."

You express sympathy for the Elders who are laboring in the south, because of the many hardships they have to endure, and cruel treatment they receive at the hands of mobs. Yes, we, too, are very sorry that those who call themselves Christians should so far forget the commandments of their great Master to "Love one another," and to love and pray for their enemies, and in their places teach by example, lawless mob violence, cruel beatings, scourgings and murder. We are sorry, not that we are persecuted, but rather that our mission among the children of God, our brothers and sisters, is so little understood. Could the world but know the pure motives and the righteous desires of the hearts of these humble servants of God as they journey strangers in a strange land, enduring every privation known to man, they would then know that none, save those who enjoyed the constant companionship of the Spirit of God, could be thus guided, and none but those who know the Gospel is true and understand the blessings awaiting the faithful could make the sacrifices they accept with a glad heart. When the call comes for them to go into the world and declare the restoration of the Gospel, and battle with sin and vice, they leave comfortable, happy homes, mother, father, wife and baby, everything that is near and dear to a human heart, and rejoicingly they journey to distant lands, to islands of the seas, not to be received by friends, but to receive sneers and jeers, hisses and scoffs, yes, willingly to lay down their lives, that they may do their full duty, not only to God, but to their fellows here on earth.

It has been my pleasure while in the south to meet many of these valiant men for truth. I love to look into their eyes, for they sparkle with purity and honor. They know no fear, they would rather choose to go home a heap of silent dust than with dishonor stamped on their brows. Their whole desire is to be faithful to the cause of truth, to give the Gospel free to all men, and to be able to say: I have done my duty, I have kept myself unspotted from the sins of the world.

TRUE EDUCATION.

By A. ARROWSMITH.

I have been brought personally in contact with many of the youth of Zion, who have had opportunities of advancement in the line of true education, but have neglected these privileges to the extent that many today have infidelic views. Some of them deny the faith of their fathers after having had the greatest care taken in order to lavish upon them all the intellectuality of the nineteenth century. This condition is sad to contemplate and causes me to write the following as I realize that many of our sons and daughters are neglecting the most important part of a true education in failing to develop the spirituality they possess.

The advantages that are offered for physical, intellectual and spiritual advancement in Utah are such that there is no excuse for ignorance. In the face of these facts why is it that we find so many educated fanatics in our midst who in their narrow contracted sphere parade their intelligence and declare themselves unbelievers in a God, thus fulfilling the adage "A little learning is a dangerous thing." It is grevious to see these conditions existing in Zion where the religion of Jesus is taught with such reason and logic, that is easily comprehended by an enquiring mind. The reason appears to be in the lack of development of the spiritual nature, which in many cases is woefully neglected.

It is admirable to see men endowed with great physical and intellectual strength, but when the balance of the education is lacking there is a noticable deficiency in morality and goodness, which are apparent in a well balanced organism. When we can find a person truly educated we find the spiritual, intellectual and physical development or parts equally blended; a grand and noble soul of whom God can justly feel proud.

It is true that we were nurtured and taught at the feet of our Father in Heaven, and built up our spiritual entity in a primeval state? If so, then why should not one soul be farther advanced and more noble than another? Is it not true that the arts and sciences were developed in our former state and that we came here well developed in the line of education which we had adopted primevally? Thus we find the genius, the man of extraordinary talent, in the course of a few years may revolutionize the existent ideas of many generations. The spark within him, struck from the anvil of Deity, may be pregnant with truth, which but requires the exigences of circumstances to make itself known.

We believe we are living in the "latter days," in the "dispensation of the fullness of times," when the God of Heaven has set His hand to gather Israel for the last time before the purging of the nations, and when the sons of God, who have been held in reserve for the grand climax of His work, shall tabernacle in the flesh. We find these noble sons coming here, gradually preparing the earth for the abode of the pure, holy and righteous. The enligthenment on the true principle of education, in science and the arts and the development of electrical appliances have advanced in every department of learning in connection with theological revelations. All this truly speaks of God's intent unto the children of men in these the "latter days."

The spirit of general intelligence comes from God and is disseminated in the world. "The glory of God is intelligence" and "a man is not saved any faster than he gets knowledge." Then if "knowledge is power," how essential it is that we seek after these riches and how grossly neglectful we become when we fail to seek after the fundamental or elementary principles of a true education.

The spiritual feasts which our Father in Heaven has prepared for us, can be had for the asking; they are actual necessities and man should not live by bread alone.

It is true that theology is the seat and foundation of all intelligent education; it delves into the primeval existence and exposes many of the mysterious actions of men; explains why one is born black and another white; why we have the yellow and red race; and why they all differ in advanced thought and intelligence. However, there are many things the finite mind is not cognizant of that are existent facts. For instance, life, reason, thought, hearing, eyesight, electricity, and the blending of the components in the breath. In fact we have but a smattering of knowledge in things pertaining to finite matter.

We must look deeper than the scanty knowledge which is supplied by man; we must become like children and humbly bow to the mandates of our Father in Heaven. Then might we know that we were instructed by Him, primevally; begotten before the foundation of the earth was laid and that we are possessed of a spiritual entity that exists eternally. We know that it is possible to educate this eternal part of man, feed it on spiritual realities and thus gain a logical and comprehensive solution of many of the mysteries of life.

Human reason unaided by the spirit of God will mire us into scepticism.

I would plead with the youth of Zion to cast out this spirit of distrust and apply the healing balm of humility and prayer. This will cause our spiritual Father to testify to you (if you will keep His laws and do His bidding) beyond a peradventure that:

"Life is real, life is earnest, and the grave
is not its goal;
Dust thou art, to dust returnest, was not spoken of the soul."

We will also continue to progress and advance on through aeons of years, forever and forever, ultimately attaining the Godhead; building kingdoms, peopling them, providing tabernacles for spiritual and eternal entities, who in their evolutionary careers advance unto perfection. Thus progressing on and expanding until your kingdoms, planets and glories are extended beyond a solar system; on through eternity, ever advancing in education and in glory; the works of the Gods. In our contemplation of Heavenly things, the grovelling, carnal, paltry affairs of earth sink into insignificence and appear as nothing. I would advocate the cultivation of the spiritual nature, as the food, ethereal as it may appear will fill the soul with delight which cannot be appreciated by a carnal mind. The question might be asked, what kind of food does this spiritual being partake of? I would say that it is an existent principle in the elements and one of the constituent parts thereof. It is one of the component parts which make up the sphere in which we exist. It is the Spirit of God, the life and light of all things. It is truth, be it philosophical or religious: no matter from whence it may come, if it is truth, it is God's truth. It is the beautiful in all things, being everlasting and will eventually prevail. I take it that all knowledge when true comes from God, and when this God-given intelligence is imbibed by mortality it will purify and glorify that individual to the extent of eventually causing him to put off mortality and put on immortality. We therefore have an extensive field for the operation of true education which will continue on through eternity, advancing from one degree to another in the progression of the Gods. Whenever there is an end to progression there you will find the beginning of retrogression.

Wickedness, sin, ignorance and vice in any shape is debasing and low, seeking its level in Hades. Righteousness, truth, knowledge and wisdom ascend in the beautiful sunlight of celestial glory. Therefore I would say in closing, cultivate the body, mind and spirit, elevate your thoughts that they may ascend and soar within the beatific glories of a kind and beneficent Parent who is desirous of His children becoming supremely happy within the light and inspiration of His Holy Spirit.

"Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect."

THE DEAD.

Syracuse, Utah, March 5, 1900

Southern Star:

On Sunday last the funeral service over the remains of Sister Annie Coles was held, in the new meeting house. Deceased was the wife of Elder J. B. Coles, late missionary to the Southern States. She was our Church organist and a faithful worker in the Sunday School and Mutual Improvement work. The speakers at the funeral were Apostle John W. Taylor and Elder Jas. Bateman. Ninety-five carriages followed the remains to their last resting place. The floral decorations were numerous and beautiful.

Your Brother,
J. H. COLES.

MAKE YOUR MARK.

(David Barker.)

In the quarries should you toil,
Make your mark;
Do you delve upon the soil,
Make your mark;
In whatever place you go,
In whatever place you stand,
Moving swift or moving slow,
With a firm and honest hand,
Make your mark.

Should opponents hedge your way,
Make your mark;
Work by night or work by day,
Make your mark;
Struggle manfully and well,
Let no obstacles oppose;
None, right-shielded, ever fell
By the weapons of his foes;
Make your mark.

What though born a peasant's son;
Make your mark;
Good by poor men can be done;
Make your mark;
Peasants' garbs may warm the cold,
Peasants' words may calm a fear;
Better far than hoarding gold
Is the drying of a tear;
Make your mark.

Life is fleeting as a shade;
Make your mark;
Marks of some kind must be made;
Make your mark;
Make it while the arm is strong,
In the golden hours of youth;
Never, never, make it wrong;
Make it with the stamp of truth;
Make your mark.

History of the Southern States Mission.

As soon as possible Elders Wells and Hess dressed themselves and walked out on the porch. Elder Wells inquired what was the meaning of this, and was informed, "You'll —— soon find out." He tried to reason with them, but they said, "we have heard enough of your —— Mormon clack!" They said they wanted to see all of the elders together and have a talk, but said they did not intend to harm them. The Elders accompanied them to within about 150 yards of the house, where Elders Dalley and Miner were stopping. Here a part remained and guarded Elder Hess while the remainder with Elder Wells went up to the house. The family was aroused just as they were taking the Elders away, when Sister Bryant, who was never known to sing before, began singing in a clear beautiful tone, "Jesus is Able Our Brethren to Save." The Elders were marched down the road about one mile when a halt was called on a bridge. A hasty consultation was held and the Elders were informed that the court had decided to give them five lashes each. Elder Miner said he would take all, when Elder Wells spoke up and said, "no, you don't!" Elder Hess reminded the mob of their promise not to injure them. The reply was "the court has so decided and you must take it." Then one after another each of the Elders received unflinchingly five stripes. The lash consisted of a twice doubled rope weilded with hands of one of the strongest men. After receiving notice to leave the county within twenty-four hours, the Elders were dismissed. The next day they left for Greenville. As soon as information of the above whipping was received at Chattanooga, Pres. Kimball wrote to Governor Culberson, appealing to him for protection for the Elders; asking him to bring the lawless offenders to justice. The governor replied that the laws would be enforced and the guilty punished. It was hoped that the great state of Texas would vindicate her honor, and show the world that within her borders there is perfect religious freedom.

Sixteen Elders arrived while about that number we released to return home, having finished a good work.

Jos. W. Musser was called to the Chattanooga office to succeed A. S. Campbell, released. A circular letter replete with good advice and timely instructions was written by Pres. Kimball and mailed to each Elder in the Mission. This letter was intended to strengthen and stimulate the Elders to greater efforts. The work of holding meetings and distributing literature was vigorously prosecuted. General good halth prevailed throughout the Misson and the month of March closed, much good having been done.

THE PATHWAY TO PERFECTION.

By ELDER R. W. SMITH.

"Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect. Matt. 5—48."

According to the scriptures the final destiny of man, as intended by his Creator, is perfection. In support of this claim numerous passages of scripture might be cited, which if properly interpreted, would establish the fact firmly upon the minds of every honest believer in holy writ.

However, it is not my intention to enter into any controversy upon this point, as is generally conceeded by all who have made a careful study of the scriptures.

But what I shall endeavor to set forth in this article is a brief description of the pathway which leads to perfection, according to a biblical standpoint.

Our beloved Savior upon one occasion while counciling with his disciples, uttered the following injunction: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect." (Matt. 5—48.

Through the justice and mercy of God our eternal Father, and the death and suffering of His Son, Jesus Christ, man has been alleviated from any and all responsibility which may have rested upon him in consequence of the transgression of our ancient sire, Adam. Moreover, he has been surrounded with every comfort and convenience requisite for the development of his being, both physical and spiritual; has had portrayed before his mind the glorious heights to be attained by strict obedience to all laws and requirements of the Father governing his temporal existence (at the same time being warned of the terrible consequence of his disobedience to the same); has had bestowed upon him a free agency to act according to his likes and dislikes, and after having been surrounded with every safeguard against the attacks of the evil one, inasmuch as he would avail himself of extended privileges, he is commanded to become perfect.

Jesus Christ, the Only Begotten of the Father, the mediator between God and men, through whom we have hope in a life beyond the grave, is the one who came to earth to execute the decrees of the Almighty by offering his life as a ransom for the sins of the world and mapping out a course, which by following the sons of men might gain eternal life in the presence of God from whence they came.

He marked the path and lead the way and every point defines,
To light and life and endless day where
God's full presence shines.

Now this path which Jesus marked, which he describes as being very straight and narrow, is not an obscure byway, incomprehensible to the mind and invisible to the eye of man, as some would have you believe; but on the other hand as the prophet Isaiah has described it, it is an highway which the unclean shall not pass over, but which is so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein. (Isa. 35—8.)

It is a well known, though a deplorable fact, however, that the simple description which Jesus and his apostles gave us of this pathway (which by the way, is nothing more nor less than the gospel of Jesus Christ), has been so perverted and changed since the apostolic age that the course, or I should say, the courses, for they are numerous, which are now being followed by the masses of the people called christians, have scarcely any resemblence to the original one. The result is only too plainly visible—strife, envying, confusion, discord and disunion on every hand, instead of that peace, love and harmony which should exist as the true fruits of christianity.

With these facts staring us in the face then, we can see the necessity of becoming thoroughly acquainted with the truth respecting this generally unfrequented path, in order that we may conform our lives thereto and thus reap the promised reward. Yea, it is a duty incumbent upon every son and daughter of Adam to make a thorough personal investigation of this matter inasmuch as they value their souls.

And not only is it necessary that the candidate for eternal life shall become thoroughly familiar with every detail connected with this course which has been outlined by our Lord and Savior, but after having done so it is obligatory upon him that he shall comply with every requirement contained therein with most undeviating exactness.

To those who are in the dark as to a personal knowledge respecting this particular pathway and its significance to them, and who are desirous of serving God in spirit and in truth, the question now arises where shall I begin? Show me the starting point that I also may establish myself in the confidence of my Father in Heaven, by rendering obedience to His will and thus gain favor in His sight.

It is to this class of earnest truth-seekers that I wish to direct a few remarks in answer to their querries; with the hope that my words may in some degree at least accomplish the purpose for which they are written.

Should you approach some of our world's preachers of righteousness in this day and time with this important question: which is the road that leads to the throne of the Majesty on High? they would answer you that there are many roads and you have only to make your selection of the one that suits your fancy and follow it for they all lead to the same place—Heaven. For, he argues, can't you understand that if a person wishes to go to the city of Washington, the capital of this nation, that he can take the road that leads to the north or to the east, as the case may be, and sooner or later arrive at that city? Just so it is, he reasons, with regard to the roads leading to Heaven.

But this argument, your will observe, is as unreasonable as it is unscriptural, and there is no more comparison to be drawn between the above than there is between the cerebelum and the Sierra Nevada.

Nothing could be plainer or more comprehensible to the understanding of man than the Bible is upon the fact that there And he who would teach you differently is either himself greatly deceived, or else is but one road that leads to Heaven, he is willfully attempting to lead you astray. Let us be careful in our investigation not to start with an error, for if we do it is sure to lead us astray. Let us lay a good foundation as we proceed. There are two roads mentioned in the scriptures—a broad road that leads to destruction and a straight and narrow one that leads to eternal life. So then there is but one course for us to persue if we would reap the reward promised to the faithful in Jesus Christ.

It is information then leading to a perfect understanding of this particular course that we are seeking for. Let us accept the advice of the prophet Isaiah then and go to the law and the testimony to seek enlightenment upon this all important question.

The proper place to begin is at the beginning, therefore we will commence with Mark, first chapter. "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God * * The voice of one crying in the wilderness prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. John did baptise in the wilderness and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. And there went out unto him all the land of Judea and they of Jerusalem and were all baptised of him in the river Jordan, confessing their sins. And John * * preached saying there cometh one mightier than I after me the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose. I indeed have baptised you with water, but he shall baptise you with the Holy Ghost. * * Now after that John was put in prison Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God and saying the time is fulfilled and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye and believe the gospel."

Here we have discovered the first important point leading to a judicious examination of the subject in hand: the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We learn here the manner in which and by whom it was introduced, also the teachings and practices of those who introduced it: belief in the gospel repentance of sin; baptism for the remission of sins, and a promise of the Holy Ghost.

Let us take particular note of these principles in passing that we may be able to contrast them later on with the teachings of the apostles of Jesus after His ascension.

After His resurrection and just prior to His ascension Jesus commanded His disciples to tarry at the city of Jerusalem until they were endowed with power from on high (Luke 24-49), which was to fully authorize and qualify them to carry to completion the work which He had begun.

They tarried in obedience to this command and as we read in the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, they were all of one accord in one place upon the day of Pentecost when the promise of the Father, which is the Holy Ghost, was received; and according to the promise of Jesus this gift enabled them to prophesy and speak in tongues, which they began doing immediately upon receiving it. We understand that there were in Jerusalem at that time devout men out of every nation under heaven, and upon hearing the news of this strange occurrence a great many of them rushed to the place where the apostles were assembled and upon their arrival they were dumbfounded "because that every man heard them (the apostles) speak in his own language," they knowing that the Apostles were all Galileans.

Their curiosity was aroused immediately and they began questioning among themselves what it could be that enabled these Galileans to speak the languages of the day.

The apostle Peter stood up with the eleven and explained to them what the power was, refering them to a prophecy of Joel for evidence. He continued to reason with the multitude from the scriptures until he proved to a great number of them that Jesus whom they had lately crucified, believing him to be an impostor, was actually the Christ, the Savior of the world.

No sooner did this conviction take hold upon the minds of these people than they cried aloud simultaneously: "Men and brethren what shall we do?" (Acts 2—37). Now kind reader we have arrived at a point in the history of the gospel where a great multitude of people are asking the very question to which we are seeking an answer. And let me appeal to you my brother and my sister to mark well this particular scripture, for upon this very point hinges the whole object of our research. Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, while speaking under the influence of the Holy Ghost, makes answer to the question in the following language: "Repent and be baptised every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. Can we understand this? Oh, yes; you say, "that looks plain enough." "Can we rely upon it?" We certainly can if the scriptures can be relied upon.

"Does this apply to me," you ask? Yes this applies to everyone who knocks at the door of salvation. What is required to save one is required to save another, for God is no respector of persons. If you are saved you will be saved by obedience to Christ's laws and these are and ever have been invariably the laws of adoption unto all those who would become initiated into the fold of Christ.

But to establish the fact beyond the possibility of a doubt, read carefully the next verse (39), "For the promise is unto you and to your children and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Are you being called to obey the gospel? Then know assuredly that this applies directly to you.

Now these principles taught by Peter agree exactly, you will notice, with those taught by John the Baptist and Jesus Christ at the beginning. Belief in the gospel, or a crucified and risen Redeemer as preached by Peter, repentance of sin; baptism for the remission of sins, and a promise of the Holy Ghost.

Could anything be plainer? But let us make assurances doubly sure. Read the eighth chapter of Acts and notice the practice of Phillip, Peter and John. And again examine the nineteenth chapter of the same book and observe the teaching and practice of the apostles to the gentiles. You will discover in both instances that the principles taught and the ordinances administered are identical. But is this all that is expected? Oh, no, my friend, you have just simply started—you have found the door, that is all. These are the stepping stones to the gospel. But remember it is absolute conformity to the first, or lower, ordinances of the gospel, that leads the mind of man onward and upward to an understanding of the higher laws of God.

"Now," you ask, "how shall I go on to perfection." Let the apostle Peter answer that question for you also, by adding "to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that you shall neither be barren or unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord taking the advice of Jesus and "all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you do ye even so them, for this is the law and the prophets." (Matt. vii.:12.) And finally, let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man. (Eccles. xii.:13.)

A circular is said to have been issued to Methodist bishops calling upon them to arrange for a week of prayer, because the membership of that church is less than it was two years ago. Can it be supposed that the Supreme Power has any special interest in the membership of the body to which these "bishops" belong? Methodism has spacious churches, high salaried preachers, fine organs and expert players and singers. Why is the membership falling off? Search the scriptures for an answer. Something is said therein of a worship that is "vain" owing to the class of doctrines set forth.—Deseret News.

THE DARK AGES.

By A. ARROWSMITH.

The FOURTEENTH CENTURY opened with the Sarcacens still troubling Europe with their warlike incursions in Spain. They held the kingdoms of Granada, Murcia and the province of Andalusia against the Christians, and withstood successfully many sieges. They were aided in their operations by the Princes of Africa. Morocco being a strong center, sent many Moors into Spain, and it was a question for some time whether the Moors or Christians would come out victorious in this decimating warfare.

Tamerlane, a renowned warrior, who lusted after power and empire, placing himself at the head of vast armies of Turks and Tartars, swept through the east, almost destroying all semblance of Christianity in that section of the world. We must not forget that the Greek Christian church had been flourishing in the east, while the Roman church had also made great strides in the west. But when Tamerlane's hordes swept through the land, they had no respect for person or religion, but drove alike the Greek and the Saracen, subduing the whole east and threatening Europe. He caused many Christians to apostatize, and considered it part of his mission to exterminate them.

In connection with these disturbances in the east, the civil and ecclesastical powers in the west were at warfare. Emperors banded vast armies, which met in combat with the armies of the Pope, and thus the world was in continuous turmoil.

Pope Boniface, the III, at this time published a Bull, stating that Jesus Christ had granted a two-fold power to His church, or in other words, the spiritual and temporal strength of a theocratic government was vested in the Roman church; that Christ had subjected the whole human race to the authority of the Pontiff, and that whoever dared to disbelieve it, were to be deemed heretics, and stood excluded from all possibility of salvation.

To understand the disunion of the times and the supreme arrogance of some of the Pontiffs, I will name a few incidents relevant to the occasion. Pope John, the XXII, took the papal chair in the year 1316, but was deposed by Lewis of Bavaria in 1328. Nicholas, the V, was made pope, but was fearful of the responsibility, and voluntarily abdicated in favor of John, in the year 1330. John held the chair four years, when he died, worth, it is said, 25,000,000 florins, in specie, plate, jewelry, crowns and mitres, which he had squeezed from the people and the inferior clergy, during his pontificate of four years. The above amount, representing over $12,000,000, was a vast sum in that age of poverty. At the death of Pope Gregory, the XI, Urban the VI, was elected, and he proved so very arrogant and presumptuous that he brought himself into disfavor with the cardinals. They elected Clement, the VII, to succeed him, which caused a split and disunion, which has not been entirely bridged over to this day. It is still a matter of doubt which faction held the right of office. For a space of fifty years there were two, and sometimes three heads to the church, which brought division, dissention, trouble, bloodshed, strife and war. The church was united in believing in the authority of the Vicar of God, and that eternal salvation could be obtained only through this authority. They, therefore, were much concerned as to who should be their Pontiff, as they desired eternal life and were consequently overwhelmed with doubt, and plunged in the deepest distress of mind concerning these intestine troubles.

Pope John, the XXII, loudly denounced the Franciscans as heretics, for believing that Christ and His apostles were poor, and had no personal property. They were accordingly tortured, burnt and put to death by the inquisitors, receiving the treatment of other heretics. We can readily understand how John, living in luxury and splendor, in beautiful raiment and arrogant power, would despise the poor, macerated, fanatical mendicant, who sought in misery, poverty and rags, for the happiness of a Christian.

It was in this age of turmoil, disunion and strife that John Wickliffe, a man who opposed the monks and the church of Rome, was born. He preached and wrote against them, gaining a considerable following, called Wickliffites and Lollards. These latter were terribly used by the inquisition, but succeeded in spreading discord and disunion among the Roman Catholics, thus preparing the minds of the people for the days of reformation that were speedily to follow. John Wickliffe was a noble and bold man, of good intent, and was the first great reformer. He died peaceably, but his memory and opinions were condemned by a solemn decree, and about thirteen years after his death, his bones were dug up, and all that remained of poor Wickliffe was publicly burned.

The Lollards, as a sect, were very charitably disposed toward the sick and the afflicted. In consequence of this the mendicant friars were jealous, and persecuted the Lollards to the extent almost of extermination, because through them they lost much of their popularity.

The Flagellants, a sect who believed in obtaining remission of sin by the whipping of the body and that baptism of water was not necessary, but that a baptism of blood was the only effectual remedy for sin, flourished in this century.

The Dancers also flourished for a season. They were a sect, who, like the Dervisher, would dance themselves into insensibility, believing that this exercise was acceptable to God, and that they thus could obtain forgiveness of sin. How sad was the condition of man in this age, many of them undoubtedly were possessed of Devils.

Mosheim says: " All those who are acquainted with the history of these times must acknowledge that religion, whether as taught in the schools, or inculcated upon the people as the rule of their conduct, was so extremely adulterated and deformed, that there was not a single branch of the Christian doctrine, which retained the least trace of its primitive lustre and beauty."

The century was remarkable for its production from the region of mystery, of great and bold spirits, heralds of the great reform that God had in view, that man's agency might not be lost. These noble men had been held in reserve to come forth in this "Dark Age," when the children of men, in ignorance and superstition were groveling in abject terror of the feet of a despotic, intolerent church. They came as the heralds of liberty to reinstate man's agency, and that he might have the liberty of conscience to worship God as he saw fit.

One of these prominent characters was John Wickliffe, born in the year 1324, in Yorkshire, England, and died in the year 1384 of paralysis. He translated the Bible and instilled much truth into the minds of the people, was condemned by the Roman church as a heretic and sentenced to be burned. He received protection, however, through his friends, the Duke of Lancaster, and Lord Piercy, and died a natural death.

John Huss also came in this age, being born in the year 1369, in Bohemia. He imbibed the same spirit as Wickliffe, and was a great admirer of that man. Contemporaneous with Huss came Jerome of Prague. These men fathered the reformation, planting the seed of revolt, which took root and flourished into a great tree, spreading its branches throughout all civilized nations, under the caption of sectarianism. It is represented today by upwards of 150,000,000 followers.

The reforms which commenced in this century have been felt in the gradual enlightment of man from that period, to the present time, and the ultimate outcome will be shown, when the earth receives its Paridiscal Glory, and knowledge covers the earth, as the waters cover the mighty deep. The spirit of reform is shown in the poet, the inventor, the mechanic, the artist and the printer, and appears to come like rays of light, beaming forth, irradiating and filling the susceptible soul with light and truth. The sensitive genius, reformer or impression ist, as you will, grasp the inspiration—thus a reform.

Many have thought the work of Wickliffe, Huss, Jerome, Zwingli, Calvin, Luther, Melancthon, Cranmer, Wesley and others, was not a work of reform, but was rather of a revolutionary nature. It is true that no immediate good arose from their endeavors, but we can see that the gradual growth of civilization which came out of their rebellious opposition to the great intolerant church of Rome, has spread the grand principles for which Angels fought—liberty, truth and freedom.

ARTICLES OF FAITH
OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

Elders who have not yet had their Orson Pratt's Works will be doing a favor by sending to the office for the same. There are quite a number who have not received their Missionary Hymn Books, and we will be pleased to hear from them also.

The Gospel of Salvation, known to the world as "Mormonism," is not the handiwork of fallible man. It was not conjectured in the minds of men, neither was it formulated in the councils of poor, weak, erring mortals. It comes a direct revelation from the realms of glory. God is its Eternal Father; Jesus Christ its immaculate Savior, and Heaven its holy place of birth. In the blest abode of our Eternal Parents, it was born, nursed and cradled, and from that righteous habitation it has been sent forth in these latter days to be preached in all the world for a witness unto all men.

MARTYRDOM VS. SUICIDE.

Many noble martyrs have been called upon to lay down their lives for the cause of truth, in different dispensations and on divers occasions, and it is truly stated that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church."

We point with pride at the record of noble men who have sacrificed their lives in this dispensation, for the cause of Jesus. Especially at Joseph and Hyrum, murdered in cold blood at Carthage, Ill.; David Patton and hundreds who lost their lives in the persecutions in Missouri and Illinois. In recent years we point with pride at Elders Gibbs, Berry and Standing, as among that noble band, whose blood calls for redress before the throne of God; also many of our gallant boys who withstand the sneers and scoffs of a cold world. Some being whipped, scourged and shot to death, for the cause of truth and the testimony of Jesus. We feel proud of our record in the past, and willing, if need be, to sustain the Gospel of Jesus Christ with our lives, laying all upon the altar, that the cause of our Master may advance. But there is a tendency on the part of some of our Elders to act indiscreetly and unwisely in the care of their physical tabernacles. Some of them, on returning from a two years' mission, are physical wrecks and prematurely old men, on account of injudicious care of their bodies. This imprudence in many cases bringing on disease and sickness, which occasionally terminates fatally. These noble men, rather than give up the fight when sick, would prefer dying in the harness. In many cases their integrity and courage are admirable, and they are true martyrs, but in some cases we are afraid that the lack of judgment and discretion displayed by some of our Elders is accounted as folly in the sight of God.

Elders when coming here from the mountains are generally robust and strong, full of vigor, with fine physical tabernacles. In many places in the South the air is impregnated with bacteria and malarious germs which tear and break down the strongest constitutions. The change of food, water, environments, from a high to a low climate, many times works a sore trial on our Elders, and they consequently get sick. Some will linger sick week after week, and month after month, fasting, praying and working until nature can stand it no longer. They will finally get released, feeling that perhaps they are lacking in faith, and have not been a success. When they get home their health may be such that they are beyond recuperation, broken down old men. Their friends (?) may treat them slightingly, because they have not been able to stay in the missionary field two years. In consequence of this vituperation and scandal heaped upon these men by those that should be their consolers, many of these noble boys would rathuer die in the field than go home to be branded as cowards. They will linger as martyrs, with a wrong conception of their calling, and occasionally will die in the harness.

God through His inspired servants called Elders in the vineyard, who are supposed to be physically, intellectually, financialy and spiritualy qualified. In some cases the Elders enter the missionary field apparently lacking in some of these qualities, and they at once will study and apply their minds to strengthen themselves wherein they are weak, usually succeeding in brightening up and in many instances filling grand and noble missions. Some work so hard in the cause of the Master that they undermine their health, taking longer walks than their strength will allow, or perhaps their companion will urge them on, so that they will perform labors more than their physical natures are capable of enduring. This, in connection with their diet and mode of living, breaks down their health. A law of nature, which is a law of God, has been violated and the penalty must follow.

Our Elders generally try to be strict observers of the word of wisdom and will refrain from tea, coffee, tobacco and other evils, at the same time they will violate some natural law of God with impunity, feeling justified, and then will fast and pray for God's healing influence, disregarding that true axiom "prevention is better than cure."

Many times sickness can be avoided by a little judicious care in keeping the body clean and its various functions working with regularity, also in exercising wisdom as to diet. When an Elder overloads his stomach, overtaxes his strength by walking too far, has a dirty body, or neglects the most ordinary requirements of nature, he breaks the word of wisdom and a law of God, and consequently gets sick, sometimes dies, and passes off prematurely as a martyr for his religion. God, who exacts a penalty for all His broken laws, may regard it almost as suicide.

We would not advocate an Elder going home upon the slightest symptom of disease or sickness, but we certainly wish our Elders to act with wisdom and discretion.

God will certainly call us to account for the way many of us treat our bodies, and instead of receiving a martyr's crown, we are apt to be punished for our indiscretion and folly.

We think our training Elders many times are at fault; they will sometimes overtax a new Elder to find out if he is a good walker, and they may otherwise dishearten him, when discretion and encouragement would buoy up and enlighten the new experience.

Rev. Sheldon claims he has tried to conduct a newspaper as Jesus would. Tried is the only fulfillment of his desires, for the scheme has been a failure. The reverend gentleman may have been sincere in his views; yet he, in the first place, made a mistake by claiming to know how Jesus would run a paper. Inasmuch as Brother Sheldon has not had a personal acquaintance with the Lord, and in the face of the fact that he, like all modern divines, do not believe in revelation, how did he know? Does the Bible teach one how to conduct a newspaper? If not, how did the gentleman know so much in that line? Is the paper to be free gratis, or a money grabbing scheme? Like all divines of today, Rev. Sheldon desires to show he is with the mass, by allowing an article to be published against the Mormons. This is but a testimony to the servants of God, and fulfills the saying made by the Lord, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for My sake."

With England at war with the South African Republics and all the other Christian nations preparing for war, Christian against Christian, will anyone contend that we are in a unity of the faith? The gifts and blessings that were in the primitive church were to remain until we come to a unity. Where are the gifts and blessings?

BLESSINGS FOLLOW OBEDIENCE.

People often wonder why the Latter-Day Saints have prospered so well, how they could transform a barren desert into a beautiful land, blossoming with flowers. All things work upon natural principles, and when we find a people prospering, as do God's people today, let us not say chance did it. A wise man, in building a house will lay the foundation strong and firm; using the best materials and labor to be had. God in His infinite wisdom, desiring to again establish His plan, chose the best workmen. Having designed the way, He chose His laborors and then gave instructions how to proceed. The foundation was laid broad and deep, cemented to the bed-work of revelation, bonded with truth, it will ever stand the beating of the rains of Satan's power. Most people are conversent with the persecutions that followed, the trying times which drew the line; showing who were for and who were against God. The exodus across the plains, driven to a barren waste, yet the solitary places and the wilderness were glad for them, and the desert did rejoice and blossom as a rose, and why might be asked, could a mere handful of people transfer a sage-bush wilderness into a land of beauty? Being the servants of a merciful Father, they kept the commandments of High Heaven. They forgot not to carry into the Lord's storehouse a tenth of their earnings. Tithing was then a commandment of God, today it is just as binding. Saints are promised, if they will pay their tithing, blessings will be poured down upon them; that there shall not be room to receive them. To those who love and obey, blessings have followed. Some are faithful, thus gaining great rewards; they have plenty, pay an honest tithe, and are happy. Some receive greater blessings than they can endure, for their good, and get proud. Forget to give honor to the Heavenly Father and give Him not His due. Like the parable told of the rich man, they take great ease, eat, drink and are merry. Finally their land gets poor, trees die and destitution holds sway.

While upon this subject no better proof of blessings following obedience can be given than the testimony of a Saint. We take liberty to insert this testimony which smacks with truthfulness.

Chattanooga, Tenn., March 14, 1900.

President Ben E. Rich, Dear Brother:

I have settled down to stay here a while longer, it may be for the best. As I have began to pay tithing, things are looking more favorable for me. Persecution seems to be dying out, excepting the case of a few religious bigots. My testimony grows stronger daily and the Lord is blessing me for obeying the Gospel. All things look more lovely and the East Kentucky hills look more beautiful to me than ever before. The world is full of beauty when the heart is full of love. I can bear persecution better if one Baptist friend did say I ought to have three hickory withs worn out over me for talking of going to Utah. Enclosed find money for subscription for the Star. Ring Pharaoh Gave Joseph.

Preston Standard.

Prof. John Lansing, of New Brunswick, who has been spending the winter in this city, will leave soon for Colorado, where he expects to live for a considerable time for the benefit of his health. He is a very scholarly and accomplished gentleman, being a minister of the Dutch Reformed church. He was born in the city of Damascus, Palestine, in "the street which is called Straight," his father being a resident missionary there. Prof. Lansing for 13 years lived in Egypt and is the master of nine languages. He has many curious and valuable relics of Egypt, stones and jewels of the ancient Pharaohs. He has what is thought by the best Egyptologists to be the identical gold ring set with a stone, which Khab Nub, the Pharaoh, gave to Joseph when he made him prime minister over all Egypt, says an Atlantic City paper. It is a curious old jewel and was worn on the thumb. It was found at Memphis 15 or 20 years ago in the coffin of a mummy. He has a walking stone and many kinds of sacred beetles bearing carved inscriptions telling of the reign in which they were the official emblem. He has a silk crocheted cap which was taken from a mummy and is several thousand years old, rare amber beads, the precious images of cats and ancient symbols which have been unearthed in the land of the pyramids.

Education and Morals.

Deseret News.

Marion Crawford does not believe that the education of this advanced century has had the effect of elevating the moral standard of man. In this he takes issue with the many who see in increased knowledge the salvation of the race. The novelist finds that some of the most honest, moral, trustworthy and industrious people are found among those who can neither read nor write. On the other hand, he finds that the pursuit of knowledge is often merely for the material advancement it gives. Refinement is not sought. Teaching has too often been an aid to naturally evil propensities, giving them an opportunity for development they would otherwise not have had.

The view is certainly well taken. Some of the most notorious criminals have been "students" of sciences, and their knowledge has put them in a position to carry out ingenious plans, no ignorant criminals would have thought of.

Morality is not a matter of knowledge. A human being may be able to read the mysteries of nature in the heavens above and the earth below; he may have mastered the facts of history and the theories of philosophers from the beginning, and yet have no love at heart for truth and justice. Even the mere study of theology brings with it no power to do that which is good. The fact is that in most instances it is not on account of ignorance of that which is right that people go wrong, but on account of a failure to live up to the knowledge of right and wrong already obtained.

Morality is in the last instance a matter of training of the "heart," if that expression be permitted. It is independent of the intellectual development. When both are in harmony the human life will be as near the ideal as possible. When the intellect alone is developed, there is no safeguard against plunging into the lower depths of human depravity.

Educational methods may change and be improved, but if the aim is to combat sin in its various forms, the power of schools is not sufficient. For that purpose no means is adequate but the old-fashioned Gospel, the efficacy of the human race.

GOD'S LOVE.

Could we with ink the ocean fill,
Were all the earth of parchment made,
Were every single stick a quill,
And every man a scribe by trade,
To write the love of God above
Would drain the ocean dry,
Nor could the scroll contain the whole,
Though stretched from sky to sky.

PRESIDENT FAIRCHILD'S TESTIMONY.

BY BEN L. RICH.

Strange isn't it that in this vaunted age of advancement, there should be manifested such ignorance, in the clerical profession, of things 'Mormon?" Ministers of the popular and worldly pulpit in Christendom, who, above all men, should know and speak the truth, whenever they try to account for the origin of the Book of Mormon, rehearse the long since exploded theory, that the plot and language of a story written by Solomon Spaulding in 1812 were stolen by Joseph Smith, who used, they affirm the gist or substance of this narrative in editing the Book of Mormon. Ignorance is an embarrasing quality, but when the narrowness of the ministerial order is taken into consideration, sorrow, more than indignation, is expressed for the mentally contracted condition of the bulk of self-styled disciples of the Lamb. For surely none would accuse our friends of the cloth of deception in their treatment of a cause so misrepresented as is Mormonism. It cannot be hypocrisy or intentionally unfair treatment on their part; because the untiring Elder from Zion has only known and circulated the facts of the discovery and whereabouts of the facts of the Spaulding story since 1885. But there is consolation in the promise that the time will come when truth will fill the earth even as the waters cover the deep. Probably not until then will the gospel of Christ be free from slander or be seen in its true light.

A noted divine's tirade on "Mormonism" in Ohio, caused the following communication to be written to the President of Oberlin College; and it is hoped that it may fall into the hands of earnest investigators who will look well into the two sides of the question in hand before passing judgment:

"Columbus, Feb. 6, 1900.

President James H. Fairchild, Oberlin College, Ohio:

My Dear Sir: You will, I trust, pardon the intrusion of a "Mormon" Elder.

I desire to hear from you, directly, whether or not the account published over your signature in the New York Observer is true, which credits you with saying that Mr. Rice and yourself, with others, made a comparison between the original manuscript of the Solomon Spaulding story, which is now in your college library, and the Book of Mormon, and that there could be detected no semblance either in general or in detail between the two works. If the above assertion is correct, you will do me a very great favor by indorsing this letter and mailing same to my address. If the rendition be not true, would like to obtain a brief explanation from an authorative source. I will be truly very thankful for any information you may give me.

The veracity of your reported testimony referred to has been questioned, and I desire proof for the stand I have taken, hence this communication, which I pray you will not ignore. Yours very respectfully. BEN L. RICH.

211 East Town St., Columbus, O.

The above letter was indorsed by the signature of Mr. Fairchild, with the following note from his daughter, by way of explanation:

"Oberlin, Feb. 12, 1900.

Dear Sir:

"My father's eyesight has failed him almost entirely so that he cannot even sign his name so that it can be read plainly. He tried to write his name at the bottom of your letter and says that your understanding of the case is correct.

ALBERMARLE MOBBING.

Thursday evening, March 15, at 4 o'clock, Elders William H. Jensen and William P. Jacobs entered the small city of Albermarle, N. C., for the purpose of getting their mail. As they approached the postoffice, some scoffs and slurs were hurled at them. After obtaining their mail the Elders started to leave the city, when some cowardly persons began to throw rocks. Thinking to get redress in the laws of the country, the court house was entered. Having enquired for the sheriff, and being informed he was out of town, they were then invited by a lawyer into his office. After a short conversation upon the gospel, the Elders left, but were surprised to find the hall crowded with a threatening lot of people.

The sheriff's son acted in his father's absence, but when appealed to by the Elders, refused them protection, even being implicated in the lawless acts. Upon stepping out into the hall the Elders were immediately surrounded by the hard-hearted and unchristianized crowd. Some went up stairs and when the Elders passed the windows, amid yells and jeers, a suffed scare-crow was thrown upon them. The ones below siezed the dirty form, hammering their victims of injustice, on the heads. After suffering this abuse and having traveled about one hundred yards, they were halted, by the leaders, who were leading merchants of the city; men who claimed to be Christians. We are not heathens, was the cry, we are enlightened Christians; we have ministers, and now you get out of here. At this moment a man with sleeves rolled up and hands covered with paint, stepped forward, rubbing the color upon the faces of God's servants. Out of this crowd of hundreds, but one had stamina enough to lift a voice in defense of justice. A woman was that person who cried out, Stop that! you have gone far enough. The demand had the desired effect and the Elders left town. Being informed that a mob was following them, they took to the woods, making their way through a dense forest. The night was dark, rainy and cold, but the Elders put their trust in God and finally after a walk of eight miles, arrived at the house of a friend, who cared for their wants.

Such are the facts concerning the treatment of two humble men. When we see how God's anointed are treated today, does not it remind one of the trials and persecutions heaped upon Christ and his followers? When our Lord came upon the earth Satan waged war against Him, and His righteous course, filling the minds of mankind with hatred, strife and murder. Although the gospel was taken from the earth some years after the cricifixion of Christ, yet the adversary continued his work of destruction.

The very same wicked design filled the hearts of the cowards at Albermarle, when they attacked the Elders as was manifest in the days of Christ. For shame, when men, claiming to be Christians, boasting of American liberty, will pounce upon defenseless men, like a pack of wolves. Those very brutes (they cannot be called men) will have to stand before the judgment seat and give an account of their evil deeds. Woe unto that city for this is the second time abuse has been heaped upon the Elders there. In August, 1892, Elders Winder and Bartholomew were rudely handled by people of the same stamp in the same city of Albermarle.

Evidently there are some people living who properly belong to the Dark Ages. But we feel to say with the mistreated brethren "Lord forgive them, for they know not what they do." It may be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of Judgment than for Albermarle, North Carolina.

I am a little Latter-day Saint girl of 11 years. I have been deaf in my left ear all my life; I don't think I ever did hear well with it. On the 2d of February last I was instantly cured by the power of God, through the laying on of hands and anointing with oil. Elders Gwindel and Larson were the instruments in the hands of God, and this is testimony to me that gifts and blessings follow those who believe.

A testimony written to the Star by Miss Dora Hunnicutt, of Seneca, S. C.:

Dear Editor.

As I have been a reader of this most interesting paper for more than a year, I will be pleased to testify to the Christian influence of the Gospel as taught by the Elders of Israel. From a child I knew nothing of the Mormons, except when I was quite young I remember of some Elders visiting our home, and I was so young religion did not enter my mind. My brother, William J. Hunnicutt, left home about that time, going to Colorado, where he joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He soon married a fair western girl and made his home in the west. Thirteen years passed, when he was called to fill a mission, and is now laboring in the South Carolina Conference. During the time my brother was away from home he sent us much church literature explaining the doctrines of Christ. I treated all reading matter sent me with profound indifference and became a member of the Baptist church when 13 years of age, and lived as true and pure as I could. I liked some principles, others I did not. I thought of joining the Methodist or Presbyterian church, but could not find in either the ideal Church of Jesus Christ. Last March, one year ago, my brother spent a few weeks with us at his old home. He taught me the principles of the Gospel, and I also began to read the literature he had sent. I accepted the truth and was baptized Aug. 27th, 1899, by my brother. I feel that all who live Godly in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution. I can rejoice that I heard the word of God by those who have authority to administer in the ordinances. I bear my testimony to the world that this is the word of God. If anyone will do the will of the Father they shall know of the doctrine.

Claro, S. C.

To The Southern Star.

Thinking that my testimony to the truthfulness of the gospel may lead others to the light, I take great pleasure in writing this to you. I was baptised in April, 1898, by Elder Nelson Cotton, whom I recognize as a servant of God. Although I have had many trials and temptations to withstand, it is a great joy to know I have the Lord to help me overcome them; and it only increases my faith and testimony in the same. I find great consolation in the words of the Savior: "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake: for theirs is the kingdom of Heaven." I am thankful to our Heavenly Father that I have been permitted to accept the gospel of Jesus Christ, and by the help of the Lord, I will remain faithful to the end. I know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God; that the gospel which is being taught by the Latter-Day Saints is the true and only plan. I ask God to bless those who are striving to do His will, and desire an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

I am your sister in the cause of truth,

Elders Banished from Denmark.

President Andreas Peterson writes from Copenhagen under date of March 3d, 1900, as follows:

"Elders Charles C. Ronnow and Thos. P. Jensen, who were laboring in Bornholm, had papers served on them to leave the Kingdom of Denmark at once, because they were American citizens and missionaries from Utah.

"They then applied to the American Minister for protection, as being American citizens. He at once stayed the execution of the decree, until some investigation was made. The Minister soon found out the main reasons, which were emigration from Denmark to Utah and polygamy, hence he advised us to state our views on these questions, which we did as follows:

"We, the undersigned missionaries of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, hereby affirm that we have not been instructed or advised by the President of our Church, nor anyone else, to teach or encourage the practice of plural marriage, or polygamy; nor to teach or encourage the emigration from Denmark, or any other country, to the United States; neither have we advised or instructed those who labor with us or under our direction to teach or encourage polygamy or emigration, but to the contrary we are instructed and we do instruct those we labor with not to teach polygamy nor emigration, but to teach the people to live and abide by the Manifesto issued by President Wilford Woodruff, April, 1890, and also approved by his successor, President Lorenzo Snow; and to teach the people that they can live Christian lives in their own country as well as elsewhere. We further affirm that we have not at any time taught the people any other doctrine than that contained in Holy Writ.

Andreas Peterson, President of the Scandinavian Mission.

"Jacob Christensen, President of the Copenhagen Conference.

"Charles G. Ronnow, Thomas P. Jensen, A. J. Nielsen, Peter Hansen, Oluf Johnsen, C. J. Plowman, F. Christensen and A. H. Bergman, Traveling Missionaries.

"On the strength of this statement the American Minister demanded that the banishment be revoked, but yesterday the Minister wrote to Charles C. Ronnow as follows:

"'I am in receipt of a note from the Minister of Foreign Affairs in which he informs me that the Minister of Justice does not find sufficient grounds for revoking the decree of banishment against you and Mr. Thomas P. Jensen.

"'Respectfully yours,

"'L. S. Swenson.'

"I have had the privilege of interviewing the American Minister thrice, the last time today; he is a fine man, and I am satisfied that he has done all that he possibly could for us. He read to me the full statement from the Minister of Justice to him, in which he says that our points have been well considered and have modified his views in regard to us." —Millennial Star.

PURE RELIGION.

BY ELDER J. S. SEARS.

The poet Burns has said "Religion, my honored friend, is surely a simple business, as it equally concerns the ignorant and the learned, the poor and the rich."

True, indeed, religion is a simple thing, so plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein, yet some will not sense its true meaning. James tells us that "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, 'To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unsported from the world." Then religion implies that we must care for the fatherless and widows, in fact, to do good whenever opportunity presents itself.

Wealth today walks with head uplifted—proud and haughty—upon the path which Justice and Mercy should travel, but alas they are crowded from their true and rightful position, pushed aside into the gutter of worldly wickedness; to be trampled in the mire. Well might the inscription which graces the American coin be changed to "In thee we trust," instead of "In God we trust." Wealth possession produces pride which is not at all pleasing in the sight of the Heavenly Father. Class distinction being produced by pride, has separated many who claim to be Christians from doing their duty unto their fellowmen. Go to a large city today and you will find people living within a short distance, yes, often beneath the very shadow of "Czar Wealth," who are actually starving. Men despondent and worn out by worry, because they cannot help those who are dependent upon them. Children sick and almost naked, crying to a helpless parent for bread, while hundreds are feasting in luxury. Perchance the never tiring mother, sick and unable for work, one of many, has worn blisters upon her fingers serving for a mere pittance to ward off the wolf "starvation." Rents to meet or be thrown upon the mercies of an unmerciful world, hopeless, despondent, to be pitied, are thousands of people today, cast down and bound by a proud people claiming to be Christians, who eat their luxurious food from golden spoons, surrounded by pomp and splendor, while thousands of honest in heart want for things to sustain life. How dare people say they believe in God and deny His inspired teachings to care for those in need?

If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? I John, 4:20.

The poor ye have with ye always, to be sure, yet many are made poor on account of their own disobedience. He who deals with God with a slack hand shall be made poor, so reads the Sacred Book; for this very reason many today are made to suffer for lack of doing their duty. Others are poor because they would more gladly serve their Heavenly Father with mind, might and strength, devoting their time, talents and all to advance mankind, instead of trampling them beneath their feet and bowing down to worship money. Ever keeping in mind the words of Whittier, contained in "My Prayer."

If there be some weaker one,
Give me strength to help him on;
If a blinder soul there be,
Let me guide him nearer Thee;
Make my mortal dreams come true,
With the work I fain would do;
Clothe with life the weak intent,
Let me be the thing I meant;
Let me find in Thy employ
Peace that dearer is than joy;
Out of self to love be led,
And to heaven acclimated,
Until all things sweet and good
Seem my nature's habitude.

Often the cloak of religion is used to shield the evil deeds of men from mankind, yet God knows all things. Every sect, no matter how sincere or pure its motives, has within its fold commandment breakers. Yet we cannot condemn all because some are impure.

"Because one rose on a grand rose tree,
Has, by a canker foul, been blighted,
Will all the roses that on it we see
In their beauteous bloom be slighted?

So numerous are the temptations offered to mankind, but a small portion keep themselves unspotted from the world. The Sabbath, designed as a day of rest, a day for the quintessence of noble thought and worship, is often rudly broken. How often is silence broken by the chattering of a fast-driven team, or the wild whirl of a gay party of fun seekers. None are so good but that a higher mark of perfection can eb reached. To those who obey a great reward awaits them. Life is but short and every effort made to advance mankind is a step nearer God.

How long we live not years but actions tell,
That men live twice who live the first life well.

After the Mormons.

Another bill of unusual design has been introduced in the house. It is intended as a blow at the Mormons, but might apply to others, depending entirely upon who will construe the law. Below we give a copy, which reads as follows:

A BILL

To Prevent the Dissemination of Doctrines Contrary to the Bible.

Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of South Carolina:

Section 1. That from and after the approval of this act, it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, sect or organization, to disseminate or propagate, either publicly or privately, orally or in writing or print, any religious system, creed or doctrine which does not originate in the Bible, or depend for its authority upon the Bible, as commonly understood in its essential doctrines, or which recognizes any other book as of equally divine authority with the Bible.

Sec. 2. That any person or persons found to be engaged in South Carolina, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction, shall be punished as now provided by law for the punishment of persons convicted of vagrancy.

The committee did not approve of the bill in its original shape and recommended the following in its stead:

A BILL

To Declare Persons Engaging in Certain Practices Vagrants, and to Prescribe Punishment Therefor.

Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of South Carolina:

Section 1. That from and after the approval of this act, it shall be unlawful for any person or persons (without occupation sufficient to yield him or her or them support other than teaching or teachings hereinafter mentioned) to disseminate or propagate anywhere in this state, publicly or privately, orally or by any writing or print, or otherwise, any teaching or teachings at variance with or contrary to good morals as recognized by the laws of this state. And any such person or persons be and hereby is or are, declared vagrants, and upon conviction before any court for competent jurisdiction, shall suffer the punishment now prescribed by law for persons convicted of vagrancy.

From this it appears that a man with enough to live on might go ahead disseminating any doctrine he pleased and he would not be molested. The main offense seems to be not taking up collections, but going about preaching "without scrip or purse."

The above is clipped from a South Carolina paper. Jesus said (Luke x): "After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before His face into every city and place, whither He Himself would come." "Therefore, said He unto them, the harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth laborers into His harvest. Go your ways; behold! I send you forth as lambs among wolves. Carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes; and salute no man by the way. And into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house. And if the son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it; if not, it shall turn to you again. And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give; for the laborer is worthy of his hire."

Jesus would have a hard time of it if He were to visit South Carolina, traveling without purse or scrip, should the above bill become law.

The Richest Church in the World.

That church is the Established Church in England. Yet in that church are to be found the poorest and the worst paid and most starveling clergy in the world. There are 13,939 parochial benefices in England and Wales, the Guardian tells us. In the northern provinces there are 127 benefices under £100 a year, the average value of each being £65. In the southern province there are no fewer than 1,214 benefices under £100 a year. And bear in mind these are benefices, and on their income a minister has to support a wife and family, unless he has private means—that is, unless he works for the National Church at his own cost. If the Guardian would only tell us the financial status of the unbeneficed clergy, of the curates, the figures would be painfully interesting. It is a disgrace to any church and a libel on Christianity to see great prelates and ecclesiastical dignitaries rolling in wealth and pomp, while the men who do the rough work are starving in want. That is not the fraternity of Christ nor the morality of His Gospel. It is the cunning and the covetousness of a world that is avaricious. "Sell all you have and give to the poor" parson ought to be preached to the titled and untitled ecclesiastics who are drawing huge salaries while their brethren are hungering for food. The man of the world is shocked at these things, and more shocked when appeals are made to him to redress them.—Catholic Times.

THE DEAD.

Brother E. N. Osborn, of Owl Hollow, Franklin county, Tennessee, has received from the great Master of heaven and earth an honorable release from labors here; he succumbed to the summons of death at his home March 2d, 1900—the cause of his demise being a severe attack of pneumonia fever. Brother Osborn was an energetic worker; a loving husband; a dutiful father, and a true Latter-day Saint. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his loss—the two youngest now lying in a critical condition, afflicted with the same disease which caused their father's death. In the departure of Brother Osborn from this mortal sphere, the family have lost a faithful head, the community a worthy citizen, and the Elders a staunch, true friend; however, we have this consolation, "We shall meet beyond the river, where the surges cease to roll."

The prayers of all Israel are earnestly desired in behalf of the sorrowing wife and the afflicted children.

Better be despised for too anxious apprehension than ruined by too confident security.—Burke.

Bible and the Sciences.

Deseret News.

The verification of the Bible by the sciences is one of the most interesing subjects of human inquiry. As far as it has been carried on, it has been entirely satisfactory to believers. It has shown most conclusively that there is the strongest possible ground for faith.

Biblical hygiene, for instance, shows conclusively that the author of it was perfectly familiar with the human system and the causes of many diseases.

The rules of the Mosaic legislation are often suggestive of the most advanced, modern discoveries. By these rules "unclean" animals, those most likely to convey diseases, were excluded from the diet; the blood of no animals was to be eaten, and effectual and clean cooking was specially provided for, thus reducing the danger of infection by microbes to a minimum. Further, all earthen vessels that had come into contact with unclean food were to be destroyed, and all other vessels were to be thoroughly cleaned. No diseased animals were to be eaten, and their fitness for food was determined by the soundness of the delicate vital organs.

Much in this ancient legislation was in the ignorant ages of man considered as prejudice, or ceremonial enactments without justification, but in the light of modern science which has revealed a world in a drop of water or a particle of dust, the Mosaic code becomes intelligible and gives evidence of its divine origin.

Equally striking is the testimony of astronomy. All are familiar with the statement that the shadow on the sun dial of Ahaz went back 10 degrees in the days of Hezekiah, the king of Judeh. (II Kings, xx:8-11.) It is also well known that the historical account of this statement has been doubted, and that it has been set down as a myth, or perhaps an allegory.

Now in a recently published work by George F. Chambers, a fellow of the Royal Astronomical society of England, the author proves that the miracle was an actual occurrence. By going back through the annals of astronomy, he finds that on Jan. 11, in the year 689 B. C., there was a partial eclipse of the sun at 11:30 a. m., visible in Jerusalem.

The instrument on which the miracle was shown must have been a sun dial in use at that time. It was a contrivance by means of which a shadow was cast along a given line. But it is evident on reflection that the darkening of the upper limb of the sun by the passing moon would produce on the sun dial the effect of the shadow going back during the progress of the eclipse.

On one important subject—the age of man on earth—there seems at present to be serious disagreement between the Bible and science. But there can be no doubt that discrepancies will finally be removed. Geology and kindred sciences are young yet. Theology, too, has much to learn. When all the facts are sifted down, it may be found that the disagreement is only between enthusiastic scientists and Bishop Usher's biblical chronology. The Mosaic account of the creation and of the appearance of men will be corroborated finally.

GLEANINGS.

Last Monday, after a ten days' trip. President Rich returned to Chattanooga. He went to Key West to look over the country, and from there to Cuba on a pleasure trip. The historical island is teeming with interesting scenes, and in all the visit was very much enjoyed.

Brother Henry L. Marble, of Concho, Apache county, Arizona, sends us four subscriptions to the Star. In closing he says: Thanking you for the calander you sent.

Well done thou good and faithful servant, may others do likewise.

There are about 100 students attending the B. Y. Academy, who will soon be in the missionary field. Ninety per cent. of them are needed in the south. Come brethren, come.

Elders O. K. Meservy and Ray Mecham are laboring in Charleston, S. C. The News and Courier, among other things. says: "The Elders are smooth articles and they refuse to stand for a throw down, even when it is given by the owner of a pretty or charming face. Introducing themselves, the Elders say they have called to see the gentleman of the house, although the lady will do, and before a person can retreat they begin to rattle off a song and dance about Mormonism and Brigham Young that makes an ordinary housekeeper dizzy. It is not a pleasant thing for a lady, who has to answer the bell in the absence of a servant, to be held up and asked: why she does not become a Mormon in word as well as deed, and then to be chided because she says she is not out for that kind of graft. The Elders are persistent. A smooth book agent could learn lots in the matter of nerve from these people, who are now working the city to a finish, and it is not until a door has been slammed violently in their faces that they consent to move on like the tramp. Constant "scorns" have not made the Elders nervous, for when they are cast aside from one place they go to another, and stick there like a a leach, until driven away.

"Several ladies, who have complained to one reporter within the past few days, are anxious to know if there is not some way by which they can be protected from the unwelcome visits of the Salt Lake grafters. Enough Mormon literature has been scattered in the city within the past few weeks to stock a whole county in Utah, and the Elders are still on the lay. They are out for the converts."

A little truth, much slush as usual when "Mormonism" is to be considered. It is but fair to say that the next day after the above was published, the same paper was broad enough to publish a statement from the Elders as well as the articles of Faith with scriptural references. As to the reporter, who wrote the article from which we have quoted, if it was not for the fact that we are taught to love our enemies and pray for those who despitefully use us we would say he is in a fair way to be with those without the gates of the Beautiful City, as described in Rev. 12, by John, the Revelator. It may be, however, that he is not a believer in a burning hell or else has resigned himself to his fate.

PRESS NOTICES.

We are this week in receipt of a calendar printed by the Southern Star, published at Chattanooga, Tenn. It will be of use to us and will receive a prominent place in our sanctum.—Manti Messenger.

The Democrat is in receipt of a nice calendar, compliments of the Southern Star, the official organ of the Southern mission, published at Chattanooga, Tenn. Thanks.—Utah County Democrat.

The Southern Star, published by the Southern States Mission of the Latter-day Saints Church in Chattanooga, Tenn., has sent the Post one of its calendars. It is certainly unique and has an expressive half tone entitled "Papa's on a Mission."—The Post, Idaho.

We have received a copy of "The Southern Star" calendar for 1900, issued by the Star Publishing Co., of Chattanooga, Tenn. There is a half-tone engraving printed on it representing a scene in the home of Elder George Palmer, Farmington, Utah, who is a missionary to England. Three children in their "nighties" are kneeling at mother's knee in evening prayer. It is a unique picture for a calendar, and while pretty enough, the very fact of such a scene being created for a camera detracts from the influence the thought of it otherwise would have. However, we congratulate our Southern contemporary on its enterprise.—Cardston Record, Alberta, Canada.

SOUTHERN STAR

"BUT THOUGH WE, OR AN ANGEL FROM HEAVEN, PREACH ANY OTHER GOSPEL UNTO YOU THAN THAT WHICH WE HAVE PREACHED UNTO YOU, LET HIM BE ACCURSED." GAL. 1:8 & 9

VOL. 2. CHATTANOOGA, TENN., SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1900. No. 18.

Elder Lewis R. Anderson.

The "releases and appointments" column of this issue of the Star will be of especial interest to our readers, inasmuch as under the heading of "Honorably Released," will be found the name of Elder Lewis R. Anderson. Very few, if any, of our readers, especially in the south, but will at once realize that in the release of Brother Anderson, the Mission loses one of its hardest workers, and one of the most faithful and energetic servants of God that has labored in this Mission at any time.

Elder Anderson reached Chattanooga from Zion, March 23, 1898, and was assigned to labor in the Middle Tennessee

ELDER LEWIS R. ANDERSON.

Conference. He labored in the capacity of traveling Elder for about four months, when he was called to the office to take charge of the railroad business.

When President Rich assumed the reins of government of the Mission, Elder Anderson was chosen as his second counselor, Elder Nelson being first. At the release of Elder Nelson, he was chosen as his successor, and has since held that position, having also had the honor of being the first president of the Chattanooga Conference.

While in the field he had the experience of being mobbed, having had meetings broken up, and rocks thrown at him, and otherwise maltreated, with but little injury. During the labors of Brother Anderson in the office he has seen 439 Elders arrive and 500 released. He has been the "old standby" of the mission, having filled at one time or another, every place in the office.

Since Elder Maycock left for Ohio he has edited the Star, and to him, as much as to anyone, belongs the honor of making this paper what it is today. While he has not always filled the editorial chair, he has ever been a tireless worker for the advancement of the work, and always willing and ready to fill any vacancy that might occur. The same might be said of all of the many positions he has held. Besides filling the part assigned to him, he was ever ready to aid others in whatever they had to do and if anything out of the ordinary or of a difficult nature arose, it was given to Brother Anderson.

We doubt that there is an Elder in the field at present, but what has some pleasant word of council, comfort or encouragement and many smiles and indescribable kindnesses by which to remember him. He was always ready to sympathize and comfort in sorrow, counsel and cheer in trouble, and rejoice in the joy of others; being the last man to let his sorrows be known, or to burden others with his personal cares.

While in the field he made many true and life-long friends, and it is a well-known fact that wherever Elder Anderson had made a friend, there a "Mormon" Elder would always find the latch-string on the outside. In attending to the labors of the office he has made friends of many of the business men of Chattanooga, who are unanimous in declaring that his business methods are perfection, and his principles without fault.

While we very much regret having to part with so noble and grand a character, we rejoice with him in his honorable return to the bosom of his family and association of loved ones and friends. We know that his interest in the wellfare of the Mission will not diminish with his return home, and will still feel that we have one on whom to call in time of need: one who will ever be on the watch for opportunities to further God's work in the south.

We feel that it is useless to try to tell all of his good qualities, because our language is inadequate and our pen fails at the task. Those who have met President Anderson know that to associate with him for any length of time, is to love him, and "the better known the more loved." We will miss him in every department, and feel to say that his peers are few and his superiors none. His friends are as numerous as his acquaintances. His very presence inspires goodness, and one, after having associated with him and learned to know him for what he is, is convinced that he is indeed one of God's noblemen. We feel to say God bless and prosper him.

children in her hands. If she be kind, lovable and painstaking in her care for them, she is shaping the grand figure of duty to God and man for them to admire. A kind and loving father and mother are some of the many blessings granted the subject of this sketch, Elder W. H. Boyle, President of the South Alabama Conference. He was born October 19th, 1874, at Santiquin, Utah county, Utah, and is the son of W. H. and Mary Jane Euell Boyle. Like many others, his boyhood days were spent at home on the farm and attending school. When but 12 years of age he commenced to work away from home during the summer months, returning home to attend school during the reign of the snow king. With a mother intensely interested in school and education, she instilled within the minds of her offspring the grandeur of learning. "Never be late" was her motto, and today Elder Boyle beholds the beauty of promptness in all duties. When a young man he was granted the privilege of attending the Brigham Young Academy at Provo. Indeed it was a happy change to be transplanted from the underground of an unvirtuous mine to the pure, noble, reforming influence of this great temple of learning. At once this marked change was noticed and realized, showing clearly that environments largely mold the destiny of mankind. Two years were spent at this school, Elder Boyle doing his own cooking and taking care of his own room. A little money was earned each week by milking cows and tending to stock; thus the first year's tuition was paid. The second year he went to school $7.80 was his total of money. Later he taught school for three years, and was so engaged when called to work for the Lord. Much time was also spent in connection with the Sunday School and Y. M. M. I. Association. His grandfather, Henry G. Boyle, was a native of West Virginia, and suffered the hardships of the exodus across the plains, also serving in the Mormon Battalion. Henry G. Boyle was the first President of the Southern States Mission, and styled the "great friend maker." In a letter President Boyle writes: My greatest ambition now is to do my duty and to do the will of my Heavenly Father. This mission has taught me to realize more what a grand and broad subject the glorious plan of salvation is. I pray I may endure to the end.

History of the Southern States Mission.

April, 1896—

During this month a very praiseworthy and important move was made by the Elders. The canvass of large cities alike with small villages was made without purse and scrip. This is but a testimony that the Lord can and does raise up friends for His faithful servants amid the haughty and proud found in large cities. For some time President Kimball had put forth an indefatigable effort to convince the Elders of the necessity of thus canvassing, for while working without money has prevailed quite generally throughout the sparsely settled countries, yet in city work it has of late years been thought too hard a task to attempt, money thus filling the vacuum of lacking faith. It was left for Elders Orson S. Taylor and Thomas C. Romney to "break the ice." They entered the city of Lynchburg, Va., (which had a population of about 25,000), fasting and praying for strength and an opening. Almost immediately upon entering the city a friend appeared and offered his assistance. Each day new friends were made; hotels and boarding houses threw open their doors gratuitously to them, while others supplied them with money with which to properly dress and prosecute their work. Being refused the use of public and private houses in which to hold services, the Elders sought the street corners, and there raised their voices in defense of truth. Policemen stood near to preserve order, and thus was Lynchburg, Va., canvassed. Two companies of Elders, twenty-six in all, arrived during the month. Following is the report of the mission for four months ending April 30, 1896:

Miles walked, 145,247; families visited, 92,592; families re-visited, 18,202, rejected testimonies, 6,500; refused entertainment, 5,170; tracts distributed, 104,970; books sold, 574; books given away, 1,907; books loaned, 1,430; meetings held, 4,002; children blessed, 121; baptisms, 169; Gospel conversations, 3,227.

May, 1896—

On the 6th inst. Elder W. S. Chipman was called to take the place in the office of Elder D. C. Hubbard, appointed to preside over the North Carolina Conference. On the 15th inst., while canvassing the village of Madison, Amhurst county, Virginia, Elders G. H. Webb and H. B. Crouch were mobbed by thirty men, who forced them to leave the village uncanvassed. The mob, wrote Elder M. Thomas, President of Virginia Conference, was led by George Huff, a Justice of the Peace, school teacher, class leader, Sunday School superintendent, adulterer and all around rascal. Elder Webb was dealt a severe blow in the face and on the back of the neck by members of the mob. True to their divine calling—saviors of mankind—not judges—pity filled the Elders' hearts, as they escaped further harm. The matter was presented to Gov. O'Ferrell by President Thomas. The Governor faithfully promised a thorough investigation and if possible bring the outlaws to justice. On the 23d and 24th insts. President Kimball met with the Elders of South Alabama Conference at Bradleyton, Crenshaw county, Alabama. The public meetings were but sparsely attended, but at the council meetings the Elders received the spiritual food they so much needed. When the Elders departed for their fields of labor it was with a renewed determination to labor with more zeal and wisdom in the future, and without purse and scrip. On the 30th and 31st insts. President Kimball met with the Florida Elders at Live Oak, Suwanee county, Florida. Some very successful meetings were held and resulted in much good. Several applied for baptism. Under the inspired management of James A. West, and through his indefatigable efforts, the Florida Conference flourished. During this month good health prevailed and the Elders were at their posts of duty working with their mind, might and strength.

Resigned About His Sheep.

We are often told to "make the best of a bad business," but we have rarely met with a better example of doing so than this, which appeared in Harper's Monthly: The late Capt. G——, of Vermont, was always satisfied. He was one of the early and most successful breeders of merino sheep in this part of the state. He had a large native cosset that he valued highly. His son came in one morning and told him that the cosset had twins. Capt. G—— said he was glad; "she could bring up two as well as one." Soon after his son reported one of the twins dead. Upon this he said the one left would be worth more in the fall than both. In the afternoon the boy told his father that the other lamb was dead. I am glad, said he; I can now fat the old sheep. The next morning the son reported the old cosset dead. "That is just what I wanted; now I have got rid of the breed!"

THE DARK AGES.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY is one of the most memorable of periods. In it shone many rays of truth, which opened the avenues of intelligence upon a dark, benighted and superstitious age. It also presented some of the darkest pictures that have been taken by the scrutinizing camera of Heaven, and which will some day be fully revealed, to the justice of all.

Printing was first introduced, in this century, by John Guttenberg, of Mentz, in the year 1440. This invention has brought more light into the world and disseminated more truth than any one thing. It has been the means of putting the Bible, the word of God, into every country under the sun, and placing it within the reach of all the children of God, in every nation and clime, so that there is now no excuse for a people or a nation being ignorant of the doctrines of Jesus Christ.

The press today rules and bears sway over the intelligences of civilized nations. Opinions are formed through this most potent influence, which spreads truth, and also falshood, scattering broadcast the ideas of men of advanced thought. The nations which produce the most literature, are the most free, conservative, generous, hospitable, benevolent and Christian.

In this century navigation was greatly extended. De Gama sailed around the Cape of Good Hope, discovering the South Sea passage to India, which has been the source of much wealth to Europe.

Columbus discovered America, bringing to light its great wealth and wonderful resources.

All these many agencies which God used in bringing truth and liberty forth in this age of darkness, speak of His goodness to His children.

During this century Mahometanism was being driven out of Europe. The Saracens, or Moors, were subdued in Spain, their last stronghold taken, and Christianity furthered in that country.

The Roman church was still supreme and her arrogance and splendor undiminished. However, she was divided into factions at this time, and three Popes ruled, each one issuing excommunications and anathemas against the others. Nevertheless the Inquisitors were united and faithful laborers in the vineyard of this church, and were instrumental in bringing many heretics to their death.

The latter part of the century produced a Pope, by the name of Alexander, the VI, who was a veritable Nero. He would allow nothing to stand in his way, and with his illigitimate children, is renowned in history, under the name of Borgia. This renown arises from the fact that they put to death, by poison, all who stood in the way of their temporal advancement. Princes, priests and cardinals suffered equally, if they interfered with the majesty of this profligate criminal. Finally, through a mistake, he and his son drank the poison prepared and intended for others, thus dying victims of their own wickedness. This Pontiff is one of the links, in the great chain of professed authority, which it is claimed decended from St. Peter himself.

The Monks of this century were lazy, illiterate, profligate, licentious and sumptuous epicurians, whose views of life were confined to opulence, idleness and pleasure; and who drew upon themselves a popular odium, by their sensuality and licentiousness.

The Mendicants, or Franciscan Friars, who adopted beggary and extreme poverty, as the true following of Christ, were burned and punished with excruciating tortures, for their foolhardy methods.

The reformers made great advancement in this age. The renowned John Huss, a good man, of uncommon sanctity, erudition and learning, who was professor of divinity in the University at Prague, spoke against the corruption of the church of Rome, and endeavored to withdraw his university from under the jurisdiction of Pope Gregory, the XII. He adopted the ideas of Wickliffe and boldly preached them, for which he was expelled from the communion of this church in the year 1410, by Pope John, the XXIII. However, he treated the mandates of John with scorn and contempt, and continued to preach against Rome's corruption, and, strange to say, was almost universally applauded for his efforts. This eminent man, whose piety was truly fervent and sincere, though his zeal perhaps was rather violent, was called before a council, at Constance, condemned as a heretic and burned alive, July 6, 1415. He met death with bravery and resignation; expressing in his last moment the noblest feelings of love to God, and a great hope beyond the grave. Jerome, of Prague, his most intimate companion and friend, was also burned for the same principles, May 30, 1416. The enemies of these men were not satisfied with simply burning them, but their dust and ashes were carefully gathered and thrown into the river Rhine.

The council at Constance, had condemned all the Hussites, as heretics, which caused rebellion and war in Bohemia, much loss of life ensuing. This state of affairs existed between the years 1420 and 1431. The demands of the Hussites were, that the "clergy might be recalled from the pursuit of wealth and power to a life and conduct becoming the successors of the Apostles; and that the word of God might be preached in its purity and simplicity to the people, not according to the ideas of men, but according to the written word."

Both these factions were agreed that it was innocent and lawful to persecute and exirpate, with fire and sword, the enemies of their religion. The Bohemians maintained that Huss had been unjustly put to death, and they thus revenged that act with great severity.

There was a sect at this time called "The Brethren and Sisters of the Free Spirit," who considered themselves free, when divested of all covering, in which condition they used to meet for worship. They also went by the name of Adamites, desiring to imitate Adam and Eve, before the fall. These people suffered martyrdom with great fortitude and courage, until their final extermination.

All the dissensions and revolutions that existed at this time did not disturb the serenity of mighty Rome. She had coped successfully with each uprising, and had suppressed the Waldenses, Albigenses, Beghards and Bohemians, by counsel, sword and fire. These successive revolutions were not considered formidable, and Rome looked upon all of her opponents as weak, contemptable and ignorant fanatics.

The century was remarkable for the spirit of reform. The doctrines of Wickliffe as preached by Huss and Jerome, touched the chords of truth within the hearts of the people, and their whole souls cried out for liberty and freedom. At the same time that the people were filled with this desire to get from under the thraldom of Popery, God was preparing a country for the habitation of free people. An asylum for the oppressed, where peace and happiness could be had and a man sit in the shade of his own fig tree.

Columbus, who was born in Genoa, in the year 1436, was inspired to make his solicitation at the hands of the king and queen of Spain. God worked upon the heart of good Isabella to aid and assist Columbus in his enterprise, the discovery of America. Columbus had all the qualifications of a discoverer. He had courage, was a good sailor, student and navigator, and had great faith in his projected undertaking.

This was remarkable, when we take into consideration, that the prevailing idea was, that the world was flat and not round; and also that the wise men of the time were against the project, rejecting the overtures of the then friendless Columbus.

It appears that the adventures and discoveries of Marco Polo in the flowery kingdom of Japan, had been read with much avidity by and attracted the interest of Columbus, who believed that by sailing in a westerly direction, he could reach that beautful eastern land.

"This is absurd," said those wise men. "Who is so foolish as to believe that there are people on the other side of the world, walking with their heels upward, and their heads hanging down? The torrid zone, through which they must pass, is a region of fire, where the very waves boil. And even if a ship could perchance get around these safely; how could it ever get back? Can a ship sail up hill?" All this seems strange to us now, and these arguments nonsensical, when we see hundreds of travelers annually making the circuit of the globe.

However, Ferdinand and Isabella finally signed the agreement, and the three vessels, which formed this memorable expedition, were furnished. Columbus felt that he was a man of destiny and forordained for his mission. This agrees with the Book of Mormon account, which expressly states that he was moved upon by the spirit of God to accomplish the work of founding this western hemisphere. This great and inspired man was not appreciated, but died in poverty and obscurity, abandoned by the jealous king Ferdinand and the nation, which he had benefitted so greatly by his discoveries. The ingratitude of Spain in this instance, was justly punished by the overthrow of its navy in the Armada, and in recent years by its complete subjugation and defeat by our own nation.

Such despotic, bigoted, religio-superstitious, fanatical nations, will sink into oblivion, while upon the ruins will rise the star of hope, peace, love, freedom and justice.

A Willing Servant.

The letter given below was written to President Rich by Elder Bolin. It breathes forth such a pure spirit of duty and love for God and fellowmen, we take the liberty of publishing the same.—Ed.

Blacksburg, S. C. March 24, 1900.
President Ben E. Rich, Chattanooga, Tenn.:

Our Beloved Leader: Duty prompts me to pen you a few lines this afternoon in order that you might know some of my feelings in the great work in which we are all engaged. And I trust that my letter will not serve as an intruder on your valuable time in this instance. In as much as I have been notified of my release to return home to Zion soon, the question naturally arises in my mind: "Have I done my duty?" It has always been my greatest desire to do enough; a desire too that I should, indeed, be proud of I know, for many a poor man has come and gone from this earth that did not do 'enough.' Again, I know that many thousands are today in death's embrace who would have willingly done their duty, had they been blessed as we are. Ever since the day I planted the farewell kiss upon the lips of my mother and sisters, to come and fill God's call to this fair land, I have been prompted with the voice of duty. Duty has in my whole mission told me to be an active, lively, studious and perseverant worker; told me that it required such in order to do 'enough.' If I only knew that I had not done enough yet, it would suffice, I would then be contented to stay till all had been finished that the Lord had in view in sending me here. Yet, while these thoughts come into my mind, I know that our President in this great mission is inspired of the Lord to say when we have finished our task here. Knowing such to be true, I am perfectly willing to come when I am called and go where I am sent. But President Rich, if I have not done enough in this mission yet, I am here to stay until such is done. I am just as willing as a man could be to serve the Lord and keep his commandments, being eager to do honor to Him; to declare His holy name to the nations and fill an honorable mission, while here in this land. If the Lord and His Priesthood are well pleased with my work here and say "enough," go home, I am like all the sons of dear Zion, ready to go. But if they are not, I will not go, but will stay right here and labor till such can be the case.

In conclusion, let me say, and I wish it was so that all the nations could hear me, that I know, beyond doubt, that Joseph Smith was, and is a prophet of the Lord Jesus; that he was sent in his dispensation to usher in the gospel of the kingdom of God, in the fullness of times. I know that our message to the nations is the voice of the Eternal Father sounding and resounding to them that the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand, and if they want to become kings and priests unto God, and reign with Him on earth, they must have faith in God, repent of all their sins with a godly sorrow, be baptized by one loving authority for the remission of their sins, and receive the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands; lastly, do as Paul says, go on unto perfection. Never in my life have I had so much pleasure as I have experienced during my mission. I know that I have been blessed wonderfully in my work. In fulfillment of the words of one of the Apostles of the Lord in setting me apart for this mission, I have seen the bitterest foes of the church turned with a tear-drop on their cheeks, and are today the right-hand friends of the humble disciple of Jesus. I have seen the sick healed many times, and have traveled with men and heard them also speak in tongues and prophecy many times, which, when blended in with all the testimonies I have received during my experience in the true church of Jesus, causes me to say truly and indeed we are in possession of the true and everlasting gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I am made to say again, "It is good to be a despised Mormon and be privileged to drink of the waters, and eat of the bread of Eternal Life. I hope to see you when I come to Chattanooga and have the privilege of enjoying a few hours in your company. May the Lord bless our great and noble band of Zion's fair sons, who are fighting the foe; may this mission prosper, is the desire of your devoted worker in the gospel cause. ELDER R. A. BOLIN.

The Truth's Reflex, our sister paper, published at St. John, Kansas, makes note of the work done in the Southern States Mission during 1899, and adds in closing: The foregoing speaks well for the Elders in the Southern States, and bears evidence that "Zion is growing," and that the little stone cut out of the mountain without hands is beginning to roll forth with great rapidity. May the good work still go on, until Zion shall rise and triumph and become the pride of the whole earth, and proclaim the glad message of, "Peace on earth, good will to all men."

Editor Southern Star:

Dear Brother: I take pleasure in saying we have had a very enjoyable conference at Milwaukee on the 10th and 11th instant. Twenty-three Elders were present, also President L. A. Kelsch and two Elders from Chicago. There were twenty-two saints and many visitors at our meetings, the hall being filled. Elders J. C. Murdock and J. D. Balls were honorably released to return to their homes in Utah. The balance were assigned to their several fields by Conference President James D. Cummings, and counselors, each of whom gave very good instructions and timely advice to the Elders; and all manifest a desire to go forth in earnest to continue the labor in this part of the Lord's vineyard. Four of us are now in La Crosse and will remain, perhaps, for six months. Everything is wintry as yet. The Elders join me in extending a hearty handshake and kindly greeting to you all. Your brother in the gospel of Christ, Elder Thad H. Chuff.

P. S. We take pleasure in reading the "Star."

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

In writing articles for the Star, please write only on one side of the paper.

A Christian is one who does what the Lord Jesus tells him. Neither more nor less than that makes one a Christian.—Macdonald.

On the 21st inst. President Rich left for the west to attend conference. While absent the mission will be ably presided over by President Hyldahl, who has ever been a faithful and tireless worker for the advancement of the Mission.

Man, like a sponge, is capable of absorbing a great deal from his surroundings; hence the importance of associating with men and women of pure minds.

"If wisdom's ways you'd widely seek,
Five things observe with care;
Of whom you speak, to whom you speak,
And how, and when, and where."
—Gospel Preacher.

THE WOLF AMONG LAMBS.

It would appear from an article written March 10th, 1900, in the Clinton Gazette,. of Clinton, Tenn.. that we were still living in an age of darkness, bigotry and intoleration, when the rights of a citizen are ignored, and acts of lawlessness indorsed even by Christians.

It appears that a man, fiend or Devil, traveling under the divine appellation of Reverend (which is often the cloak for hypocrisy) came from North Carolina and settled in a peaceful hamlet named Wolf Valley, in Anderson county, Tennessee. He had the appearance and garb of the tramp, was hungry and penniless, but had a smooth tongue, and apparently was evading justice, seeking refuge among the innocent and unsophisticated people of Anderson county.

This scoundrel was a Baptist preacher, showed his credentials, invoked the sympathy of a kind family named Rouse, who took him in, pitied, fed and clothed him, and otherwise assisted him.

He finally succeeded in getting a church in that vicinity, denominated "The Zion Baptist Church." This was last October, and from that time to the present, he has apparently pleased his congregation, who seem to indorse mobocracy, filth, lawlessness, adultery and wickedness. How this man, or emissary of evil, has converted his flock to his system of Christianity, it is hard to conceive in this age of enlightenment. However, he paid his benefactor, Mr. Rouse, for his hospitable kindness by foully betraying his confidence, committing rape or adultery with his wife. This vile reverend monster also had the audacity to assault and mistreat an innocent Mormon Elder, who was attending to his own business. But what appalls us more than anything else is that his church indorses his nefarious actions and looks upon him as a martyr, as the following resolution will show:

"Whereas, Our friend, Brother Eaton, came in contact with a Mormon Elder and gave him a genteel thrashing; Resolved, that we, as a Sunday School, tender him our thanks for his righteous deed;

"Second, that if he got his clothes soiled in the combat, we will gladly pay for having them washed;

"Third, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to Brother Eaton, and one to the county paper for publication."

The newspaper in question also contains the following:

"There has been quite a sensation in the Fourth concerning the alleged crime of Rev. Eaton. He was arrested last Sunday, charged with committing rape on Mrs. J. M. Rouse. He was tried before Esquire Chapman on last Monday and bound to court. Mr. Eaton came to this county from North Carolina last fall, and has made his home with Mr. Rouse the most of the time since. He stated on the witness stand that he was not guilty of the crime, but that he and Mrs. Rouse had been on very intimate terms since last October, and that she charged him with this crime to avoid being disgraced. The people generally, who heard the evidence, believe the statements of Mr. Eaton. The alleged crime was said to have occurred on Feb. 22d, and the warrant was not issued until March 4. Mr. Eaton has had care of Zion Baptist church, of which Mr. and Mrs. Rouse are members, since December last."

The above is almost too filthy to publish, but from the testimony of one who was present at the trial it is certain that this vile monster was guilty of at least unlawful cohabitation with the wife of the man who befriended him when in need. He is now languishing in Clinton jail, waiting the action of the court, and is not worthy of our attention, but from the fact that his actions receive the sympathy of his church, who have passed resolutions to sustain him in crime.

Eleven months ago a Mormon church was burned down in this vicinity, and it would appear that this reverend rascal knew who committed this dastardly incendiary act, as he has threatened to betray this confidence, which appears to have been reposed in him through Mrs. Rouse.

It is true that "murder will out," and perhaps the day is not far distant when the secret actions of these demons will come to light; but for a scoundrel who would betray the confidence of a friend, commit a vile crime with his wife and then threaten and intimidate that wife with an exposure of her secrets, is a low down villain of the deepest dye, and the law should execute the extreme penalty. He should be forsaken by all respectable people and those called Christians, and not allowed to practice his divinity (?) among the people.

A community that will indorse such sentiments as expressed in the resolution that was adopted are certainly in the dark, groveling in bigotry, and intoleration that would do credit to the age when people were burnt at the stake. The inquisition of Spain, that operated the auta da fe for hundreds of years in the dark ages, can only be compared to the divine (?) resolution of this unchristian body.

Is it not time that protection should be granted innocence, and justice meted out to law-breakers? How pitiful in this land of free schools and liberty to find such ignorance and intolerance existing. Would it not be well to study the "Declaration of Independence," for which many of our fathers fought and bled, and have the same published and inscribed on every church edifice and school house? So that at least the rising generation will indorse liberty, freedom and tolerance. Let us advance in the light of intelligence and civilization, and not retrograde and fall into the dark abyss of sin, ignorance and superstition.

THE CORN OR THE COB—WHICH?

Modern Christians pride themselves on not needing the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit nor the direction and guidance of Apostles and Prophets. They boastfully and contentedly assert. "these were for the early Saints, but not for us."

The Apostles and Prophets and the gifts of the Spirit of God were made indispensable parts in the body of the Church of Christ (I Cor., 12,) and all those who believed and obeyed the Gospel fell heir to the gifts of the Spirit, and to the counsel and instruction of Apostles and Prophets (Acts 2:38-39, Mark 16-15-19, Eph. 2:11-15).

These beneficial and divine garnishments of the Church of Jesus Christ might be called, figuratively speaking, the invigorating and life-giving kernels of corn of the Gospel, and Christians who deem them unnecessary for themselves, being content with their meager lot, when they can obtain the richest Gospel grain, are declaring to the world, "To the early Saints God gave the corn, but to us the cob." (Poor argument to use in converting the heathens, indeed!)

It is self-evident that this self-denial of the absolute necessaries of spiritual life is not charity to self. A person who would deliberately and stubbornly starve to death in the midst of luxurious food, which could be had by simply the reaching, could not be said to possess neither charity for self, nor wisdom.

Sending forth the Star among the people is our method of taking them by the hand and wishing them success and prosperity. God bless you to the righteous, repent ye and obey the Gospel to the wicked. To the Saints cheering words are given, tending to invigorate the weak and make the strong stronger. News of their loved ones and friends, who are traveling and preaching the Gospel of Christ in the world, is narrated. To the Elders questions of importance upon spiritual, mental and physical development are put forth, penned by inspiration from on high, by true servants of God. It places him in touch with his friends in the four quarters of the globe, and cheers him to press forward on his righteous errand. To those good friends who have ever been so kind to the Elders, those who have often welcomed them after a journey through mud, rain and cold, with "come in, gentlemen, our home is a safe abiding;" to them a merciful Father will reward and prosper. The glad tidings of a restored Gospel—peace on earth, good will to men—is sent forth to the honest in heart, and may it mid worldly confusion be as oil upon troubled waters, giving hope of salvation.

The renewal blanks inclosed in the last number of your Star were sent to all subscribers alike, but applied only to those whose subscriptions had expired. If you will observe your address closely you will note beside them the date of the expiration of your paper; marked, for example, 3dec99, which means that your paper expired on the 3d of December, 1899. If your subscription has not expired you have no use for the blanks, but if it has, and you desire to continue your subscription, you can use them in renewing the same.

Many and varied are the experiences of the canvassing Elder. A few days ago Elders James S. Blake and George E. Cook were distributing tracts in Raleigh, the capital of North Carolina. In the course of their travels they called at the office of a Mr. Everett, a dentist, who, on learning they were "Mormon" Elders, let fly the following, catching hold of the door and pointing the way as he did so:

"Mormons!" "What impudence to come up here." "Get out of here. " "You're cheeky to come up here; if I did not have some ladies here I'd give it to you."

The brethren write: "We left him to quietly pursue his 'extracting' process, feeling well paid for our visit, though we tried to explain as he slammed the door in our face that we were distributing our religious tracts and wanted peace. Thus are we despised for Christ's sake."

We presume the dentist professes Christianity and wonder what he would have done had there been no ladies present. Truth affects people in various ways and it seems to take all kinds of people to make a world. No doubt Brother Everet "extracts" without pain. We are glad he has respect for ladies.

"We have gathered posies from other men's flowers, nothing but the thread that binds them is ours."

PROTECTION DEMANDED.

Below is given a copy of letters sent to the Governor of North Carolina, also the one sent to the sheriff of Stanley county of the same state, which are self explanatory. The mobbing of Elders Jensen and Jacobs, at Albemarle, and a desire for our rights as American citizens, has caused the forwarding of these letters to the proper parties.

Chattanooga, Tenn., March 22.

Hon. Daniel L. Russell, Governor of North Carolina: Raleigh, N. C.:

Dear Sir: Believing it my duty to inform you of the lawless acts of some of your officials and people, in the town of Albemarle, please find with this, a copy of a letter, to the sheriff, of Stanley county, which needs no explanation. Being unable to get justice from the county officials, I appeal to you, to take steps to bring these lawbreakers to answer before the law and to guarantee us, in your state, protection from mob violence. It seems to me that vigorous action should be taken to inform people of this class that no such barbarous acts will be tolerated within your borders. If it is not done it will be taken for granted that North Carolina does not believe in the great American principle of religious liberty. We are American citizens and as such demand protection of the law and a redress of our grievance.

From my information, I am lead to believe that you are a Christian gentleman and a lover of liberty, and take it that you will not only consider it your duty, but an act of charity to bring these people to justice and teach them the first principles of free government, and thus put them in a way to become creditable citizens of your great commonwealth. This is the second time that our Elders have been maltreated in Albermarle, the first case happening some eight years ago. I believe the good people of North Carolina will not tolerate such outrages and will stand at your back in using the strong arm of the law to stop, once and for all, such savagery as perpetrated upon those two defenseless and innocent "Mormon" Elders, in Stanley county on the 15th instant.

I appeal to you as a Governor, and as a man of honor to give this matter your careful consideration. In the name of good government and as a loyal citizen, I ask you to not turn a deaf ear to our petition, and hope to receive an early reply from you that you will uphold us in our rights.

With unbounded faith that you will do right in this matter, I remain most truly yours, BEN. E. RICH, President Southern States Mission.

Chattanooga, Tenn., March 22.

To the Sheriff of Stanley county, Albemarle, N. C.:

Dear Sir: As a loyal citizen of the United States and as President of the "Mormon" missionary work in the south, it becomes my duty to write you concerning the outrage perpetrated on two of my brethren, in Albemarle, on the 15th instant. No doubt, you are thoroughly familiar with the disgraceful affair, but for the benefit of others, I will review the occurance briefly in this letter.

On Thursday evening, March 15th, at 4 o'clock, Elders William P. Jacobs and William H. Jensen, missionaries of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, entered Albemarle for the purpose of getting their mail. They troubled no one and conducted themselves as gentlemen. As they approached the postoffice they were slurred and scoffed at by some parties, and as they were leaving the office some of the crowd were cowardly enough to throw some rocks at these defenseless men, which would have ended their earthly career had the marksmanship been accurate, as intended. These men supposed, that at least, the keepers of the law in Albemarle were Americans, and repaired to the court house to ask for redress and protection from the lawless element who had insulted and assaulted them. They asked for the sheriff, but were told that he was not in town. The rabble (for after what these people had done they can be called neither Americans or Christians) followed to the court house, making all kinds of threats. Unable to find the sheriff, they asked for his deputy, and were told by a friendly lawyer, that his son acted in his absence. To their surprise they found that the deputy sheriff was in league with the cowardly assailants. The Elders now saw clearly that protection, from the officers of the law, was not to be had, and proceeded to go their way. On stepping into the hallway of the court house they were immediately surrounded by an infuriated mob, who proceeded to handle the Elders in a rough manner as they tried to leave. An old, stuffed scare-crow was thrust down upon their heads from an upper window of the court house. Those below seized the dirty form and for some distance used it to beat the Elders, striking them over their heads with the same. Not satisfied in thus maltreating their fellows, a man smeared their faces with paint, and they were otherwise abused. The Elders told their captors they would leave if allowed to do so. One of the crowd said: "We are not heathens here, we are Christians, and enlightened," giving the lie to his words by the actions of himself and associates. No hand was lifted in behalf of these two defenseless men, except that of a respectable lady, who cried: "Stop that." "You have gone far enough," which, thank God, was heeded, and the Elders allowed to go; but they had been on their way but a few minutes when they were warned that the demons were making up a mob to follow them and would have been mistreated again, probably, had they not sought the protection of the friendly woods.

Some of the leaders of this Christian (?) mob were merchants of the town. The streets were lined with spectators, during the melee, who cheered exultingly and looked on in fiendish delight. In the face of all this abuse these men write me: "After wandering in the woods in the dark and cold drizzling rain, until late, we finally found the house of a friend. We bowed upon our knees and thanked God for our deliverance, and felt to say as did the meek and lowly Nazarene, "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." May I ask who showed the Christian Spirit? Are you not ashamed for your people, your county, and your town, that such an outrage should be perpetrated upon two innocent men because they differed from you religiously?

Those men whom your people assaulted are loyal American citizens. No law had been broken by them, they had acted ungentlemanly toward none. However, this is not the first time that your community has disgraced itself. About eight years ago two of our Elders were falsely accused and imprisoned in Albemarle, and after they had been acquitted by the court, were taken by a mob. Is it possible that no ray of light has come to Albemarle, or a large portion of it, in eight years? Why do you continue to mistreat "Mormon" Elders? They force their religion upon none and they use the same

Bible believed by all professing Christianity. Are your people so intolerant that they cannot bear both sides of a story and cannot allow others what they ask for themselves? You may not believe it, some do not want to, but no people in this broad land of ours are more loyal to the flag of our country than the despised "Mormons." In the late war with Spain none served their country more gallantly than the famous Utah battery, composed largely of "Mormon" boys, many of them "Mormon" Elders. In the war with Mexico my people were weighed in the balances and not found wanting, and none will fight harder for liberty to all men under the flag.

Suppose some of your ministers, in Utah (no doubt you contribute for their support every year) were to be treated as you treated ours; you would call on the government to stop such barbarism, would you not? And it is needless to say it would be stopped or an exterminating order would be issued. Am I not right? You would say people who mistreat any of your ministers are not fit to live, would you not? Witness that whenever the Chinese do anything of the kind a battleship is sent.

Down deep in your heart don't you feel that the laws of God, as well as the laws of the land have been counted as naught, in dealing with "Mormon "Elders in your community? Can you read the constitution of our glorious country and say that these people who took part in the outrage on the 15th of the present month, and consented to the same, are Americans?

We desire to injure no man. Our mission is one of love for our fellowman, and we know, if the honest-hearted people of the world understood us and our motives, that they would receive us with open arms.

Can we expect protection from you under the law in the future? I have sent a copy of this letter to the Governor of North Carolina, and also to United States senators from Utah and Idaho. We only want our rights and shall leave no stone unturned to get them. Your people ought to be broad enough to hear both sides and we assure you that in Utah where ignorance, by many, is supposed to reign supreme, that every man will be protected in his rights, be he "Mormon," Jew or Gentile.

If you cannot give us protection we shall give your Governor a chance to say whether North Carolina will foster and encourage intolerance and bigotry, by allowing people to be mobbed for their religious opinions, or whether she will stand for the heaven-born principle of freedom. We want peace and will use all fair means to get justice, if we have to appeal to the highest tribunal in the land. As to vengeance, we leave that to a just Creator, and pray for those who despitefully use us. Yours very respectfully,

BEN. E. RICH.

While two or our Elders were recently canvassing one of Georgia's most beautiful cities, they were met at the door by a middle-aged lady, to whom they handed a tract. She glanced at it for a moment, and upon discovering that it was a "Mormon" tract and that they were "Mormons," she immediately procured a broom and proceeded to sweep the porch where the Elders had stood. It is not known whether she wiped the door knob or not, but it is presumed she did.

"Reading," says Bacon, "maketh a full man, conversation a ready man, and writing an exact man."

PROPHECY FULFILLED.

BY JEREMIAH STOKES, JR.

From the 64th section of the Doctrine and Covenants these prophetic words are recorded as they were given by the Prophet Joseph Smith in the year 1831: "For behold, I shall say unto you that Zion shall flourish and the glory of the Lord shall be upon her, and she shall be an ensign to the people, and there shall come unto her out of every nation under heaven, and the day shall come when the nations of earth shall tremble because of her and shall fear because of her terrible ones. The Lord hath spoken it."

About the time of this prophetic utterance the very few Saints moved from New York, where they first embraced the gospel, to Missouri and Ohio, where they established themselves in a commonwealth of thrift and industry.

Their faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ as it was primitively with its apostles, prophets, seventies, Elders, teachers and deacons, with its living blessing of the spirit of God, the gifts of healing, tongues, interpretation, revelation and prophecy, and all of the fundamental principles of the plan of salvation. Faith, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, together with the indispensible principles of divine authority; their faith in all these ancient and eternal truths made them unpopular, and in the eyes of "Christians" they were counted the most heretical and blasphemous mortals that ever claimed a place in the human family.

As they grew in numbers by the zealousness of their representatives, who eagerly proclaimed the restoration of the gospel, their enemies became more bitter and bold in their opposition.

Ministers of the prevalent Christian churches were vigorous and mean in their actions against the humble Elders who traveled Paul and Peter like —two by two without purse or script. All kinds of libelous fabrications were set on foot against the saints, which made the feeling of hatred so strong against them that many of them were tarred and feathered, whipped, imprisoned, and made the subjects of everything in the catagory of indignities.

The civil officials refused to hear the cries for mercy and protection which constantly came from the lips of the suffering Saints, lest they be called sympathizers with the unpopular church and lose their positions.

In 1834 the intense sentiment against the Saints consumated in their expulsion from Jackson county.

Mobs of men numbering hundreds, among whom masqueraded the local clergy, rushed down upon the people, driving them from their homes, burning their property, and injuring their bodies.

Lieut.-Gov. L. W. Boggs said to some of the Saints at the outset of these outrages, "you know what our Jackson county boys can do and you had better leave the county."

These savage attacks continued, and by advice of a local judge, the Saints attempted to defend themselves, which only made matters worse. Enraged by this action, the mob leader, Col. Pitcher, turned his whole mass of savages upon the settlements of the defenseless Saints. "Out upon the bleak prairies, along the Missouri's banks, chilled by November's winds and drenched by pouring rains, hungry and shelterless, weeping and heart-broken, wandered the exiles. Families scattered and divided, husbands seeking wives, wives their husbands, parents searching for their children, not knowing if they were yet alive."

Thus were about 1,500 souls driven from their homes and possessions in Jackson county. Three hundred houses were burned and ten settlements left in ruins.

The pilgrims took refuge in the counties of Caldwell, Clay, Carroll and Daviess, where they settled again and in 1838 numbered about 12,000 souls.

At this time they were again molested by murderous mobs. They attempted to defend themselves and their action was intrepeted by the aforesaid L. W. Boggs, who was not made Governor, as treason in consequence of which he ordered the state militia into service to quell the disturbance. The Saints appealed to him for redress, but were answered by an edict of extermination, which was brutally executed by the mob and the state militia. During this savage onslaught numbers of the Saints were murdered in cold blood.

The exiles fled to Illinois and swelled the already growing city of Nauvoo to enormous numbers. Here they lived in peace and prosperity for a season, when again they were infested by their enemies, many of whom followed them from Missouri, to their last retreat. So intensely overbearing and cruel became their oppressors that a committee was appointed to wait on President Van Buren, for redress, but their reception was cold and their grievances answered by "your cause is just, but I can do nothing for you."

This encouraged the barbarious demons who lost no time in satisfying their blood-thirsty appetite. Their aim for years had been to kill the Prophet Joseph, whom they had dragged into court not less than thirty-nine times on trumped up charges for which he was as many times honorably acquitted.

But at last they succeeded with the threat, "if the law can't reach him powder and ball shall." They set to work, and on June 27, 1844, their threat materialized. The Prophet's brother, Hyrum, also fell with him, a martyr to the cause of truth.

After this dastardly crime, for which all implicated were either acquitted or left unmolested, the feinds incarnate renewed their attacks on the Saints, burning and plundering their property on the outskirts of the city. Once more the oppressed sought redress from their Governor—Ford by name—but he gave them in meaning, the same sympathetic expressions as President Van Buren: "Your cause is just, but I can do nothing for you."

The people at Nauvoo now numbered upwards of 20,000 souls, comfortable situated and provided for. They minded their own business and lived exemplary lives, both as American citizens and as Saints of God.

To these people God was a living reality, whose arm was not shortened that He could not save nor His ear heavy that He could not hear. They enjoyed the gifts of the spirit of God, they knew the gospel in its primitive beauty and simplicity was true and that God had again restored it to man, and for this they were forced to succor the lance of savagery from the hands of boasted Christians and professed Americans, who patriotically unfurled the flag of freedom and liberty in one hand and wontonly tied the chains of oppression and barbarism around the necks of their neighbors with the other. Oh, such heinous mockery! What a blasphemous insult to American principle and what a sacriligious indignity upon the pure humane gospel of Jesus Christ!

So strong and cruel became the public sentiment against the Saints of Nauvoo that in the month of February, 1846, they were, under the penalty of massacre and pillage, forced to leave their possessions and flee into the wilderness beyond the Mississippi for safety.

Pressed at the point of the bayonet, they fled from their hard-earned and comfortable homes just in time to see them consumed by the flames. Chilled by Siberian blasts and pursued by Christian mobs they fled into the desert to die from the hands of the native savage, to succumb to the calls of starvation or to survive both by the almighty power of their God above.

The Saints were now banished from civilization and without any means of support, save that which nature voluntarily provided, and truly it seemed that their doom was sealed.

It seemed that to make sure of their annihilation, President John Tyler sent a United States officer after the fleeing exiles with a demand for 500 men to assist in the Mexican war, which had recently been declared. This was adding insult to injury. The Saints had been scornfully refused protection by the government which now demanded their assistance for defense, and this, too, just at a time when their helpless and starving wives and children needed a father's care and protection. But notwithstanding this they obeyed the call, relying upon God for justice and for mercy in their behalf. Here is a picture to behold. Imagine these shelterless and starving pilgrims, dragged from the comforts of home, scourged with atrocity, robbed of their possessions; many of their numbers martyred (among them their leader and prophet; without food and without means and dumped into the frozen lap of the wilderness; ignored by their government and ostracized by the Christians (and all because of their religion). Imagine this multitude of weeping and heart-broken wives and children, scores of whom were sick from exposure or wounded by their enemies; fathers whose piteous faces revealed their burdens of grief, which lay heavily within their noble breasts. What a spectacle of suffering humanity, surrounded on one side by a dreary waste, which promised starvation, and on the other by a Christian mob who thirsted for their life's blood.

Picture yourself, oh reader, among these forlorn and oppressed children of God. Listen to those piteous sobs, behold those tear-stained cheeks, look into those eyes that have known no rest, no sleep, since their loved ones fell the victims of barbarism and savagery—and that, too, at the hands of professed American Christians.

Cast your eyes upon those manly forms who are now kissing their loved ones a fond farewell before departing for war. Does not this picture touch the sympathetic cords in your heart? Does not the courage and loyalty stamped upon the brows of those noble men win your admiration and cause you to exclaim with me: "Oh, liberty and love, freedom and charity, thy precious names dwell not in the heart of modern Christianity?"

Under such threatening circumstances as these the prosperity of Zion was indeed promising. What a glorious facination in Zion for the nations of the earth. How the powers of the world need tremble because of her, and what an exemplary ensign to the nations. Ah, indeed! Did I insinuate? Pardon, I did these noble pilgrims wrong. Never in the history of humanity have the manly traits of courage, of patience, of love, of charity and loyalty, and above all the God-given characteristic of true and sincere devotion to Deity, been exhibited in such admiration as they were in the lives of these rejected and oppressed Latter Day Saints, unless it was when the saints of old for the same religion, sweated beneath the same yoke of tyranny and cruelty, which was thrust upon them by similar inhuman savages, who masqueraded beneath the cloak of religion.

From the above discussion it is clear that Zion was upon the very brink of destruction, which made the fulfillment of the prophet's prediction a question.

Let us see the condition of Zion today and her relation to the world.

In seventy years the numbers of Zion's people have swelled from six to approximately 350,000, among part of whom in 1887 there were representatives from twenty-four different nations and these, too, in the vales of the Rockies.

Magnificent and productive farms with their luxurious fruits and abundant grains now carpet the valleys of the great western plateau. Beautiful dwellings, spacious and comfortable school houses, churches and factories dot the desert, forming burgs and cities, whose prosperity and thrift, industry and progression all unite in one common buzz. Ninety-nine per cent. of the Saints own their own homes. Only 5 per cent. of them over 10 years of age, as compared with 13 per cent. in the United States, are unable to read or write. Up until 1870 not a brothel nor a saloon was known among them, and then it was introduced by their Christian neighbors of the east. In 1881 there were sixty-six saloons in Salt Lake City, sixty of which were run by non-Mormons. There were fifteen billard and seven bowling rooms, all kept by non-Mormons; there were six brothels with thirty-five women, all run by non-Mormons, and not a Mormon woman among them; all of these statistics together with the courage and perseverance of the saints exhibited by them in subduing the desert, and moreover, their stability and galantry in the defense of their country, (in the Philippine engagements hundreds of Mormon boys, who nobly and bravely fought in the front ranks of battle and meritoriously won the admiration of the whole nation,) all this indeed declares that Zion is prospering and that she is an ensign to the world.

The courageous and sacrificing lives of her 1,800 Elders, who journey forth, without price, teaching the pure and simple truths of our Master for the uplifting of humanity, are indeed worthy of emulation.

And whether if it be openly admitted or not by the Christian world, it is nevertheless a fact that Mormonism, so-called, has found its way more or less into nearly every Christian denomination on earth.

The Elders of today do not meet so many who hold to that bodiless and passionless God—that merciless and endless hell, where sinners guilty of all degrees of crime, from the slightest offense to that of the deepest dye, are consigned alike to an ever-burning and never-ending punishment; neither do they meet so many who denounce modern revelation and the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit and many other principles of the original Gospel of Jesus, showing that the Christian world is, in part at least, patterning after Zion in believing these divine truths.

As to the part of the prediction quoted concerning the trembling of the nations, I would say it has not yet had a complete verification, hence I shall not endeavor to establish its fulfillment, but shall simply make reference to some facts in history and daily occurrence, which will at least be indicative of its literal fulfillment.

In some of the eastern countries the local officials have prohibited the Elders both from preaching and also from distributing their literature. This also is true in not a few cities in the United States.

The actions of this government and many of its high officials toward the the Saints present a strong testimony of the promising literal fulfillment of the Prophets' prediction. Let us see. During all of the severe persecutions of the Saints in Missouri, Ohio and Illinois, the government was made to believe that the Mormon people were anarchists and consequently dangerous to the government, for the which they received no protection.

In 1857 an official army was sent to destroy them in their newly made homes in the mountains. Sent because the government feared the commonwealth of the Saints. In 1862 their church property was confiscated by the government.

Time and time again Utah applied for admission into the Union, but was refused, not because she was feeble in the necessary requirements for statehood, for indeed her qualifications were far superior to many of her sisters who were admitted, but she was refused simply because she was "Mormon," and this meant danger to the government in the eyes of the populace and their representatives. What motive other than that of fear could have inspired such unjust actions as these in the heart of the government?

And this is not all. What is it that inspires the present crusade against the Saints? You answer, their dismissed polygamous congressman. Indeed. And if this be true, pray tell why all of the petitions to congress against him, and all of the anti-Roberts congressional speeches contained as much, yea more, strong opposition against the "Mormon" Church than against Utah's congressman? What need would there be in England's blackmailing the whole Catholic institution because she believed one of its members to be repugnant to English principles? Absolutely none! Then what need has there been for such a unanimous crusade against the whole "Mormon" people simply because one of its members found disfavor in the eyes of the government? Absolutely none! The fact of the matter is simply this: the growth and prosperity of Zion is astonishing the populace; and the innumerable hierling priests, whose hearts are more susceptible to the ring of American coin than to the whisperings of American and Christian principle; and whose degree of religion varies with the size of their salaries. These are they who arouse the nation against us and incite the masses to cry out in holy horror against the Saints; and it is through the instrumentality of these professors (not possessors) of divinity that such un-American and un-Christian resolutions are introduced into the halls of Liberty and Justice as were recommended in the Governor's message to the Mississippi legislature recently, and as are now being agitated by the lawmakers of South Carolina, the purposes of which are to withdraw all protection from "Mormon" Elders and leave them at the mercy of infuriated and beastly mobs, whose dastardly and cowardly deeds are born in a "Christian" heart and made illegible by corrupt American dignitaries. These are they who inspire fear in the heart of the government and cruelties against the Saints; these are they who inspire hatred against the Mormon missionaries which not infrequently exhibits itself in bands of murderous mobs who inflict bodily injuries upon the Elders and who in times past have stained the pure tresses of Liberty with the innocent blood of Saints.

After reading the above one cannot help seeing how remarkably the prediction of the Prophet Joseph Smith has been fulfilled.

AS I AM DYING.

MRS. ANNA KLY BRENT.

As I am lying you shall lie:
As I am dying you shall die.
Prepare to meet
Your God on high.

The world is wearied now of me;
The world shall weary, too, of thee;
And both alike
Shall cease to be.

An idle life is Satan's ban,
Remember you were made a man.
Be up and doing
While you can.

Your life by angels shall be read;
Each act, each word that you have said,
When you are lying
Stark and dead.

Then more than jewels guard your fame
That, in heaven, no sin or shame
Be written up
Against your name.

PROFANE SWEARING.

BY ELDER A. N. MACFARLANE.

It is a very common thing for persons who make profession of religious faith, and assume all the airs of real Christians to take the name of God in vain in almost every sentence to which they give utterance. To such an extent has this very unseemly and sinful practice gone that in many places women, and even boys and girls, in many instances mere children, give expression to foul and filthy language in a manner truly disgusting. Judging from what assails the ears at every turning, one would think that to swear and speak profanity was the summit of excellence, sought after by a very large portion of the inhabitants of the world. How distressing to everyone who has the least desire in his heart to honor God and speak of His holy name with reverence, to listen to the foul blasphemy and cursing to be heard in our streets, in our workshops, and in almost every place where numbers of persons are congregated together. This crying evil has taken such a hold upon mankind that the ordinary business of life seems to be incomplete, unless every simple statement is ratified with an oath. I do not wish to be misunderstood; it is no false squeamishness, or hungering after time-honored dogmas and pious creeds, that calls forth these remarks; the writer puts a very low value upon the "form-without-the-power" religions of the present day; in fact, they never were very attractive to him who pens these lines. On the contrary, they seemed to him, as they have to thousands who have heard and received the Gospel in the latter days, utterly powerless to induce men and women to live in righteousness, and serve the Lord from a real love of truth. I have either heard, or have somewhere read a story, in which a highwayman is said to have severely reprimanded those who composed his band of outlaws, because, on one occasion, he overheard them cursing and swearing in a dreadful manner. "There is no gain," said he, "in swearing;" men may steal the property of others, and in numberless ways enrich themselves at the expense of their fellow creatures, and may, because of their fellow creatures, and may, because of their wealth, command the respect of many in the world; but, said he, "there is no gain at all in profane swearing." How far the present inhabitants of our land would be disposed to take counsel from an outlaw may be easily conceived; at all events, there is counsel required from some quarter, and that speedily, or the language of the world will very soon be composed of oaths and curses. There is no want of concern on the part of some of those who deplore the existence of this and many other evils. They hold up their hands in horror when such things are brought before their notice, but generally their closing exclamation is: "Oh, well, it is shocking that such things should exist in this Christian land!" This is not, in the proper sense of the word, a Christian land. The influence of the Gospel has scarcely yet been felt in it. The power of truth has but little, if any, hold at all upon people. If it had the divine influence of the principles of salvation would have made themselves visible, not only in a godly walk, but in a godly conversation also. The Gospel brings blessings instead of cursings, and joy instead of sorrow. It makes manifest the superiority of its power in the many ways in which it works reformation in the conduct and conversation of those who may have been, all their lifetime, subject to bondage. The Savior says, "it is not that which goeth into a man that defileth him, but that which proceedeth forth from him." If so, then there is a long list of defilements accumulating against a very large class, which will eventually be very undesirable, unless a renovating process is very soon commenced among them. Since the Gospel has been restored in the present generation, thousands of men and women too have borne testimony to its power to remodel their conduct, and also the language made use of in their intercourse with each other and the world. It is evident from the course taken by many professed ministers of religion, that in relation to profane swearing they stand much the same as they do in the matter of drunkenness, and numerous other sins so common in this boasted age of enlightenment, and find themselves entirely lost in their attempts to check the growing evil; even among those who own them as their spiritual guides.

Solomon has said "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Alas! this is found to be almost impossible in these days, at least in this so-called Christian part of the world. Children are, in a great many cases, brought up in the way they should not go, and a fervent hope expressed by those who train them, that at some future time they will depart from all their errors. In such a state of things, it is a matter of very great concern to faithful Latter-day Saints, who have young children growing up around them in this country, and who desire to see them growing up in the truths of the Gospel. In many cases it matters but little how faithful parents are in instructing their offspring, as their intercourse with those who have been skilfully trained in wickedness has become in some places almost a necessity. In many branches of the church, the Saints, though very faithful, are also very poor, which necessitates the sending of their children to work in factories and other places where sin in its vilest forms is to be met with, and where rulers and ruled are alike given over to iniquity. This has indeed a baneful effect upon the young among the Saints, and requires continued watching and instruction, which can only be given by such as give due heed to the counsels of the Lord through His servants.

In conclusion, let us urge upon the brethren and sisters everywhere, the great necessity which exists for good example as well as good precept on their part, so that the wicked practice of the Gentiles may not take root in those who are designed in after years to take part in bearing the responsibilities of the great Latter-day work in which we are engaged; the truths of which stand so much in contrast with the feeble systems of our day. God's strange work is rolling on. Under the inspiration of the Lord, the Prophets and leaders of Israel are bringing to pass the wonderful events connected with the gathering of the Saints, which will eventually work out deliverance to the faithful among them. Let the counsels of the Priesthood be strictly observed, and all will be well. Among the far off vales of Utah the ways of the Lord are revered; there, both the Saints and their children will be taught whatever is pleasing in the sight of God, while the wicked among the Gentiles are ripening for the reward of those who delight to do wickedly, and profane the name of the mighty God of Jacob.—Millenial Star, Vol. 29.

"Sir," said the Duke of Wellington to an officer of engineers, who urged the impossibility of executing the directions he had received, "I did not ask your opinion. I gave you my orders, and I expect them to be obeyed." Such should be the obedience of every follower of Jesus. The words which He has spoken are our law, not our judgments or fancies. Even if death were in the way it is—

Ours but to dare and die."

A little boy with an interest in the meaning of unfamiliar words said to his mother: "What's the meaning of 'civil'?"

"Kind and polite," answered the mother.

A puzzled look brooded for a second on the boy's face. Then he said: "Was it a kind and polite war that was in this country once?"

LIFE'S VOYAGE!

BY DAVID H. ELTON.

Tune: "Life's Railway to Heaven."

Life is like a mighty ocean,
We are vessels on the wave.
If we'd reach the Port in safety,
We must e'er be true and brave.
Duty is the course to follow,
Righteousness our armor now;
Faithfulness upon our banner,
Virtue written on our prow.

CHORUS.

'God will never, never leave us,
Oh! what love he manifests!
Tho' the storms of life surround us,
He will ever guide and bless!

On this voyage we'll encounter
Storm and wind and rugged gales,
Breakers fierce will try our vessel,
Hurricanes will test our sails.
But we need not fear the tempest,
Christ, our Captain, will provide,
Chart and Compass, Word and Spirit,
Which will prove a safety guide.

We shall find as on we journey,
Life is a tempestuous sea:
It will not be pleasant sailing
Out upon the rolling lee.
Tho' the ocean's placid surface
May betoken, weather fair,
Look aloft! for sharks are lurking,
Bend the knee in humble prayer.

Let us follow duty's pathway,
Sailing o'er the swelling tide,
Heed the Compass. Keep this motto:
Let the Holy Spirit guide.
And we'll reach the Blessed Harbor,
When we cross the billowy main,
On the shores of bliss and glory,
We Eternal Life shall gain.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Elder Geo. W. Skidmore.

President of the Florida Conference.

Elder George W. Skidmore, whose picture embellishes the first page of this week's Star, was born of humble, industrious parents at Richmond, Cache county, Utah, Aug. 25, 1877. Although a juvenile in years, he is a patriarch in experience. From the age of 7 to 15 he attended the public school, only being able to be in attendance a few months each school year on account of arduous labors upon the farm. In early life he habituated himself to constant and dilligent study whenever opportunity presented itself. When only 15 years of age he entered the Brigham Young College at Logan, Utah, for the purpose of taking a three-years' normal course. It was here that he was fascinated with a desire to stand before the public, and was also prime mover in the organization of the Phoe Pollo Lyceum, now a permenent society at the Brigham Young college. His was a class of twenty, all of whom were his seniors in years, but he was elected president, and valedictorian. During the winters of 1896 and 1897 he taught school in Coveville, Utah, and the two following years at Lewiston, Cache county. His school having closed on Friday, the Thursday following we find him in possession of a call to perform a mission unto the Lord. Like the faithful ones of old, he was ready when the Master called, and hastily preparing himself for the appointed work, he left the home of his loved ones the first Monday after he received his call, journeying to Salt Lake City, where he was set apart for a mission to the Southern States.

ELDER GEORGE W. SKIDMORE,
President of the Florida Conference.

Arriving at Chattanooga, he was assigned to labor in the Florida conference. Having reached the field of his labor, in company with Elder A. B. Snowball, he preceeded to work the city of Kissimmee, but in less than thwenty-four hours they were mobbed out of town. "Well begun is half done;" he began well, and although forced to leave, nothing daunted, he returned nine months later and performed the other half—the mob still threatening all sorts of uncomfortable treatment. This is not the only mob our brother has encountered since laboring in the van of truth, but many times has he been accosted by these blood-thirsty law-breakers. One instance, wherein the arm of God was manifest in his behalf, and a prophecy he uttered literally fulfilled we will relate. The particular occasion we have reference to is this:

Elder Kartchner and the subject of our sketch were laboring in Bainbridge, Ga., when an organized band of bigoted mobocrats forced them to leave the city within four hours. The elders were compelled to obey this inhuman, ungodly decree, but in leaving they declared that the judgments of God would follow such uncalled for injustice. While these black-hearted pieces of inhumanity were engaged in their diabolical schemes, the destroying element of fire visited their city and burned down the major portion of their business stores. Thus, the judgments of God followed in swift order, the wicked acts of these breakers of law, justice and fairness.

Elder Skidmore was called to preside over the Florida Conference on Feb. 12. 1900, when his predecessor, President Parker, was honorably released to return to the bosom of his family. Elder Skidmore has labored in almost every phase of missionary life; having been first as well as second counsellor to the noble man whom he succeeded. Under the supervision of this youthful servant of our Lord, we feel assured that the work in Florida will maintain its high standard, and will grow, spread, and increase.

History of the Southern States Mission.

MAY. 1896.

During this month President Kimball sent forth many valuable instructions to the Elders, which tended to place the mission on a higher plane of progression. The Southern States Mission has always been a progressive one. The several Presidents have continued to inject into its operations changes justly calculated to keep apace with moving conditions, hence its rapid progress. On this point we will note a few important instructions given to the Elders by President Kimball. It will perhaps be noticed that in some of the instructions there is nothing new, yet the Elders have not before grasped the grandeur of them, and beheld the beauty thereof to such an extent. The custom heretofore existing of Elders discontinuing their regular labors during July and August and spending the time among the Saints and friends, in teaching them their duties was discontinued. Meteoric Elders were appointed, whose duty it was to travel in closed counties, from settlement to settlement, village to village, and from city to city. They were to continue the warning cry and make strenuous efforts on the right hand and on the left, to teach the people righteousness. The Elders were instructed to preach the first principles of the gospel and not give strong meat to those who need milk. They we counseled to guard jealously the feelings of the people and strive to bring them to a unity, rather than sow seeds of discord in their midst. As Elders are always on the go, they have no need of permanent headquarters, and should "pitch tents" where night overtakes and "pull stakes" on the morrow. Elders are restrained from debating with men. The gospel must not be used as an incubator of bad feelings and strife; instead we should meet the people with our "heart full of charity" and never tire in explaining to them the gospel truths. The strong Elder is to take the weak, that both may become strong. Like the apostles of old, they are to take those holding the lesser priesthood and send them out to make appointments and prepare the way for the spreading of the Gospel. In traveling among the people "let no man among you from this hour take purse or script, that goeth forth to proclaim the gospel of the Kingdom. This commandment is unto all the faithful who are called of God unto the ministry." The Elders should depend upon the Lord for all things. In their council meetings during this season the Elders were taught the grandeur of the plans suggested. They were urged to stand invincibly for the same, carrying them out in the minutest detail, being assured as a result of such obedience of health, power and success. On the above platform, in the main, work was begun in the year 1896. It was extremely gratifying to note the beneficial results characterizing the labors of those who were obedient. Many were the testimonies sent in by the Elders reporting how well the Lord had favored them. They heal the sick through their administrations. In going among the people some are given money, others have them as honored guests. The poor and ignorant were not the only listeners, quite the reverse, for many learned and broad-minded people were seeing the beauties of what the world calls "Mormonism." It will continue to go on, and the campaign of truth will continue until in disgrace error shall have passed into oblivion.

(To Be Continued.)

Knowledge and Wisdom.

Knowledge and wisdom, far from being one,
Have ofttimes no connection. Knowledge dwells
In heads replete with thoughts of other men:
Wisdom in minds attentive to their own.
Knowledge—a rude, unprofitable mass,
The mere materials with which Wisdom builds,
Till smoothed, and squared, and fitted to its place—
Does but encumber whom it seems to enrich.
Knowledge is proud that he has learned so much;
Wisdom is humble that he knows no more.
—Cowper.

GLEANINGS.

Some residents of Pink Hill, Lenoir county, N. C., had years ago built a church known as the Advent Chapel. They made a deed stating that all denominations except the Catholic and colored people could use the same when it was not occupied by the Adventists. We asked for the privilege of holding meeting there on Sunday night, March 11th, 1900. We were granted the privilege we desired and walked thirteen miles on Sunday and held three fine meetings prior to the meeting appointed in the chapel. The Adventists had the night before held meeting in which the speaker, Mr. Cherry, had dwelt upon the beauties of Christianity, and exhorted the people to love and obey the commandments of Jesus; to always be charitable to all, and to love their enemies. After we had filled the lamps in the church house and were waiting for the audience, Mr. Cherry and the Justice of the Peace arrived, informing us that if we held meeting in the church we would be arrested for trespass. We questioned them upon the item in the contract, and they stated emphatically that the deed stated no Mormons should preach in the chapel; that Catholics and colored people were not barred. We then wanted to know why the Mormons were not allowed to have the same privilege given other denominations. After some conversation, in which the gentlemen belied themselves several times, we decided it would not do to go on with our meeting in the church. A large crowd had gathered, so we announced from the chapel steps that we would hold meeting in Pink Hill that night if we had to hold it upon the street. We shook hands with Mr. Cherry and the Judge, thanking them for all they had done, and asked the Lord to bless them. A gentleman offered the use of his house and we were followed by nearly all the people. The house and the yard were crowded with people. We opened our meeting, which was a grand success. The subject of Revelation was treated upon from the text, Where there is no vision the people perish. (Prov. 29-18.) A comparison was drawn between the cold, barren, frigid zone of sectarianism, with their dead works, man-made systems, and heresies and God's beautiful Gospel system of revelation. The people seemed to be much interested. The Christian gentleman said before some people, who informed me that if he could get ten or twelve men he would take the Mormons down to the pond and leave them there. Thus we see that "God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform." Had we preached in the church we would not had half the audience which we did. The work of the Elders in North Carolina is being felt by the teachers and worshipers of Mammon, and the people are beginning to think for themselves.

JOHN BAILEY.
R. A. PALMER.

One bright, sunny afternoon two Elders were canvassing in one of the rural districts of Georgia. As they approached the house of one residenter they observed the gentleman standing in the door, who eyed them closely. Deciding that the visitors were Mormon Elders, he exclaimed "you scoundrels, get out of here," and so saying he leaped into the house as if in a hurry to procure a gun for their benefit. At this the Elders turned to go and were but a few steps in retreat when they caught the sharp accented command: 'catch 'em, sir, catch 'em!" Upon looking for the meaning of these unexpected imperatives, they discovered the man of the place with a huge masculine dog, which had just been released from his chains for the occasion. "Catch 'em, sir, catch 'em!" he demanded again, but without obedience from the hound.

By this time his wife appeared on the scene beside him and she, too, endeavored to persuade the beast to execute their wish, but was met with a cold indifference from the dog.

Impatient with this impudent disobedience the man seized the hound by the collar, while his wife unmercifully applied a barrel stave to the charitable animal's back. At every blow the poor creature groaned with pain and writhed in agony.

"Now, catch 'em, sir," they demanded, as they turned the creature loose, but the dog dropped his tail and sided up to his master, as if to beg for mercy, both for himself and for his prey, which his massive strength could have conquered with ease.

By this time the Elders were well on their way, but could still hear the echoes of the club on the animal's back, and its cries and groans.

As the Elders passed along one broke the spell of silence by saying, "that family surely has had unequal training, for their dog really has more religion than the man and his wife."

"Quite true," responded the other, "and it is not of the contribution box brand, either."

They laughed and went on.

Those in the least acquainted with the religious world of today may often ask themselves whence so many lords, faiths, and baptisms: when Jesus, through His apostles, taught one Lord, one faith, one baptism? In the gospel according to St. John 14, 15 and 16th chapters, Jesus told His diciples that He would pray the Father and he would send to them a comforter, which the world could not receive and which would lead them into all truth and bring all things to their remembrance whatsoever He had said unto them. Surely all the different churches are not taught by this comforter, which Jesus spoke of, or else its mission has greatly changed: but stop, let us inquire as to the way of receiving this comforter. Jesus and His apostles taught that the Holy Ghost came, after baptism, by the imposition of hands by one holding the Melchisedec Priesthood.

Since the time of Jesus and His apostles, man has created a holy ghost of his own. In place of being called of God as was Aaron, by phophecy and revelation, and trusting in the Holy Ghost to lead and guide, he has created schools where he must be taught God's word, according to the wisdom of man, which Paul teaches is foolishness with God. After a course in one of these schools the candidate is sent or called by a church, God being left out, to preach God's word, if perchance the church can pay him enough.

When asked by others to use their meeting house these modern teachers of Jesus will likely tell you there is some disunion in the church now and if you preach it would cause more.

Jesus says upon the rock of revelation will I build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. These modern divines say, by actions, our church is built upon the sands of man-made doctrine and priestcraft, and when we see the floods and storms of truth and righteousness sent by the Mormon Elders, we are fearful least our salary shall be lowered and we will be compelled to seek employment elsewhere.

Oh, blush for shame, modern Christianity, how dare you blaspheme God's holy name by saying He teaches all the hatred and strife and different opinions even in the same church, when He says He is the author of peace, love, joy, meekness, gentleness? JOHN H. BANKHEAD.

Elder Don C. Benson has been chosen to preside over the North Kentucky conference to succeed President L. M. Terry, honorably released.

President John Peterson and Elder Wm. H. Jensen, of the East Tennessee Conference, spent Friday, the 30th ult., in Chattanooga en route to their homes in Zion. Elder E. L. Pomeroy has been appointed to succeed Elder Peterson, and we expect to see this Conference continue well in the lead under his leadership.

Christ and the Earth—An Allegory.

BY O. F. WHITNEY.

I.

The world lay wrapt in Death's embrace. The tale of the Tempter had triumphed, and the pinions of his power now fettered the fair limbs of God's beauteous creation. Earth, a virgin, beguiled, ensnared in sin, shrank shuddering from the touch of her would-be violater and destroyer.

Hark! a cry for help. The captive strives to free herself from the fell clasp of the foe. Summoning all her powers, she springs erect, and, grasping her chain, essays to rend it asunder. It will not yield. The links are firm, the staple strong. Madly she tugs and toils. In vain, alas! in vain. Baffled, bruised and breathless, she sinks exhausted, and the arms of the monster Sin once more enfold her. His hot breath blisters her cheek, his cruel fingers clutch her throat, his fierce eyes flame with passion. Again and again she struggles, exerting all her strength to repel the foul polluter. Alas! his strength is stronger, his grasp a grasp of iron; he holds her writhing form as in a vise, gloating over her despair, exulting in her misery, and laughing to scorn her fruitless efforts to be free. Vainly she weeps and pleads and prays. No mercy melts that icy heart, no pity beams from out that baleful eye. She is lost, she is lost! For who can save her now? Oh, that a virgin should be defiled! Oh, that she should be dragged into deeper depths of shame than those in which her wayward will and youthful folly have plunged her!

II.

A cry for help was heard in heaven. The incense of tears, the perfume of prayers came up before the great White Throne, and the heart of Him that sitteth thereon—the mighty heart of the throbbing universe was touched with compassion. "Go down, my Son, and rescue Earth; strike off her fetters, vanquish her foes, and bring her back, thy bride, to reign in glory. The decree of her banishment we revoke. She hath suffered double for all her sins. Go, bring her hither, that we may place upon her brow the seal of pardon, a diadem of power." So spake the Eternal Father.

Obedient to the royal mandate, the Son departed from His Father's house. Yet went He not in glory, with courtly train or blazing equipage; nor as warrior girt for battle. No chariot he rode, no charger mounted. No shining armor encased Him. Nor sword, nor spear, nor shield He bore. For this He reasoned wisely: "My mission is of love, my errand one of mercy. I go my bride to woo. She shall love me for myself, and not for wealth or station." Doffing His celestial crown, sparkling with jewels of souls erst redeemed; laying aside His golden scepter, and exchanging kingly robe for pilgrim gown, the Prince of Peace bade heaven farewell, and solitary and alone descended the stairway of the stars.

III.

A sound of falling shackles in the dungeons of despair! The clash of bursting gates, the roar of crumbling ramparts, the shout, the song of joy, the trumpet-peal and thunder—march of victory. Earth! thy hour is come. Deliverance is here. Hell's battlements are shaking. Her walls go down. The standard of Liberty floats triumphant above her ruined strongholds! But ah! there looms another sight. A cross, a crown of thorns, a mantle, blood-stained, torn and trampled. What mean these emblems—these ghastly signs of suffering? Was this thy greeting, Earth, for Him, thy great Deliverer? For this came He to woo thee, to rescue and redeem thee, to exalt thee in glory above the stars of God? Is it thus a bride doth meet her lord? A voice from the depths gave answer: "Not mine, not mine the blame. I knew thee Lord, and welcomed thee; but Sin and Satan laid thee low. In the hour of my deliverance thou wert slain. Woe, woe is me, a widow—a widow ere a bride! Where art thou gone, my Lover? My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

Far through the night a solemn Voice fell echoing: "I go to prepare a place for thee, that where I am, there thou mayest be also. Fear not, O, Earth! I have broken the bands which bound thee. Thy foes no more shall ensnare thee. The midnight hour is past. The morning breaks in glory. My bride thou art and shalt be. For, lo! I come again to claim thee!"

POWER OF EXAMPLE.

BY W. W. TAYLOR.

How easy it is to talk. To quote Brother Millen Atwood's favorite phrase: "Talking is the easiest part of our religion," or, in other words, to tell others how they should perform their duties. Yet with all the advice that is given, how much of it is practically applied?

There seems to be a natural desire in man at least to be considered good, and to have the reputation of exercising a good influence over others, and whether this is the cause for it or not, a disposition to teach or advise others very generally exists. How naturally the question arises: "Does he practice what he preaches?" and what a difference in the effects of his teaching does the answer have. The Elders in going abroad to preach to the nations of the earth, told the people that God had restored the Gospel. What effect would their teachings have had, if they had gone forth and said: This is only an experiment with us. We think that if a people sufficiently large could be congregated and they would embrace such and such principles, certain results might follow. But this was not the message they bore. They said: "We have obeyed the principles that we teach, and we know that they are of great value to mankind, because they have benefited us, and for the sake of offering these principles to those who were unacquainted with them, we were willing to leave home and friends that all who desire it may enjoy the same blessings that we have enjoyed through our obedience. And though in so doing, we may be regarded by the majority of the people as impostors and false teachers, that does not weaken our testimony in our own estimation, for we have obeyed the doctrines we teach, and know whereof we speak." What a weight such testimonies, coupled with spiritual and reasonable requirements, would have with the honest in heart, and how much it would be appreciated by such, compared with the cant and hypocrisy and uncertainty of the doctrines taught in the world! As members we frequently hear it repeated that by seeking the Lord in humility, we can obtain the same testimonies, that our parents have taken so much pleasure in bearing that we quite often hear the same instructions given by the young themselves to each other, in their meetings for mutual instruction; which is all right when such instructions are given in a proper way and under proper influence. But may we not ask the same question of the young as we would of those of maturer years: "Are you teaching from experience, and if so, how do the principles that you teach affect your own life?"

If a young man, urging his companions to seek the Lord, with a view of obtaining testimonies of the truth, and a knowledge of the Fathers' will concerning him, can say: "I took the course I recommended to you, and I enjoy the results that are promised," his words would have more effect than those of another person, young or old, who simply taught what they had heard some one else say, but had never realized themselves. As an illustration: There are certain blessings promised through observing a revelation called "The Word of Wisdom." A young man being desirous of obtaining the blessings promised through obedience to the counsel therein contained, follows the instruction given and finds that the promised results follow, and are of great benefit to him. He feels a desire to impress the truth of the principle upon others. What can be more forcible than such teaching? Where the results of the course indicated are shown in the life and conduct of the teacher; giving evidence that he does not talk for the sake of being heard, but because he wishes others to enjoy the same blessings that have attended his own obedience. If such qualifications are necessary to those who teach the young people of God, is it not as essential that they should seek to qualify themselves, on the same principle, to teach the Gospel to the nations of the earth? Because we have been benefited through our obedience to principles that the world does not understand.

The New Philippines.

The Philippines is now a familiar name in American ears, but few know that the title of the "New Philippines" was once attached to a large area of American soil.

The first settlement in what is now Texas, says the Indianapolis Journal, was made by French emigrants in 1685. During the next twenty-five years there was an intermittent struggle between the French and Spanish for supremacy, resulting in favor of the latter, and in 1814 the name of the "New Philippines" was given to the country.

This was its official name in Spanish records for many years, and until the name Texas, from a tribe of Indians, gradually came into vogue.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We realize that there are a number of people receiving Stars complimentary from Elders who have labored or who are now laboring in this mission. We wish to speak a word here to those who are NOW receiving The Star complimentary from Elders who have labored in this mission and have been released from their duties here. To these we wish to say: If your complimentary subscription has expired (this is shown in connection with your address on each paper you receive), or as soon as it does expire, please notify to discontinue your paper, unless you desire to renew the subscription; in this case please renew as soon after the expiration as possible, as it will avoid cutting your name from our list and replacing it.

THE SABBATH DAY.

There is much controversy going on in the Christian world regarding the Sabbath, or the day set apart and sanctified for hallowed worship and devotion to God. It will not be the purpose of this article to endeavor to elucidate the subject from a Scriptural basis, or prove the day appointed, but merely to answer a few of the arguments invariably used by advocates of Seventh Day worship, and explain the necessity of a strict observance of the Sabbath day. While the Latter-day Saints believe, with the majority of Christendom, that the first day of the week, according to our present calculation of time, is the day appointed of God in the heavens for devotional ceremonies; still we would have it understood and known by all, that we are not simply imitators in this particular; we do not worship on this first day because others do, but we rely solely upon the revealed word of God given in these Latter Days for our guidance and government in this regard.

If there is one passage of Scripture used more than any other by those who believe that the Seventh Day, or Jewish Sabbath, is today in vogue, and enjoined upon us of the Lord, it is the one found in Matt. 24:20, where Jesus says, "But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day." "Now then," says our friends who believe in the Seventh Day worship, "the destruction of Jerusalem was accomplished by the Romans in A. D. 70; and the Sabbath, therefore, was certainly commanded by Christ as late as that period." Let us see, for we can find nothing in the above declaration, or the circumstances connected therewith, to warrant such a conclusion. Why did Jesus warn His disciples? Was it not because He desired them to escape from the clutches of the bloodthirsty Roman soldiery, and thus save themselves from the bitter seige which awaited those who would be found within the walls of the city when the army should encircle it round about? Yes! Well, then, by saving themselves from the cruel foe, would they not be doing the will of God through Jesus Christ our Lord? We reply that they certainly would. Was it not a good thing for them "to flee to the mountain" in order that their lives may be spared to carry on the work of God, and preach His everlasting word? You all agree. Then why not do so on the Sabbath day, as well as any other, for the Lord said it was lawful to do good on the Sabbath day (Mark 2:2). Let us reason just a little farther: Christ, with His prophetic eye of inspiration, could see, looking down the stream of time, that the Jews would continue to keep the seventh day holy according to the law of Moses, which law inflicted a penalty of death upon those who performed manual labor upon that day. Here is what the Scripture sayeth: "Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to you an holy day, a Sabbath of rest to the Lord; whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death." (Exodus 35:2.) From this we can readily see that, in the advent of the Apostles' preparation for flight to the mountains on the Jewish Sabbath day, the Jews would lay hold upon them, cast them into the prison cell, and in all probabilities cause them to be put to death; thus the purpose of Christ's warning would have been thwarted, of no effect, and they may just as well die by the edge of the Roman sword as be killed by their own countrymen for breaking (?) the Sabbath day. For this cause, in order that they might make good their escape, Jesus told them to "pray that their flight be not on the Sabbath day;" not because He had any particular regard or sacred reverence for the Jewish Sabbath, but because He desired His followers to be delivered from the fierce persecution and ignominious deaths which He verily knew would befall the wicked and ungodly Jews. Having gone thus far in our dissertation of this phase of the subject, let us now turn our minds and attention to the necessity of being strict observers of this Holy Day—not in word or letter, but in the spirit and hope of pleasing our God, from whom all blessings flow.

There seems to be a growing tendency among many to disregard the Sabbath day, and to change it from a day of rest and communion to a day of recreation and jollification. This should not be, for it is displeasing to God, and contrary to His will and word. The Sabbath should be to us a day of rest, wherein we worship God in spirit and in truth. We should seek for the communion of His Holy Spirit, which leads and guides into all truth, that we may pay our devotions as is pleasing and acceptable in His sight. It should be the desire of God's children to keep sacred and holy this blessed Sabbath day, and thereby show their gratefulness to our Father, for His goodness, love, mercy and kindness. We cannot show to God our deep love, joyful appreciation, and sacred regard, for the glorious light of the Gospel, the beautiful, simple principles of righteousness, in a more pleasing manner than by keeping holy and sacred this appointed day for hallowed worship. The Lord requires of us; whether upon the streets, in the worshiping assembly, or within the sacred folds of the home circle, to study His word, to let our thoughts reach out after the inspiration of His Holy Spirit, our minds to be guided in the channels of religious thought, that we may store our intellectual faculties with a knowledge of His purposes, as shown in the sacred things which have come to us. Let us do as God has commanded, "Keep the Sabbath day holy," for it is absolutely essential to the well-being and exaltation of our souls. As we disregard this holy day, infidelity will increase in a geometrical ratio, and every other evil work; revere and respect this sacred day; do not make it a day of pleasure, but, on the contrary, a day of worship, of reverence, and love for the Supreme Being, remembering that,

> A Sabbath well spent
> Brings a week of content;
> And joy for the toils of the morrow;
> But a Sabbath profane,
> Whatsomever may be gained,
> Is a certain forerunner of sorrow.

"Ye Elders of Israel:" God has blessed us with His Holy Spirit, and by its divine aid we can be led into paths of righteousness, peace, happiness and Truth. Let us do all we can to help and assist each other, and never allow the green-eyed monster—Jealousy—to creep in amongst us. We must needs be watchful, prayerful, sincere, humble, and faithful in all things. We have a great and glorious work to accomplish, and in the performance of this bounden duty we shall find that the evil one, even Lucifer, will stir up the sons of men to oppose, persecute, and revile us in this grand and praiseworthy work. We must fast often and humble ourselves before God that we might receive of that Holy Spirit, which is a comforter in every deed. We shall find many obstacles to surmount, trials to endure, difficulties to encounter, and tribulations to overcome. If we would successfully meet and triumph over these, then we must train our minds, our thoughts, and our intellects in the channel of divine Truth, drawing nigh unto God that He may draw nigh unto us to comfort, bless and protect us at all times. Let us keep our covenants sacred; be true to all our promises, and at all times work for the glory and honor of God, the spread of truth, and the advancement of righteousness.

Goldsboro, N. C., March 27, 1900.

Editor Southern Star:

Dear Brother:—We do not desire you nor the readers of your valuable paper to think that the Conference in North Carolina is either dead or dying, although but little is seen in The Star concerning it. We are happy to say we still live and enjoy the spirit of our mission, as is proven by our weekly report as published by you.

There has been between forty and forty-five Elders loboring here during the winter. The most of these are only very young men, ranging from 18 to 30 years of age. They are all striving to "let no man despise their youth," as Paul exhorted Timothy to do.

Some of them are laboring in the cities of Raleigh, Wilmington and Goldsboro, where our headquarters are maintained. The others are laboring mostly in the eastern counties. They preach wherever opportunity presents itself, very often receiving the free use of school houses, and sometimes churches are opened; yet bigotry and prejudice often close both public and private houses against them.

We find that those who pose as pious Christians and wear a sanctimonious face dressed in ministerial garb are generally the direct cause of this narrowness.

"Mormonism" is often the text even in sanctified pulpits, and handled without gloves, as the saying is, without regard to truth or decency.

Many signs follow the administrations of our Elders, and if they were all collected and recorded in one article, many a so-called Christian would "stare." We expect a good harvest as soon as warm weather is well under way.

No preaching has as yet been done in Goldsboro, only against us, but we live in hopes of yet raising our gentle voices here in defense of a much maligned and falsified cause, declaring both long and loud that God has again spoken from heaven and that the Latter-day Kingdom has been established here upon the earth. That Joseph Smith was a prophet. That the Book of Mormon is true, and we ask all readers of The Star to use their faith and prayers to that end.

We have many good, fair-minded friends in this city and do a little preaching on the outskirts of town.

Your brthren in the cause,

Editor Southern Star:

Please allow me a little space in the noble Star for me to express my thoughts toward the Latter-day Saints. I began to read some of their literature some time ago, and in October, 1897, my mother and myself were baptized. From that hour I have felt the peaceful influence of the Spirit of God upon me, and I know of a surety the Latter-day Saints is the church of God. Of course we are persecuted, but that shows we are the children of the Heavenly Father, and if we will live Godly in Christ Jesus we will enter into His kingdom. I am trying to live up to my duties and I wish all the people could see the plan of salvation, whereby we trod, as I do. Although we are unjustly persecuted, I can endure it with faith, hope and charity, knowing that the gospel as taught by our Church is true, and if I endure to the end I will be saved.

Editor Southern Star:

Dear Brother:—We read in The Star of many wonderful works that have been wrought through the power of Almighty God here on earth in these the "Last Days." They are interesting and edifying to all readers and tend to strengthen the testimony of the scattered sheep throughout this mission. I have been an eye witness to a great many things pertaining to the work in which we are engaged, and to the manifestations of the Spirit, and desire that one or two of them should be made known. There are two cases of healing that are so bright on my mind, being performed through the power of God by the laying on of hands. A non-Mormon named Mrs. Ann Jones, of Cherokee county, South Carolina, sent for Elder Jas. A. Smith and myself by night. We went at once, finding her very sick with fever and pains in the side. We asked what we could do for her. She said: "I believe that you are the servants of God, and that if you will pray for me your prayers will be answered." We prayed over her, anointing with oil, and rebuked the disease by the power of the Priesthood, which we held. I promised her in the name of Israel's God that she should be made well from that very moment. She had been sick for seven weeks, the doctor having failed to cure her. Our prayers were answered, she fell asleep, arising the next morning and took up her work, so long laid by.

She no longer believes that we, the Elders of Israel, are the servants of God, but says, "I know."

My companion, Lorenzo E. Hoskins, of West Portage, Utah, was stricken last week with what I supposed was inflammatory rheumatism. Saturday night the pains were almost unbearable, and he began to swell up. The pains were over his heart and it was almost impossible for him to breathe. We all wondered what to do. I went out and almost heard the words, "O ye of little faith." I felt this rebuke very strongly, and told Elder Hoskins that I would anoint the swollen places with oil. He said it was his desire, so I did so at once, and then laying my hands on his head, commanded the disease, in the name of Jesus Christ, to depart. Elder Hoskins arose in the morning, feeling most like a new man. The folks wondered what it was that helped him. We told them that the Priesthood of God was here on earth and that many wonderful works were done through faith.

Your brother,
GEO. L. MORTENSON.

Editor Southern Star:

I desire space in The Star to add a few words. Seven years ago last September I was taken very ill with typhoid fever and was under the treatment of the doctor three weeks. He gave me up, saying I would be dead by sundown that day. The doctor was just leaving as the Elders came in, and as I was unconscious my husband desired them to administer to me. He held me up while the Elders administered to me, rebuking the disease. The fever was reduced and I gained strength, being able to sit up in bed next morning. From that day I have gained strength and can bear testimony that it is today as in the days of the Savior, the sick are healed and Satan can be cast out. God did heal me through his servants, the Elders. An evil spirit came out of me which I saw with my own eyes. My husband, mother and the Elders saw him. I am happy to think I live in this dispensation of the fullness of time, when God does speak to His people. When the same blessings that ancient Saints enjoyed are for the true believers today. May all the faithful be blessed is the prayer of your sister in Christ, GINNIE MORRIS.

Editor Southern Star:

If allowed a little space in your paper I would like to say a few words in regard to the "Mormons" and what I have learned about their doctrine.

In the year 1887, very late one evening, two Elders, D. C. Markham and Geo. W. Stranger, called at my father's house and asked for entertainment; informing us that they were traveling without purse or scrip. My father welcomed the Elders in and they soon were talking upon the gospel. I was a mere child, only 9 years of age. The men and their doctrine were strange, yet their words seemed reasonable and satisfactory to my soul. Later I began to investigate the teachings, finding them to agree with the Bible. August 9, 1896, I, in company with my brother, S. A. Bigham, and Louisa J. Beecham, were baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints by Elder Henry A. Grover. I can say with an open heart and a truthful tongue that I have a testimony that the gospel is true, that the Book of Mormon is the word of God; Joseph Smith a true Prophet of God. How pleasing to me if every living soul could see the gospel in its true light, and be endowed with the Holy Spirit that leads into all truth. If they would but take upon themselves the cross of our Savior, for His yoke is easy and His burden light. It is true that the doctrine of Christ is not popular, yet we can rejoice when our name is cast out as evil; when we are scourged in the synagogues as I have been, only makes us more humble and prayerful. Yes, it makes us more tender-hearted and brings us to a unity of the saving faith.

Yours in the cause of Truth,
BRO. BIGHAM.

CHURCH AND STATE—A PARABLE.

BY BEN L. RICH.

The State.

Out from the long and dreary darkness of tyranny, which fell like a cloud over the world twelve decades ago, sprang the necessity of a republic, a government of the people, wherein man could enjoy the rights, the inalienable prerogatives of human inheritance. It was inspired of God, and patriots wrote that all men are born free and equal. It was a noble cause, though it cost the lives of thousands of the New World's best men, in whose blood it was indelibly recorded on the index page of the Book of Nations. A government was brought into existence by a union of thirteen colonies. Thus came the United States of America. Over this government there are a President and a Vice-President, who are elected to the office of presidency and vice-presidency, by the operation of the elective franchise of the citizens of the Union. The President is counciled by a cabinet of statesmen. Under this corp there are the armies and navies, civil and war departments of the nation. These are the nation's executives. The national legislature is composed of two houses; a senate, whose members are senators, and those whose members are called congressmen. Here laws are made, treaties formed and wars declared. The members of this department are elected by the people directly and indirectly. The judiciary wing of the government is made up of courts; the supreme court and several minor courts. This organization deals out justice to citizens who may have been wronged. It also prevents the abuse of power. The Union is formed from States, over each of which there is a Governor, elected by the people. A state legislature of two branches, the house and senate and state courts act as the legislative and judiciary, respectively, to the state. In the state there are county and city governments, each with its individual executive, legislative and judiciary organizations. Thus in brief, is the government, in officers, of the United States. This national system is sustained by revenue taxes. If the government is administered in the spirit of its inception the soverign of the country will enjoy peace among themselves. They will not be imposed upon by the tyranny of foreign powers. Their rights will be respected, and by virtue thereof, freedom in religion will be granted. Prosperity and temporal happiness will reign, and as long as a citizen does not encroach upon the rights and privileges of another citizen, he will be allowed liberty, that boon of life; he can do, say, live and act as he desires. He is his own master and subject. Such is the condition when the constitution of the United States, for which the patriot fathers lived, fought and died. Is it not beautiful and grand?

But after an elapse of eighteen centuries were the noble defenders of liberty to come back to watch the progress of the seed they had planted, what would they think if they found this condition existing under the stars and stripes? Instead of effective and tenacious organization, the generals and sea captains, with their armies and navies, were only extant. The army officers and naval commanders issued all the laws and inforced their obedience by their commands. Instead of the enjoyment of liberty, of the elective franchise of peace and prosperity, the people felt only the tyrant's hand, and reduced from the state and independent soverigns, to the condition of servile, base and dependent serfs; enjoying only the right which had become a burden of paying exhorbitant taxes. This state of affairs existed, too, under the constitution, which, still the same by name, was so perverted and altered by selfish man, that it was only a shadowy figure of its pristine self. Instead of a country of freedom, it was a country of serfdom. If the fathers found a state of affairs so dark, so brutal, so degraded, so barbarous and unrighteous, what could contain the storms of indignation and righteous wrath with which they would anathemaize the perverters of liberty, the enemies of humanity, the destroyers of temporal salvation? Would they not know that deception and hypocrisy, selfishness and weakness, resultant from wickedness, had been agencies in undermining all the American institutions? What a living lie and sin it would be, too, for this system of cruel despotism to exist under the flag of 1776, and known as the United States of America! Oh, wicked dream! Oh, awful contemplation! May the God of nations forbid such a perversion of our constitutional rights!

The Church.

The night of religious confusion and hypocrisy was made musical by the singing of heavenly choirs; it was electrified by the proclamation: "Peace on earth, good will to man, for this night is born the Messiah." Christ grew to manhood. He was baptized of John in Jordan, and then entered the ministry. Although he came in fulfillment of prophecy and people were scaning the horizon for their redeemer, he was persecuted, rejected, cast out and spat upon. Religious bigotry and intolerance were in full bloom, and the Son of God was made its victim. He was crucified, He atoned for the sins of a fallen race. After an elapse of a few days the body of our Lord became quickened and he arose an immortal prince, the victorious author of the scheme of eternal salvation, having risen from beneath all things, even the stable manger to the master of all things, even the throne of an omnipotent, omniscient God. After His resurrection, He labored forty days among His followers, teaching them as He had taught before His crucifixion, informing them on subjects which seemed cloudy to their understanding. The great Savior of Love, perfected His church of peace. He gave all necessary authority. He explained thoroughly every detail of the work of His church, and bidding His authorities farewell, went to His father. He will return some day. When He arose He left his church established in beauty and perfection, ready to commence the spreading of the gospel, to teach every principle and observe every law. Thus, was the way to salvation marked out and arranged. And what do we find? In organization, Christ put in His society, prophets, apostles, high priests, seventies, elders, bishops, teachers, priests and deacons. This was the organization, every officer to perform his special duties; all working in perfect concord and harmony. And why should not Christ's government work so? The officers were called by God; through prophets, employing the gift of revelation, they enjoyed the blessings of visions, of dreams, healing, of prophecies; of tongues, of inspiration. They enjoyed peace and happiness. Every man was to every other man a brother, and every woman a sister to every other woman, all brothers and sisters together. Love and charity reigned in every heart. The initiation into the fold was obtained by first believing and trusting with implicit faith in Christ, thereby turning away from sin by repentance, after which the candidate for salvation was immersed in water for the remission of sins and received the comforter, the agency of truth and good will, by the laying on of the hands of constituted authorities. Thus, in fundamental, was the institution of Christ, as He perfected it. Thus, did the holy apostles and prophets teach, live and practice. Is it not beautiful, harmonious, consistent, musical and simple? It could not have been otherwise since the omniscience of a Deity figured in its inception.

But now, after an elapse of eighteen hundred years, were the Lord of humility to come back to the earth to the popular Christian world, to measure the growth of His life's mission, with what sorrow, more excruciating than His agonies on the cross, would He weep? What a look of godly indignation, more kingly than at the expulsion of the money changers from the temple, would kindle His visage? Instead of His church existing in harmony and peace with apostles, prophets, pastors, evangelists, teachers, deacons, etc., He would find over half a thousand militant, jarring, quarreling, jealous sects, all professing divine authorship, one having this officer, another the name of that, all of them together containing only a fragment of the once perfect organization. All crying that the more powerful and authoritative officers, such as apostles, prophets, seventies, etc., were no longer needed. Instead of finding the divinely established way of entering the ministry through prophets and revelation, they deny revelation and reject prophets, some of whom they have killed. Selfish men arrogate unto themselves the honor of calling themselves, and use their assumed office for money making, instead of laboring with out compensation, as they were commanded in the long ago. Instead of recognizing the first principles of the gospel they claim that they are non-essential and say that only a belief in an imaginative nonenity incorporeal and uncreate God is all that it requires for salvation, which they assert is rolling in laziness and indolence on the clouds. Instead of finding the Gospel the institution of intelligence, of peace, of love, which He established, would He not behold a perile system of superstition and ignorance, of persecution, bigotry and confusion? Would He not discover that His church existed only in name in the fashionable world, that the word of God, the constitution of righteousness, had been altered and changed? Instead of finding anything in Christendom, which the gospel was, would the Christ not find everything which it was, and is not?

How black and blasphemous is this age of apostacy? It contains everything to invoke the wrath of Almighty. Truly, is the present condition of the Christian world a too severe comparison to that awful reign of political darkness, which we pray will never be visited upon our country.

Is it not reasonable, the re-establishment of the salvation scheme as it was in ancient days? And is it not consequent that persecution will follow the ambassadors of truth now as formerly? Christ, eighteen hundred years ago, was jeered at, and spat upon, by temperaments, whose counterparts in this age of bigotry and hypocrisy point their finger at the humble Elder and say "Mormon."

Advertised.

A new and verdant postmaster in a small rural town had received instructions to advertise all letters uncalled for at the end of a certain length of time. He obeyed orders by inserting the following advertisement in the village weekly paper at the end of the first week of his term of office:

There are ten letters in the postoffice that nobody has called for. If them they belong to don't take notice and call by the end of the month the letters will be sent to the dead-letter office. Anybody expecting letters they ain't got can come and see if any of these letters belong to them. All take notice.—Youth's Companion.

An Incident Before the Civil War.

In the year 1860, in Caliborne county, Tennessee, hawks representing two tribes met and fought. One flock was dark colored and the other gray. At the first engagement, which lasted three days, thousands upon thousands were killed. So great was the slaughter, men in that locality were compelled to hire hands to burn the birds. In the first battle the grays were victorious, whereupon the blues retreated some forty miles westward. There they took their stand, and after a fierce battle completely annihilated the greys.

Amongst the sons of men how few are known,
Who dare be just to merit not their own.

THE DARK AGES.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY is remarkable in history as the greatest period of reform in all ages. In it lived some of the most bold and intrepid self-asserters that the world has ever seen, and who came in a time when the world was ripe for their appearance.

The corruption of the clergy and things ecclesiastical was such, that justice demanded extermination, as the world was in the condition of the cities of the plain —Sodom and Gomorrah—ready for destruction. But, like Abraham, who plead with God to save the cities and spare the righteous, so mercy plead in this age, that the world might be spared and man's agency retained. God sent His servants, the reformers, that man might have religious liberty, and freedom to worship as he saw fit, and thus mercy prevailed.

The Pontiff of Rome, Julius II., was at this time a great warrior, loving bloodshed and carnage, laying cities to waste and otherwise devastating Europe. The occupation of this Pontiff might give us some idea of the miserable condition the church was in at this time. A man professing to be the vicar of Christ, who lived in camps, amid the din of arms, and who was ambitious of no other fame than that which arose from battles won and cities despoiled. Under such a Pontiff all things must have gone to ruin and the genuine luster of true religion have been entirely effaced. This man died in the year 1512.

Much disunion existed among the different orders, especially between the Franciscan and Dominican factions, regarding the immaculate conception of Jesus. The former approved of it, and the latter disbelieved it, and in order to gain their point, the Dominicans resorted to base fraud and deceit. In one instance some of their priests appeared disguised as spirits, angels and departed saints, to a man named Jetzer, who was taking priestly orders, and favored him with some wonderful fictitious visions, and actually told him that he was so approved of God that he must be marked like His Son; they pierced his hands and feet with nails, and marked his side, similar to the marks placed upon Jesus by the Romans. They fraudulently appeared unto him as the Virgin Mary, who told him she was conceived in original sin and that she abhorred the Franciscans for teaching the immaculate conception. This fraud finally came to light, and the deception was exposed. The Dominican monks, to hush the matter up, tried to poison poor Jetzer.

At this period the public worship was nothing but a senseless round of external ceremonies, adapted to dazzle the eye; and the preaching consisted of fables and the relating of wonderful signs and miracles, which deluded the ignorant masses, who were taught to respect the authority of the church as infallible. The virtues of departed saints, the dignity, glory and love of the blessed Virgin, the efficacy of relics, the duty of adorning the churches, the intolerable burnings of purgatory and the utility of indulgences, were advanced, and tended to increase the riches and fill the coffers of the church. The Roman Catholic authority acknowledges, that at this time, "the Papal doctrines, jurisdiction and authority, would have fallen into ruin, in all the world, had not the force of the secular arm been employed to support this tottering edifice, and fire and sword been let loose upon those who were assailing it."

The historian records a horrible line of Pontiffs, holding the Papal chair in this century. Pope Clement VII. was a bastard. Pope Paul III. had two illegitimate children, named Farnese and Sforza, who were made Cardinals in their infancy. He was also reproached with poisoning his mother and nephew, and with having ravished a young virgin at Ancona; also with incestuous and adulterous commerce with his daughter, Constantia, who died of poison, administered by him, to prevent any interruption in his odious amours. He was also caught in delicate relationship with his niece, and was stabbed by her husband, carrying the wound marks to his death. It is recorded of Pope Julius III. that he was scarcely seated, before he made a Cardinal out ot the keeper of his monkeys, a boy chosen out of the lowest populace, and who was also the infamous object of his unnatural pleasures. How horrible to think that a line of authority, purporting to come from Peter, should descend through such a vile and polluted source. Why cannot Christianity today understand and realize that God's authority was never vested in such reprobates, that defiled the earth during the Sixteenth century?

In order to modify the doctrines and make them congenial to the taste, the counsel of Trent met, and the Latin translation of the Bible, called the vulgate, adopted and accepted as authentic and accurate in its translation, it stands today as a guide for the Roman Catholics. The scriptural translation from the Latin vulgate was adopted, on account of its being vague and ambiguous. The people could not understand it and consequently remained in ignorance of the Word of God. The laity were taught that the scriptures were not for the multitude, but only for their spiritual teachers, and the Divine records were taken from the people and largely shut up in the monasteries. The horrible history of this great and abominable church is written in the archives above, and plainly delineated in her ruins today. She still exists, the great "Mother of Harlots," but her power among the Anglo-Saxons is broken. However, among the Latin races, in many cases, we still find these abuses established in the discipline of their church. The pious or impious frauds which are imposed with impunity on its deluded followers, are the same today as they were formerly. If we pass in review the corruption of the clergy, the ignorance of the people, the devout farces and ceremonies of worship; the insipid jargon and trifling rhetoric, that prevail in the discourses of their priests, we can see that the counsel of Trent did not better, to any great extent, the general spiritual condition of the church.

Among the reformers, who were marvellous characters, full of zeal and courage, none was more bold than Martin Luther, who was born in the year 1483, in the town of Eisleben, Prussia. This great man came out of obscurity and poverty and won everlasting fame for his bold affront, before the great Papal power. His memorable expression before Cardinal Cajetan, at the Diet at Worms, when he stood a lone man before his most powerful enemies, explains the nature of his character better than I can. He said, "Unless I am convinced by scripture and reason, I neither can nor dare retract anything, for my conscience is a captive to God's word, and it is neither safe nor right to go against conscience. There I take my stand. I can do no otherwise. So help me God. Amen."

Luther was a brave, fearless and intrepid man, and it is remarkable that he died a natural death, as he was much sought after and hated by the Roman church, who looked upon him as a dangerous heretic. He died in the year 1546. Contemporaneous with Luther was another great reformer, named Philip Melancthon, who was born in 1493 and died in 1560. He was a great scholar, being a friend and companion of Luther. He was chief aid to the latter, in formulating, writing and expounding his creed.

Ulrich Zwingli, born in Switzerland in the year 1484, and slain in a battle, which was fought between his followers and the Roman Catholics, in the year 1531, was a bold spirit, who opposed Luther in some of his doctrines, especially transubstantiation, the tenet which Lutherans and the Roman Catholics hold so dear to this day. John Calvin stands in the van of the reformers. He was a man of great intelligence, who bore an implacable hatred to all Romish superstition, and yet, full of bigotry and intoleration. He was born in France in the year 1509, and died in 1564. John Knox adopted the ideas of Calvin, preaching and expounding the same in Scotland.

Perhaps the greatest step from beneath the power of Popery was taken by Henry VIII., king of England, who was a wicked, vile man, in fact a monster, but who opposed the powers of Rome, and hurled defiance in the teeth of that great church. Henry was a lecherous brute, with the propensities of a Herod, who, in order to gratify his lustful bestiality, sought divorce from his wife, Catherine, that he might marry Anne Boleyn, with whom he was very familiar. Up to this time he was a favorite of the Pope, who gave to him the distinguished and honorary insignia of "Defender of the Faith." This same insignia is shown today on every coin of the realm of Great Britain. The letters on these coins are, V. R. D. G. F. D., which in Latin reads, Victoria Regina, Dei Gracia, Fidei Defensor. Translated into English meaning, Queen Victoria, by the grace of God, Defender of the faith. This title has been handed down from the Sixteenth century, and was honorably granted by the Pope of the Roman Catholic church to Henry VIII. for the faithful and energetic stand he took against Martin Luther. But now, Henry was opposed in his lecherous desires by the Pope, who would not grant a divorce from Catherine. This aroused his passionate nature, and he openly rebelled against the Pope's authority; expelled Cardinal Wolsey from his court, reinstated Archbishop Cranmer in his favor, and placed himself as the supreme authority and head of the Church in England. This audacious monarch beheaded his wives at pleasure, robbed the monasteries, defied the Pope and created a church of his own, securing his divorce from his favored archbishop, and causing the sumptuous Cardinal Wolsey to die in poverty and degradation. King Henry VIII., or Bluff King Hal, as he is familiarly called, through his Archbishop Thomas Cranmer, stands as the head and founder of the Established Church of England. The gouty old villain died, feared and despised by all who knew him. His son, Edward VI., furthered the cause of the Church of England, which grew into a great system, even becoming the dominant religion in England. But alas! for the dissenters, Edward died, and Mary, his sister, was made Queen. Her reign was a terror. She was a fanatical religious bigot, fervent in her faith as a Romanist, doing all in her power to extirpate the new faith. She started the fires in Smithfield, and created a reign of horror throughout England. She is known in history as "Bloody Mary." Lady Jane Grey, with her husband, was beheaded. the best men of the Sixteenth century, were burned at the stake. Ridley and Latimer were martyred together, and appeared satisfied with their fate, kissing the stakes where they were tied and embracing each other. Latimer said, "Be of good comfort, Master Ridley, and play the man! We shall this day light such a candle, by God's grace in England, as I trust shall never be put out." Cranmer was rather weak and vacillating, and feared the torture, and he was forced to write and retract some of his views; which were exacted by torture; but when he came to die, he died bravely, and regretted that he had made any written retraction. So keenly did he feel this, that, when the fire was kindled, he held his hand in the flames and said, "This hand hath offended," and he held it in the fire until it burned away. The expression, "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church," is verily true, and the words of Latimer, strictly prophetic, as such a candle was lit in England that has never gone out from that day.

At the death of Mary, Elizabeth was made Queen, reigning many years. She was friendly and furthered the cause of the reformers, fully establishing the Church of England, and forever breaking the power of the Roman church in that country. For this she is called "Good Queen Bess." It is true that from that day England has advanced and progressed into the mighty empire she now is. And Spain, a Latin race, under the control of the Church of Rome, embracing all her superstitions, which in the Sixteenth century was in the zenith of her power, has sank from a great empire to an insignificant monarchy, and is still sinking.

The reformation tree in England was deeply rooted at the close of this century, and the spirit of reform spread through Germany in an alarming manner. The Huguenots in France also grew, and the Roman church became so fearful of this spirit of reform that they sanctioned their extermination. To this end, on St. Bartholomew's eve (Aug. 22, 1572), at the tolling of a bell, midnight assassins, before appointed, went into the homes of the suspects and began their wholesale slaughter. In the city of Paris alone, in three days, 500 noblemen and 6,000 Protestants were butchered in cold blood. Royalty ordered a similar massacre all over France, and it is stated that upwards of 50,000 perished by these royal assassins. To show that these bloody murders met the approval of the Pope, he ordered a special jubilee throughout Christendom, celebrating this terrible event.

The spirit of the times during this century was reform, and the Protestants grew and spread, in spite of the opposition they met. They divided and subdivided into sects and parties, contending with one another, each in turn claiming inspiration and divine guidance. They placed their own interpretation on the Word of God, making a confused mass of jarring sects, very similar to what we see today.

"Public Officers Not Friends of Mormons."

In this day of religious liberty and freedom of thought, such a headline as the above should be spurious. But recent developments all over this broad land, "the land of the free, and the home of the brave," show plainly that a man's religious views, if not popular with the community, will be dragged into the mire of political partisanism, to be used as a weapon against an opponent, especially if his character is otherwise without blemish or reproach. But, now, will it stop here? From the happening of late in Overton county, Tennessee, it appears not.

There were three candidates for sheriff. One proposed to run on strictly honorable principles. As the day for the primary or primaries approached this man's opponents see success in his favor among the thinking people and naturally began to seek for detrimental precedents and accusations against him.

The all important problem was soon solved. What better argument could be brought against him: yea, what greater stigma? His daughter is a Mormon, and he entertains and respects the Mormon Elders.

All is up now, but to make sure, they added to what they had: like the milk seller, they poured water in as long as it would look milky, and here is what they made: "They say he's got a Mormon Bible, grand book! and some folks say he and his wife were secretely baptized in the night by those awful Mormons."

These and other fabrications of similar cut are carried on every tongue as sweet morsels. Denials and explanations are futile because the carrion of falsehood has created an abnormal appetite. Though of baptist faith, the gentleman has lost the race because he will not cast God's servants off as impostors, but manfully defends them in their rights.

Surely the time is fast approaching, if not already here, as spoken of in the thirteenth chapter of revelations, when they that have not the mark or the name of the beast or the number of his name in their right hands, or on their foreheads, cannot buy, sell or obtain public favor in any way.

THE DEAD.

Brother Nelson T. Jordan, of Bay Springs, Chesterfield county, S. C., has passed away, being 74 years of age. Since July 18th, 1898, the time of his baptism, he has been a strong believer in the doctrine of Christ.

March 8th, 1900, Sister Lucy H. Key, of Batesville, Va., died at the residence of her son, I. S. Jameson, Charlottesville, Va. She was baptized May 1st, 1891. Since taking upon herself the Gospel of righteousness she has ever been a fearless defender of the truth, and many are the friends and loved ones who will miss this noble soul, especially the Elders who have been so kindly cared for, always being welcomed around the family altar.

(Semi-Weekly News please copy.)

The beloved wife of E. McGlone departed from this life on Feb. 6th, 1900. For many years this faithful handmaid of God had suffered much from various diseases, which racked her being with pain; but now that the valiant spirit has taken its flight from the mortal tabernacle, we know that her sorrows and trials are o'er. She was baptized Aug. 23d, 1897, and since that time has been a staunch, firm, true Latter Day Saint.

Since our friend has gone to glory,
Though we mourn, yet we rejoice;
For she sought the way to heaven,
And made Jesus Christ her choice.

May the peace, joy, blessings and happiness of heaven attend those who mourn the loss of her who has gone where sorrows are no more.

If mankind could but write down all their evil deeds and gaze upon their deformities through the spectacles of truth they would shudder.

A liar is a moral coward; he is afraid to meet the consequences of his acts.

THE PATH OF INDEPENDENCE.

ANON.

An easy task it is to tread
The path the multitude will take;
But independence dares the stake
If but by fair conviction led.

Then haste, truth-seeker, on thy way,
Nor heed the worldling's smile or frown,
The brave alone shall wear the crown,
The noble only clasp the bay.

Go, worker of the public weal;
When knaves combine, and plot and plan,
Assert the dignity of man,
Teach the dishonest hearts to feel.

Still keep thy independence whole;
Let nothing warp thee from thy course,
And thou shalt wield a giant's force,
And wrong before thy foot shall roll.

"Biggest Show 'Cept One."

Youth's Companion.

A circus was coming to a southern town, says the Portland Transcript, and every barn and fence within a radius of twenty-five miles or more had been covered with the usual lurid announcements. An old-time colored man and a dudish yellow boy were gazing at the bills and wondering.

" 'Barnum and Bailey's circus. The biggest show on earth,' " read the youngster.

"What—what's dat?" asked the old-time darky, pricking up his ears.

The boy read again the legend of the show-bills.

"You don't know what you is taking about, nigger. Dat show kaint touch John Dobbinson's. He use to come froo here, and dat was a show wuth seein'. Dat was de bigges' show on dis earf, sho 'nough."

The old man had evidently not seen a circus for many years. Elderly colored people throughout the south like to talk about John Dobbinson.

"Read it for yourself, then," said the boy. "I tell you that thing says this is the biggest show on earth."

The old man proceeded to spell out the big letters. He waded through "Barnum and Bailey," and after a rest began on the remainder of the sentence:

"B-i-g-g-e-s-t s-h-o-w o-n e-a-r-t-h, S-e-p-t. 1."

"I knowed it! I knowed it!" shouted the old man, jumping up and down in his glee. "De bigges' show, 'cept one! Dat was John Dobbinson's!"

What War Means.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Elder W. W. MacKay.

Some men there are, whom God has endowed with the gift of making friends. They need not speak, but one clasp of the hand, a look into their face at once inspires admiration and respect. What grander talent, for it is such, can be given man than that of making friends? Elder W. W. MacKay, President of the East Kentucky Conference, belongs to that class of God's servants, who know how to make and retain one's friendship. When President David A. Broadbent was released to return home a short time ago, a good faithful servant was needed to put his shoulder to the "Wheel of Truth." Elder MacKay was the man God desired for that place. He was born in Salt Lake City, Utah, Dec. 29, 1864. His parents joined the church in their early youth and were among the first settlers of Utah. The boyhood days of Brother MacKay were spent in Salt Lake, until at the age of 18, he moved with his parents to Taylorsville, Utah. He applied himself to farming and stock raising, until called to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. Arriving in Chattanooga, Oct. 24, 1898, he was assigned to labor in the East Kentucky conference. Six months as a canvassing Elder showed forth his true metal, proving him to be a noble, God-fearing man. While Elder R. L. Mendenhall was President, Elder Mackay acted as second counselor. East Kentucky can well feel proud of her leader, who will ever be found at his post of duty, striving to upbuild the kingdom of God. May the true worth of this humble man be appreciated, and may he be blessed in his efforts to benefit mankind, are the wishes of those who know him.

ELDER W. W. MACKAY,
President of the East Kentucky Conference.

History of the Southern States Mission.

June, 1896.

This month began with general good health prevailing, and the work of the Lord progressing nicely. Conferences were held among the Elders as follows: South Carolina, June 6th and 7th; Kentucky, 20th and 21st, and Middle Tennessee, 27th and 28th. At each place it was vigorously urged upon the Elders to carry out in their minutest detail the counsels given. Particular stress was put upon the request to travel without purse and scrip. To all instructions given the Elders pledged their support, resuming their labors with the zeal of an Apostle. Though the weather was oppressively warm, yet the work continued unabated. It is gratifying to note that the distribution of the Voice of Warning, Book of Mormon and other church works rapidly increased. In South Alabama and Mississippi Sunday Schools were organized, and Virginia furnished a new branch of the church, called Golansville. On the 24th inst. nine Elders arrived from Salt Lake.

July, 1896.

The month opened uneventful. Much inconvenience and some sickness was caused the Elders through excessive heat, particularly during the latter part of the month. Because of the sickness existing among the Texas Elders, caused largely by the unhealthy conditions surrounding their labors, all the Conferences were requested to enter upon a special fast and prayer for the betterment of that Conference and the Elders who were ill. The 19th inst. was the day appointed for the fast. A change for the better at once followed the prayers to the Heavenly Father. President Kimball met with the Virginia and North Carolina Elders in their conferences held on the 11th and 12th and 18th and 19th respectively. Both Conferences were found to be in good running order. President M. Thomas was released to return home, and J. De Grey Dixon was chosen to preside over the Virginia Conference. Notwithstanding the Florida Elders were threatened by mobs, they succeeded in organizing, near Live Oak, a very promising Sunday School, with prominent people as its supporters. Kentucky furnished a large branch, containing nearly fifty members. During this month the sad tidings of the death of Apostle A. H. Cannon were received. In life we had learned to love our brother with all the affection a heart possesses. His life was before us as a model for the shaping of our own; to encourage all who seek after righteousness. May the comforting influence of God's Holy Spirit attend those who in the death of Apostle Cannon have lost a husband, father, son and brother, were the prayers and wishes of Saints and Elders throughout the world.

THE DARK AGES.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY dawned upon the world with the spirit of reform fully awake. Spirits of enlightenment and intelligence came, the clouds of darkness, superstition and ignorance, which had covered the minds of the people, for so many centuries, were beginning to disperse. However, the spiritual education, or things ecclesiastical, was not bettered by the religious enthusiasts, called Protestants. The doctrines they advanced were far from the truth, and from their inception they have been "ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth," but their teachings did tend to broaden and expand the mind of man, and did assist in gaining that great boon, religious liberty. Their doctrines can be summed up in a few words—justification, through grace, without works—as the following from Luther will show: "I observe that the devil is continually attacking this fundamental article by means of his doctors, and that in this respect he can never cease to take any repose. Well, then, I, Doctor Martin Luther, unworthy herald of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, confess this article, that faith alone without works justifies before God: and I declare that it shall stand and remain forever, in spite of the emperor of the Romans, the emperor of the Turks, the emperor of the Tartans, the emperor of the Persians, in spite of the pope and all the cardinals, with the bishops, priests, monks and nuns—in spite of all the world and of the devils themselves; and that if they endeavor to fight against this truth, they will draw the fires of hell upon their heads. This is the true and holy gospel, and the declaration of me, Doctor Luther, according to the teachings of the Holy Ghost."

Such "damnable heresies" as the above has been adopted, almost in its entirety by all protestantism. One of the strongest advocates of Methodism, a diciple of John Wesley, about 100 years ago, used the following argument, "even adultery and murder, do not hurt the pleasant children, but rather work for their good. God sees no sin in believers, whatever sin they may commit. My sins might displease God; my person is always acceptable to Him. * * * It is a most pernicious error of the schoolmen to distinguish sins according to the fact, and not according to the person. Though I blame those who say, let us sin that grace may abound, yet, adultery, incest and murder shall, upon the whole, make me holier on earth and merrier in heaven."

Such awful declarations as the above, come from beneath, were hatched and nurtured in hell, and brought to the earth by the father of lies. Only thirty years ago, when I was a small boy, I can well remember such pernicious doctrines being taught. I belonged to a branch of the Methodist church, whose most fervent and devout worshipper, would rant and tear like a maniac; and I was taught to shun a material hell of fire and brimstone. This filled me with dread, horror and fear and I know whereof I speak, when I denounce such fallacies as doctrines of devils.

It is not to religion then, that we must look for the great reforms that have advanced mankind, to the degree of enlightenment that they now enjoy.

In the Seventeenth Century, the morals of the nobility in England, were extremely low and sordid, and they had become very irreligious. Drunkenness and foul talk were not considered at all ungentlemanly, and purity of life was sneered at, as "out of fashion." The art of seduction was actually taught, and considered necessary as part of a finished and polite education. The commonality, or the lower level of the social strata, lived in extreme poverty; were ignorant, brutal, low and vicious. The process of manufacturing gin and rum, was discovered in the year 1684, and the result was intemperance, drunkenness and immorality, which filled the British nation at this time. The various venders of these spirituous intoxicants had the most ingenious method of advertising their business. On the sign boards they invited the people to come in and get drunk for a penny, and for two pence a man could get drunk and have the privilege of laying down upon a bed of straw. There is no doubt that much of this social degradation was due to the apathy and slothfulness of moral teachers at this time.

The civil reforms, operated on a large scale, and under Cromwell and William, Prince of Orange, England was delivered from kingly tyranny. These men played havoc with the Roman Catholics in Great Britain, despoiling their property, destroying their churches and breaking their power to such a degree, that, to this day, they have never been able to recuperate. This revolution of William, (who sailed from Holland in the year 1618), inspired the nation with a new spirit. Hitherto English philosophy and literature were almost unknown on the continent, but after the invasion of William, prince of Orange, we commence to hear of foreigners visiting England, learning the English language and seeking to understand the life and character of her subjects. They thus disseminated the philosophy of Newton, the literature of Shakespeare and Addison, Pope and Swift, with the scientific truths of Copernicus, Bruno and Galileo; opened the avenues for great intellectual advancement, far superceding any former age, and through the agency of the printing press, these ideas were given to the masses. The most backward minds began to have some knowledge of literature and the discoveries of science.

The ancient form of royalty and chivalry had lost much of its sheen and power, and stood in the shady background of the past. Since Oliver Cromwell, with his Puritan Roundheads, governed the nation, a new generation of citizens, henceforth began to occupy the earth, imposing new ideas on the public manners and stamping its image on the minds of men. The fiat had gone forth: man shall not be curtailed in his liberty and agency to worship God, according to the dictates of his conscience— To this end, the Puritan sect, who were enthusiastic religionists and had been much persecuted in England for their religious views, were compelled to seek a place of refuge. They sailed from Holland and landed in America, in the year 1620, and settled in the New England states. Here, as in England, many sects and parties, mingled with each other, and jars and discord followed. It seems very singular that they should come to this land of the free and immediately adopt the methods of their tormentors, from whom they had fled; using force to compel each other to see the beauties (?) of the religion, each had adopted. All of these sects, professed to derive their particular doctrines, wholly from the Bible, and they invariably denounced the old systems, and those not congenial to their own particular bigotry, as rotten and corrupt; they alone, being holy. However, they were ardent, enthusiastic and zealous in their austerity, especially abhorring all formalism, relying more on the efficacy of spirited preaching, than the rites and jargon that they had escaped from, in the English and Roman church.

The Puritanical long-faced enthusiast, of whatever sect or degree, found a home in America, with territory enough to separate, or mingle as they saw fit. On acount of the warlike traits of their neighbors, the Indians, they were compelled to unite together, as colonists, for mutual strength and protection. However, they soon disagreed, grew turbulent, divided, and in their superstitious bigotry, burned people accused of witchcraft, and otherwise exercised an intolerant unchristian spirit. For his free thought and open religious views, Roger Williams was driven to seek refuge among the Indians of Rhode Island, in the year 1636. He preached among the aborigines quite extensively and is acknowledged to be one of the founders of the Baptist persuasion, having organized and officiated as pastor in that church in America. He had been duly appointed a minister, but, being an honest man, after realizing his position and lack of authority to administer in the affairs of Christ, he refused to continue as pastor in his church, on the ground that 'there was no regularly constituted church on earth, nor any person authorized to administer any church ordinance, nor can there be, until new apostles are sent by the great Head of the church, for Whose coming I am seeking."

This confession, from this honest man, was equally applicable to all sects in Christendom. They were all, without question, in a state of strife and confusion, grovelling in the isms and ideas of uninspired ignorance. They had a "form of Godliness, but denying the power thereof." Their teachers were "men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith." The people were in the condition of which Paul describes them, heaping up teachers to themselves, who would tell them fabulous tales, and thus tickle their ears and fancies. The same condition exists in Christendom today, strife, sedition, confusion and contention; lack of authority and inspiration from heaven; formulating dogmas and man-made systems, which are obnoxious to an honest investigator of the Word of God. These religious teachers are exercising powers and prerogatives, which are purely of their own devising and not of God, being without His stamp of authority; consequently, under His ban, and will eventually utterly perish.

Science a Growing Inheritance.

No scientific truth is born anew, coming by itself and of itself. Each new truth is always the offspring of something which has gone before, becoming in turn the parent of something coming after. In this aspect the man of science is unlike, or seems to be unlike, the poet and the artist. The poet is born, not made; he rises up, no man knowing his beginnings; when he goes away, though men after him may sing his songs for centuries, he himself goes away wholly, having taken with him his mantle, for this he can give to no other. The man of science is not thus creative; he is created. His work, however great it be, is not wholly his own; it is in part the outcome of the work of men who have gone before.

Again and again a conception which has made a name great has come not so much by the man's own effort as out of the fullness of time. Again and again we may read in the words of some man of old the outlines of an idea which in later days has shone forth as a great acknowledged truth. From the mouth of the man of old the idea dropped barren, fruitless; the world was not ready for it, and heeded it not; the concomitant and abutting truths which could give it power to work were wanting. Coming back again in later days, the same idea found the world awaiting it; things were in travail preparing for it; and some one, seizing the right moment to put it forth again, leaped into fame.

It is not so much the men of science who make science, as some spirit which, born of the truths already won, drives the man of science onward and uses him to win new truths in turn. It is because each man of science is not his own master, but one of many obedient servants of an impulse which was at work long before him, and will work long after him, that in science there is no falling back. In respect to other things there may be times of darkness and times of light, there may be risings, decadences, and revivals. In science there is only progress. The path may not be always a straight line, there may be swerving to this side and to that, ideas may seem to return again and again to the same point of the intellectual compass; but it will always be found that they have reached a higher level—they have moved, not in a circle, but in a spiral. Moreover, science is not fashioned as in a house, by putting brick to brick, that which is once put remaining as it was put to the end. The growth of science is that of a living being. As in the embryo phase follows phase, and each member of the body puts on in succession different appearances, though all the while the same member, so a scientific conception of one age seems to differ from that of a following age, though it is the same one in the process of being made; and as the dim outlines of the early embryo become, as the being grows more distinct and sharp, like a picture on a screen brought more and more into focus, so the dim gropings and searchings of the men of science of old are by repeated approximations wrought into the clear and exact conclusions of later times.—Sir Michael Foster, M. P., in Great Thoughts.

MIRACLES THE FRUITS OF EVIL AS WELL AS RIGHTEOUSNESS.

BY ELDER WILLIAM G. MILES, JR.

Not only have the inspired writers of sacred history plainly predicted a total apostacy from the Gospel before the second advent of the Savior, but they have told us in unmistakable language that Satan, before that time, would make himself manifest in the hearts of men, by the working of miracles, signs, and lying wonders. In the dispensations that have past, we plainly observe, according to Scripture, that the working of miracles has not always been demonstrations of the power of God. When the Lord sent Moses and Aaron before Pharaoh to entreat for the deliverance of the Israelites from the bonds of the Egyptian king, they were commanded to perform a miracle in his presence as an evidence of divine power.

But we find the king calling the wise men, the magicians of Egypt, and when Aaron cast down his rod and it became a serpent they were given power to do the same. When Aaron, as commanded, stretched forth his hand and smote the waters with his rod, they became as blood, yet the magicians did the same. And when Aafon was enabled to put forth his hand and bring up frogs to cover the land of Egypt, the magicians had power to bring up frogs also.

We can see plainly two powers manifest, one working against the other, and when God gave His servants power to perform a miracle Satan could endow his instruments with power to accomplish some of the same.

It will be observed that it has been the design of Lucifer, not only in the case of Moses and Aaron before the king, but in all of his forms of deception, to imitate as near as possible the works of the Lord; and thereby deceive many, whom it would be impossible to deceive otherwise.

But we find, when the plague of lice was brought upon the land by the power of God, that Satan was checked in his designs, as the magicians could not perform this miracle; thus we see the Divine power superseding the evil.

And by close observance we will see that this always has been, and always will be the case; the works of the Lord, when compared to those of Satan, are as light is to darkness; the ways of God as high above the ways of the Devil as heaven is above the earth.

But these facts can only be known by faithfulness to God, and a firm desire to know and obey the truth; for Satan, although limited in his authority, will have such power in the hearts of men that some are bound to be deceived.

The witch of Endor had power to call up Samuel from the dead, according to the request of Saul; thus it is plainly evident that miracles were, in olden times, the fruits of evil as well as righteousness.

But the all-important question confronting us today is this: "Was Satan to retain his power unto our day of enlightenment?

Let us search the Scriptures for a moment and find out. Jesus, in speaking of the signs to precede His second coming, says: "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that if it were possible they shall deceive the very elect." (Matt. 24:24.)

The testimony of Paul, in his second epistle to the Thessalonians, second chapter, ninth to eleventh verses, in which he says that Satan is to have all power, with signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivable of unrighteousness in them that perish, is virtually the same as the testimony of our Savior; and the words of John, as recorded in Rev., thirteenth chapter, thirteenth and fourteenth verses, corroborate the evidence given by all other writers on this subject.

And furthermore, Jesus says of these workers of unrighteousness, "Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? and in Thy name have cast out devils; and in Thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you, depart from me ye that work iniquity," thus plainly demonstrating that these deceivers will not come in the name of Satan, but in the name of Christ.

The evil one is too cunning in his designs to send out messengers in his own name, well knowing that his plans would be frustrated; but by sending them in the name of Christ, as wolves in sheeps' clothing, he is able to deceive and entrap many a soul, who has pleasure in unrighteousness.

As children of God we have no promise of Divine power to work miracles; or of the spiritual blessings promised the faithful, except by yielding obedience to the commandments of our Savior.

As the Apostle John has said, "If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed." (II John, 10.)

Miracles, then, from a standpoint of "Scripture and reason,' are not always manifestations of the power of God. They have not been in times past, and are not today.

The glorious principles and ordinances of the Gospel of Christ, as instituted by Himself, and the power to work miracles are inseparably connected, and where one is taken and the other left off, it must undoubtedly be the fruits of evil.

What must be our decision, then, in regard to those in this day, who boldly claim to have received a manifestation of God's power, and yet do not teach the pure doctrine of Christ? What must we decide in regard to those who ignore the commandments of their Lord, yet claim to be blessed with the Divine power of working miracles; such as healing, mesmerism, hypnotism, etc.?

The question is easily answered, and as true believers in God, we must certainly decide that they are of the same type as the magicians of Egypt, and many others of the same color.

There is positively no danger of those who are faithful being deceived by the cunning devices of Satan. If any there come, no matter how miraculous his power, if it be not connected with that pure and undefiled doctrine, which is the power of God unto salvation, we will be justified in denouncing him as a wolf in sheep's clothing, and an instrument in the hands of Satan, as were the sorcerers of old.

God help us to prove faithful—
Our duties to fulfill;
Our covenants to keep sacred—
That we on Zion's Hill
May rise with Christ our Savior,
In robes of righteousness—
Enjoying Life Eternal,
And numbered with the blest.

ARTICLES OF FAITH
OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

We are all strong enough to endure the misfortunes of others.—La Rochefoucauld.

We thank our many correspondents for their expressions of appreciation for our paper and calendar. We refrain from publishing all the complimentary sentiments received, feeling well repaid to know the Star has lighted the path of those seeking after truth and righteousness.

Elder Reed Smoot, of Provo City, Utah, was appointed at the late conference to be an Apostle of the Lord Jesus, a vacancy in the Apostles' quorum having occurred through the death of our beloved brother, Franklin D. Richards. Apostle Smoot has for a number of years been second counselor to President Partridge of the Utah Stake.

THREE SCORE AND TEN.

The 6th inst. marked the seventieth anniversary of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Three score and ten years have passed since its organization, the time alloted to man. When mortal man has reached the seventy year mark he grows feeble, but far different with the Church God established through His servant Joseph Smith. As years roll by it grows in strength, filling the hearts of thousands of honest people with peace, joy and happiness. The Church was established when confusion was at its zenith, and those who were willing to follow its inspired teachings were hated, reviled and persecuted, many even unto death. The world cared not for their religion, yea, they even despised the name "Mormon." Its leaders were pure, and God looked upon them with approbation, sending forth the sunshine of truth unto their souls. Who can fight against the purposes of the Heavenly Father and withstand Him? Cannot man, puny thing, understand their strength is nothing? Will they never learn that one man with God is greater than the whole world if they fight against right? The work of God administered through His servants called "Mormons" shall continue to advance until righteousness has filled the earth as the waters cover the mighty sea. What men may say we care not, but for us we prefer to serve the Lord.

MAKE OTHERS HAPPY.

It has ever been the teachings of the inspired servants of God to instill within the Saints a desire to benefit mankind. "The true key to happiness," remarked President Snow, but a short time back, "is to make others happy." If we can but sense the true meaning of the Gospel plan, what is it but a means of opening the doors of happiness, and bidding all partake of salvation? A thankful man is a happy one, be he poor and little noticed by the world. No matter what his trials, temptations and afflictions are, he can always see those in his midst whose circumstances are not so favorable as his own. If we enjoy the Spirit of God our companions in life will be, Duty to God, and love for fellow men. From the earliest time when our Heavenly Father placed man upon this earth He has sent forth His Prophets to be as Physicians to administer righteousness unto suffering mankind; to heal them of worldly imperfections brought upon themselves through disobedience to divine laws. The crowning event spread forth its light when the Savior came to earth to bless and aid. The world was at that time in the midst of darkness. The great and fearful plague of worldly wickedness was sweeping away mankind and choking his very life from him. A physician was needed to prescribe a remedy. The Redeemer said: "They that are whole need not a physician; but they that are sick. I come not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." The world certainly needed to be rid of the curse of corruption, and if the directions of our Lord had been followed sin would have been swept away and man rescued from the strong grasp of Satan. Is there a happier man than a true servant of God, who responds to a call, going forth to search out the honest in heart? What worldly pleasure equals the happiness enjoyed by those who carry the message of salvation unto the people of the nations? None are happier, as the testimony of hundreds, yes, thousands of Elders stand forth in bold relief, saying their happiest days have been in the mission field. When an Elder is doing his duty time passes sweetly by, arming him with truth to wage battle against evil. But, say people of the world: How can persecution bring blessings? What is the secret of happiness enjoyed by Mormon Elders, even when they are in the midst of persecution? Remembering that trials are but blessings in disguise, and being guided by the sweet influence of the Spirit, they work with a will; making themselves happy by the enjoyment manifest in the lives of those who have accepted the Gospel. Why should not an Elder feel happy when he sees people whose very faces radiate with the sunlight of happiness? There is not a grander or nobler work given man to do than teaching and preaching the Gospel. Doing good is but a manifestation of a man's relations to God. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

FIFTY YEARS AGO.

"I can say to all Israel, it is time we should awake from our lethargy, from our drowsy and sleepy feelings; awake to righteousness, and hasten the work that is upon us, for in a day and hour that we are not aware of, behold the Son of Man cometh!"

Fifty years ago the above words were uttered by that veritable "Lion of the Lord," and Moses of these last days—Brigham Young. They were given by the voice of inspiration, and spoken by the power and demonstration of God's Holy Spirit. Since the day they were spoken until the present time, we have witnessed a notable and marked era, in the material and religious welfare of the saints of latter days. Were we to examine ourselves today, we should find that the words of this great prophet are just as applicable to us as to those to whom he spoke. We must needs be on the alert, and watch as well as pray, for the adversary of the souls of men is seeking our destruction. Let us awake and with a sense of duty resting upon us, go to work with a vim and vigor that the righteous purpose of God may be accomplished. This work is a glory to the righteous, a marvel to the wicked, and a wonder to the world. We cannot afford for one moment to be lulled to sleep, while the Lord is calling us to duty. Idleness, superstition and vice are the enemies we must go against. Make no compromise with any, but on unconditional terms, wage a warfare of righteousness and truth, which will eventually triumph over every foe. Let us put ourselves in harmony with God and His righteous laws, that we may receive the divine sunlight of His everlasting love to illumine our souls, and point out the path of duty. Let duty be written on our brow, engraved on the fleshy tablets of our hearts, and always manifest in our walks through life. Let us be up and doing, fulfilling the commands of our God, and putting into practice the words of him who spoke fifty years ago.

Don't waste yourself in rejection, nor bark against the bad, but chant the beauty of the good—Emerson.

President Snow's Birthday.

Deseret News.

The 3rd of April was the 86th anniversary of the birthday of President Lorenzo Snow. The occasion was celebrated Monday afternoon, the 2nd inst., by the officers and workers of the Temple, in the annex of that building, which was beautifully ornamented with floral decorations. The company consisted of the workers and their wives or husbands, as the case might be, and invited guests. The latter were limited to the General Authorities of the Church.

When the guest of honor entered the hall the entire company arose and sang "We thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet." The opening prayer was offered by Elder John Nicholson.

Bishop John R. Winter, who had personally superintended the arrangements and conducted the proceedings throughout, announced that refreshments would be in order. The blessing was asked by Bishop Romney. Then followed the "replenishment of the inner man," and engagement in pleasant social conversation.

At the conclusion of this exercise the Temple choir sang "I know that my Redeemer lives." This was followed by an appropriate congratulatory and presentation speech by Bishop Winder, directed to the guest of honor, to whom he presented the following:

In behalf of Sister Priscilla P. Jennings, a handsome vase and bouquet.

In behalf of Bishop William B. Preston, an exquisite bouquet.

In behalf of Jonathan G. Kimball and wife, a beautiful bouquet.

In behalf of the officers and workers of the Temple, three large lilies, emblematical of the First Presidency; a bouquet of roses (appropriate in number) representative of the Twelve Apostles; a rose emblematical of the Patriarch of the Church; a bouquet of carnations, emblems of the first seven Presidents of Seventies; a trio of roses representative of the Presidency of the Lesser Priesthood.

The responsive remarks of President Snow were appropriate, pointed and in his usual happy vein.

A solo was sweetly sung by Sister Mary Young. Suitable remarks were made by Elder Brigham Young. An address, admirably adapted to the occasion, was read by Sister Hester S. Cannon, and the choir sang "Zion stands with hills surrounded." Then followed a neat speech by Patriarch John Smith; remarks and song (Let the Saints prepare to meet Him), by Elder George Teasdale, and remarks by Elder Seymour B. Young.

A violin solo by Brother B. M. Young, Jr., showed him to be an unusually skillful manipulator of that instrument.

An original poem, composed for the occasion, by Sister Louisa L. G. Richards, was read by that lady. This was followed by interesting and impressive remarks by President Joseph F. Smith and Bishop Robert T. Burton, and Elder George D. Pyper sang "There is sunshine in my soul." The concluding addresses, which were in excellent harmony with the occasion, were delivered by Bishop E. F. Sheets and President George Q. Cannon.

The choir sang "Shall we meet beyond the river?"

The musical exercises, which constituted an attractive feature of the proceedings, were conducted by Prof. C. J. Thomas.

After the benediction, which was pronounced by President Snow, the company passed in line in front of that beloved and venerated man, and took occasion to shake hands with and congratulate him.

This was an ideal gathering, characterized by unadulterated peace and good will. All who participated will doubtless retain it in their memories as one of their most pleasant social experiences.

Abstracts from Correspondence.

To The Star.

A little space in the Star will be much appreciated by me, as I wish to say a few words in behalf of the Latter-day Saints. When the Elders first visited Trigg county, Kentucky, they called and left a tract with me. I paid little attention to its contents, throwing the literature aside, thinking it was of little value. A few weeks rolled away, when I had the privilege of hearing the Elders preach. I wished to know if they be true servants, and can say now I know they are God's anointed. Your sister in the Gospel,

JANE T. WHALEY.

To The Star.

As I am a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, I desire to pen you a few lines. I joined the church three years ago and can say I have learned more since that time than I ever thought I would. Although but 14 years of age, yet I read my Testament and bear testimony to the truthfulness of the Gospel. I want to be a good, pure girl, and expect persecution by obeying the true plan. I am living with my grandparents. My grandpa likes the Elders of God and treats them well, but he is not a member yet. I hope and pray that he will be soon. I will close, praying for the continued success of the bright little Star.

NANCY F. JOHNSON.

Southern Star.

Having read the Star for some time, I would like to write a few lines, if you would please allow me space in your paper. August 1st, 1899, to my great surprise two Mormon Elders walked up to our gate. I told my husband to bid them enter, which he did. I knew they were humble servants of the Lord, and hearing them sing and preach has often filled my heart with gladness. Like Paul, I was not ashamed of the Gospel, being baptized Dec. 10th. I only wish everyone could see the beauties of the Gospel as I do, for I can testify to its truthfulness. I have seen the sick healed by God through the Elders. I pray I may always have the Spirit to guide me in this life. SARAH CULPEPPER.
Meigs, Ga.

Editor Southern Star.

Please allow me a little space in your welcome weekly visitor, to tell to its many readers what the Lord has done for us through the humble Elders. I will never forget the rainy evening, three years ago, that Elder Soren Peterson and E. R. Needham came to my house. We granted them shelter from the depths of our hearts. I will never forget the words spoken by them when they promised if we would be humble and prayerful we would never regret the day the Elders visited us. Since that good day we have had the pleasure of entertaining thirty-four Elders and have heard 400 sermons preached, and have had many Gospel conversations. I have read my Bible and compared its teachings with those of the Latter-day Saints and found them to be in harmony. My wife and myself were baptized the latter part of last year, and since that time much joy has filled our hearts. I bless the day that the Elders found their way to our door. Best wishes we send to the readers of the Star. Your brother and sister in the Gospel. N. L. BROWN AND WIFE.

NOT ASHAMED OF THE GOSPEL.

Below is given two letters which constitutes a bit of correspondence between an Elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and his uncle, a Deacon in a sectarian church. The Elder had given up all earthly ties, to labor for the salvation of mankind, and having been invited by this uncle to pay them a visit, wrote telling him the time he would call. "Denounce your religion and then we will give you a hearty welcome," read his uncle's letter, showing plainly his narrowness. The Elder's letter is teeming with the fruits of the Spirit, and his testimony will stand against this self-righteous man, who has shown he is of the world.—Ed.

——, March 29th, 1900.

Mr. ——

Dear Burton:

Yours of a few days since received in regard to the visit you propose making your relatives soon. None of them can give you a hearty welcome on account of the doctrine you Latter-day Saints preach and practice. The people in this section have no faith in it at all. Your mother wrote me a long letter not long since. I want no other doctrine than that preached by Christ and His Apostles. The absurd idea of the founder of the Latter-day Saints (Joe Smith) being worshiped by your people as Christ; that the Lord spoke to him in 1832, etc. The days of miracles have passed hundreds and hundreds of years ago. Do away with such doctrines and fraud as your people preach and practice, and your relatives will give you a hearty welcome.

Your uncle in hope of Eternal Life,

——, March 31st, 1900.

Mr. ——

Dear Uncle—Your communication of March 29th to hand. The spirit of it greatly grieves me. As I gather from your letter, you do not care for me to visit you as long as I am a member of the church to which I belong? Should I see fit to leave this church, then you would be very pleased to welcome me? I say this is, it seems to me, the sum and substance of your letter.

Now, let me say, in all kindness, that I cannot possibly give up my religion, even though the whole world were against me. I have spent two years of my time and feeble talents, free of charge, in preaching it to the world, and I intend to spend the rest of my life in that direction. While I may do that, I, however, respect all people in their religious beliefs, and do not force my religion upon anyone. My instructions, before I started on this visiting tour, were to say nothing concerning my religious views unless asked regarding them. I have followed those instructions. While I visited Uncle —— in —— (and, by the way, he welcomed me), I had nothing to say in regard to my religion, as you will find by writing to him.

Permit me, kindly, to say a few words in regard to several points mentioned in your letter. In the first place, permit me to observe that we preach and practice nothing contrary to the Bible, notwithstanding, that our enemies often say, but fail to prove, otherwise. You will find, by referring to our Articles of Faith, that this statement is true. The Articles are on the back of my personal card, which I inclose. That is what we believe, preach and practice, here in Utah, and everywhere else on earth.

You say, "I want no other doctrine than that preached by Christ and His Apostles." Neither do we, nor do we ask you to accept any other.

Christ taught (Mark 16:17:18) that certain gifts and blessings (commonly termed miracles) should (not "may") follow those who believe on Him. James (5:14, 15) says to send for the Elders and have them pray over the sick, and the Lord should raise them up. We are told by Paul (an Apostle) (I Cor., 12:4-12) that three of the gifts of the Spirit are healing, working of miracles, and prophecy. In a number of places we are told that God is the "same yesterday, today, and forever;" and that "He is no respecter of persons." You say "the days of miracles have passed hundreds and hundreds of years ago," Now, dear uncle, I have never seen anything of the kind in the Scriptures, at least not in my Bible. I use King James' version. I may have overlooked it, but I think not.

Did you ever read in Ephesians 4:11-16 where Paul said that Christ placed in the church Apostles and Prophets for the work of the ministry, and that they should remain there until we come to the unity of the faith? We have not come to that unity, so, of course, we must have Prophets, and why not Joseph Smith be one of them? Solomon says (Prov. 29:18) "Where there is no vision the people perish," and Amos (3:7) "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but He revealeth His secrets unto His servants the Prophets." Why not Joseph Smith be one of those Prophets to receive His secrets, so that he can be a great power for the saving of mankind?

Paul says (Heb. 5:4) "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." By referring to Exodus, fourth chapter, you will find that Aaron was called of God through the Prophet Moses. So, necessarily, we must be called by a Prophet if we preach or officiate in the ordinances of the Gospel. Why not Joseph Smith be a Prophet, so that the earth may not be devoid of authorized preachers? In the Revelations of St. John (14:6) we find the following: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." Why should that angel not come to Joseph Smith? He says it did. What is there to disprove his statement?

We do not worship Joseph Smith, as has often been said, but we hold him in reverence, just as we do all of the Holy Prophets, such as Abraham, Moses, John, etc. We worship God the Father through Jesus Christ.

In conclusion let me say that when Christ was upon the earth He gave one infallible test of His divinity. He told men that if they should comply with the doctrines He taught they should know that they were divine. This is the one infallible test of the divinity of Joseph Smith. If any person will obey the doctrines He taught they shall know that he was a true Prophet of God. Three hundred thousand people have obeyed and know. Why not you?

While it may be heartrending to see my friends and my relatives turn the cold shoulder because of my religion, yet there can be only one safe path—the pathway of duty. I know that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the living God—know it beyond a doubt—know it just as Peter knew that Jesus was the Christ—by the testimony of the Spirit of God. With this testimony in my heart I cannot turn back from the truth; I cannot leave the brightness of the Gospel arc-light for the dingy light of the sputtering tallow-candle of modern Christendom.

The best I can say is to say with the Savior, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." (Matt. 7:7), or with James (1:5), "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him."

That the Lord of All Mercies may bless you with wisdom and with His Spirit, that you may be enabled to comprehend and obey the truth, thereby securing for yourself eternal life, is the earnest prayer of your loving Nephew. BURTON.

A WORD IN DEFENSE.

BY ELDER R. L. SHEPHERD.

In a recent issue of our county paper here, there appeared an article on Baptism, to which I desire to reply, if I may be granted space in your valuable paper for that purpose. The author of the above-mentioned article desired to know whether baptism as taught by Jesus was of the water, or of the spirit. To those who are willing to abide in the words of the Master, it will readily appear that both the water and the spiritual baptism are necessary to the salvation of their souls, for He says: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God." Can anything be more explicit than this divine fiat proceeding from the lips of the Savior himself? It is given in clear, simple, well defined, unmistakable terms. Example, in all things, being more forceful and impressive upon the human mind, let us look for one moment at the actions of Him who said: "Ye must be born again!" Was He baptised? Yes! verily so, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, these four sacred historians all bear testimony that our Lord went into the waters of baptism (Matt. 3:16; Mark 1:9. Luke 3,21; John 1:33)

We see then, that the Lamb of God, taught by the word of precept, and living example essentiality, vital importance. and absolute necessity, of water and spiritual baptism. When the Lord commissioned the apostles to "go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," it was with this knowledge or understanding. "He that believeth (the gospel) and is baptised shall be saved "while he that believeth not (consequently rejects baptism) shall be damned." (Mark 16:16.) Having received this divine commission, and being empowered with the gift of the Holy Ghost (Acts 2.4) they began to preach the gospel of salvation, and having established in the hearts of their hearers a true, living, profitable faith, they commanded them to "repent and be baptized" (Acts 2:38) promising the gift of the Holy Ghost, to follow, as a consequence of obedience to these principles of faith and repentence, and all important ordinance of baptism by water. We see then, that in all these scriptural references, baptism was made a condition of salvation, and by what authority has any man the right to say that this ordinance of baptism is not essential to the salvation of mankind.

The author of the article under discussion says, in speaking of Peter's visit with the devout Cornelius, "that, at the house of Cornelius, he (Peter) makes, or recommends it as a result of salvation." I fail to see where he finds any ground for this conclusion, the scripture sayeth: "And He commanded them to be baptized" (Acts 10.48.) Not recommended, dear brother, but "commanded in the name of the Lord." The scriptures of truth, the Holy Bible, is replete with passages commanding those who desire salvation to be "baptised in water for the remission of sins," and the divine historians, return again and again to condemn those who deny this essential doctrine of Christ (Heb. 6:12), and, confirm the teachings of those who earnestly contend for its obedience. Peter gives us to understand that baptism is an essentiality, for in speaking of the days when the earth was deluged by the flood, he says: "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us." Paul was commanded to "arise and be baptised, and wash away thy sins" (Acts 22:16). In conclusion, I would say unto all: "Search the scriptures," Do as Christ has bidden you to do. Follow in His footsteps. Keep His holy and sacred ordinances, that you may escape the day of burning and be saved with the redeemed.

GLEANINGS.

In the city of Richmond, Va., during the week ending march 31st, Elders T. H. Fotheringham and Joel Nibley sold seventy-one books, while Elders E. W. Allen and E. G. Gardner sold forty. This shows much zeal on their part and surely their efforts are praisworthy.

President Ben E. Rich, Chattanooga, Tenn.:

Dear Brother—Enclosed you will find $1 for the renewal of my subscription to The Star. It is indeed a missionary to our home, being highly appreciated, and should be in the home of every Latter Day Saint. It will inspire the hearts of all who read it and I will say God bless The Star that shines so bright in our home once a week. And the calendar I must thank you for that. It is something I appreciate very much. Your brother in the cause of truth. W. G. PALMER.

Elder Richie Harkness called in at the office this week on his way home, having filled an honorable mission in the Southern States. Elder Harkness has endured many trials and much persecution for the Gospel. He is a southerner by nativity, embracing the Gospel at his home in York county, South Carolina, Jan. 6, 1885. In 1887 he was taken out and made to bear lashings because he was a "Mormon." He emigrated to Utah in 1890, and in May, 1898, he left his loved ones for a mission to the south. Speaking of his mission he says: "I have never enjoyed myself better in my life," and he is 50 years of age. Brother Harkness was a Misisonary Baptist minister prior to his conversion to the principles of righteousness, as taught by the "Mormon" Elders.

HAPPINESS AND PLEASURE.

BY JAMES E. TALMAGE.

In addressing a mixed assembly of Jews, Christ preached unto them the Gospel of salvation; and in declaring unto them the divinity of His own person and mission, gave this solemn promise:

"If ye continue in my word, ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8:32.)

In truth alone is freedom to be found. The bonds of sin, the penalties of broken law, are stronger than any shackles that man can forge. Sin were possibly of less dreadful aspect if it ended with itself; but terrible as is the fact, wickedness must be classed with the things that live, and grow, and propagate their kind. It is like the weed that flourishes in noxious splendor, with blossoms which outbloom the flowers of sweet service; though the very fragrance of its petals is deadly.

Sin leads to sin. It is a promissory note in the bank of the Inferno, with compound interest accumulating day and night. The sinner is ever in debt, and of all who wail in bondage, the guilty debtor is among the most abject. The truth will liberate men from the serfdom of debt, as from all other bonds of sin.

We speak of "telling the truth;" this is at best but a narrow expression, circumscribed by custom. Truth is not a thing of words. Speaking the truth is weak compared with doing the truth—as feeble in comparison as is voicing a prayer in contrast with doing with full purpose of heart what that prayer implies. Let us be thankful that we have better and more enduring stuff than words with which to weave the fabric of our life's purpose; grateful that we know a language more impressive and less liable to go astray than is that of the lips.

The truth gives freedom, and freedom brings happiness. The free man is the truly happy man. Freedom carries with it burdens; it imposes responsibilities; it may deprive us of lesser pleasures; nevertheless it insures happiness. Let it be noted that happiness and pleasure are not the same. In the haste and hurry of our busy lives we ofttimes fail to distinguish between the two, and are ready to accept the one for the other. They belong to different species. Happiness is the jewel, pleasure but the paste imitation. Happiness is the noble metal, unaffected by the corrosion of the elements, unbitten by the tooth of time; pleasure is the gilded brass, which, once deprived of its false, scaly covering, cankers and is converted into poisonous verdigris.

Pleasure is a weed, however alluring its fragrance: happiness the plant of usefulness and sweetness. Pleasure is the tickling of the palate with the savory pottage, too often bought at the price of a birthright: happiness is the strength, the health, the vigor, that comes from wholesome food, honestly earned, eaten with thanksgiving, and assimilated by a body that has not been wrecked through dissipation.

Happiness is the love that passeth all understanding, which only true men and virtuous women can know: the paradise of the soul into which only the clean may enter. It mellows the harshness of our natures, it restrains, it sanctifies. In such affection the angels lend their aid, and the Father approves. Pleasure is the ungodly passion that too often passes current for love; it scorches the heart and sears the soul; 'tis the brutish instinct that seeks only present gratification, and counts not the consequences; 'tis the incarnation of selfishness, that would use the fairest of the works of God as a plaything to be broken and defiled and then thrown away.

Happiness is the joy of the angels; pleasure too often but the fiendish pastime of the fallen. Happiness leaves no bitter taste in the mouth, nor does it impel to deeds of which there is cause to repent. Happiness is a gift from God; pleasure is the devils' counterfeit.

The Latter-day Saints are, as of right they must be, a happy people. Indeed, I am suspicious of one professing to be a Latter-day Saint who is not happy. This is not saying that the Latter-day Saints should be a pleasure-loving or a pleasure-seeking people. Happiness may bring with it tears, and sobs, and sorrows; but beneath them all is a current of assurance that such have come from the loving though chastening hand of God.

A few months ago I was one of a small gathering of Utah people in the city of London. Those who found themselves there face to face in a strange land, enjoyed an hour of pleasant converse and innocent recreation. Among the few other than Utah people present was a gentleman who had recently joined the church in Great Britain. He stood looking over the small assembly in an interested manner; and then, taking me aside, he said: "I have heard numerous testimonies borne since I came into the church; have heard many relate the circumstances that led them to investigate this message of truth; but I have never found another with an experience quite like my own. What would you say if I tell you that the one circumstance which attracted me and led me to investigate the message brought by the Elders of the Church of Jesus Christ was this: that all who join this church seem to be happy? Everybody here appears to be happy; and whenever I meet a Latter-day Saint I find myself in the presence of happiness and contentment." Well, I knew that truth before, and yet, perhaps, I had never framed the thought in words. I replied: "Why shouldn't they be happy?" In thinking over the incident I have reached the conclusion that happiness is not merely an incidental, but an essential feature in the lives of Latter-day Saints.

You will understand me when I say figuratively that I believe happiness is one of the principles of the Gospel; for the man who knows that he has embraced the Gospel of freedom, the one who has heard and comprehended the message of his Father, the one who is no longer seeking here and there, and wandering hither and thither in search of the pearl of great price, because he has found it, ought to be, if any man can be, happy. Happiness and peace will find a lodgment in the heart of the righteous man. He will be willing to forego the pleasures and assume the burdens of life. He will be willing to meet the sorrows that come. And through it all he will be happy and thankful, because he is a free man. He is no longer a slave; the truth has emancipated him; the Gospel has enfranchised him; the word of God has made him free.

But the fact that we mistake pleasure for happiness is not without its parallels. This is a day of imitation, adulteration, deception, and fraud. What is there of value in the world that has not been counterfeited, what that has not been adulterated and imitated? Half the chemists of the world today are devoting their energies to the detection of adulteration; and the other half, equally skillful perhaps, and ofttimes more ingenious, are using their great knowledge of the hidden things of nature to devise and concoct other adulterations that shall defy detection. Priesthood has been imitated by priestcraft. Vice ofttimes masquerades in the robes that are like unto those that virtue wears, and the test of revelation is required sometimes to distinguish between the two. But do not let us mistake the one for the other. If you bargain for happiness, see that you get the genuine article; pleasure is not a fair substitute.

Don't adjudge me as inexcusably pessimistic; as seeing only the sombre side of human nature and institutions; as perceiving naught but the corruption of present-day society. I have not lost faith in my Father's family. My fellowmen are children of God, and though many of them forget their high estate, and ignore their divine heritage, all do not so. Our Father looks with righteous pride upon hosts of His children who have never bowed the knee to Baal; He knows where to find thousands who have never defiled themselves; He could call the roll of legions who are happy and free, because the truth hath made them so.

The Gospel of Christ is the good news of peace. It bears the glad tidings of happiness and freedom.

Peace be with you.—Young Woman's Journal.

Faith and Prayer to Accompany Fasting.

Juvenile Instructor.

Probably at no time in the history of the church has the monthly fast day been observed more closely than it has been of late, especially since the day has been changed from the first Thursday in the month to the first Sunday. The first Sunday in every month is now observed throughout all the church, at home and abroad, with great punctuality. It is of course likely that many members do not observe the day with the strictness which is desired, but there are very few of the faithful Latter-day Saints who are guilty of neglect in this respect. From the evening meal of Saturday to the evening meal of Sunday every scrupulous Saint denies himself all food and beverages. Indeed, some people of sensitive consciences have addressed us inquiries asking whether it was not breaking the fast to partake of the Sacrament. We think such a view is rather too technical. If the day is strictly observed as a fast day in other respects, certainly no harm nor wrong is done in partaking of the emblems of the Lord's body and blood in the course of the day.

In fasting on these occasions, or any occasion observed as a fast day, there should be in the minds of those who fast some object to be sought after and gained by fasting and prayer. Every human being has some wants, some desires near to the heart, which the Lord alone can grant. It is well at such times, therefore, to bear these desires in mind, and to offer prayer to the Lord for them to be grant ed. These desires should be accompanied by all the faith possible to be exercised by the humble petitioner before the Lord.

Innumerable instances might be cited to show how effective fasting and prayer have been in obtaining righteous desires. The Elders who go out, without purse and scrip, carrying the gospel, obtain an experience full of illustrations of the power and efficacy of prayer in securing for them that which their hearts desire. Indeed, Elders of great faith have frequently found themselves relieved from the necessity of asking for aid from those with whom they were brought in contact, because through the exercise of their faith before the Lord, He has put it into the hearts of men to supply their wants without waiting for human request or suggestion. Where Elders have faith enough to accomplish this, it is surely a more pleasant way of obtaining relief or that which is necessary to aid them in their missionary labors than to be compelled to ask for such aid.

At the present time there is a storm of falsehood, slander and misrepresentation raging against the Latter-day Saints. Satan and his emissaries are holding high carnival and flooding the country with every kind of story that is likely to arouse wrath and indignation against the Saints of God. The most unscrupulous methods are resorted to; the most atrocious lies are fabricated, and the bitterest malice is manifested. We have these storms quite frequently. It would disturb us very much if there were any long-continued peace—if the Latter-day Saints enjoyed the favor of the world to any extent or for any length of time. Every one of experience in the church is therefore reminded in times of peace of the probability of another storm being aroused against the Saints in the near future. It is noticeable, too, that each succeeding storm is heavier and more widespread than all that have preceded it. It is a remarkable fact that as the church grows in years, in experience and in strength, these periodical visitations of wrath become more violent, more widespread, and more alarming in their character. If the Saints had had in their earlier days such trials of their faith through the threats and manifestations of hatred on the part of their enemies, it is doubtful whether many would not have faltered and become frightened at the outlook. But year after year, as one trial has followed another, the faithful Saints have been prepared for the worst that could happen. Each test has strengthened them the better to endure the next one. And they have finally learned to keep down all agitation and disturbance of mind at the malignant threats and the wicked plots of their enemies.

This is the case at the present time. The wrath of the wicked will be turned aside; the Lord will cause it to praise him, and to bring glory to His name, salvation to His people, and an increase of faith and confidence to all who trust Him. Yet we suggest that on our regular fast days the Saints should supplicate the Lord in their prayers to look down with mercy and tender compassion upon His people and to destroy the wicked plots of the adversaries of truth. He is our Great Deliverer. We must rely on Him and Him alone. There is no earthly power that could have saved or that can save the Latter-day Saints from the destruction that their enemies would like to wreak upon them. They must therefore look to the Lord. He will hear the prayers of His people. He has done so in the past. He will continue to do so, and He will work out their salvation to their abundant satisfaction.

"Ye Shall Know Them By Their Fruits."

Wearied by a long journey, a traveler stopped by the road side to rest. On the opposite side his keen eye rested upon something of interest. Hurriedly arising, this way-faring man went to the spot which had caused him so much surprise. "Strange things will never cease," he muttered, "a grape vine, to be sure, but why so many different kinds of fruits clinging to it? There is the apple, the plum, peach, cherries, figs," and so on he enumerated them upon his fingers as he discovered a different kind of fruit. "How enticing they all look! What a treat awaits me." With boyish glee he put forth his hand and plucked an apple. A look of disgust took the place of joy. "Not good," he exclaimed as he thrust it to the ground. Every kind of fruit did he gather with but the same result. About to turn away he noticed a bunch of grapes before unseen, clinging close to the vine. "Ah! real fruit is yet my reward. How delicious." Holding them at arm's length he stood in rapt admiriation. Many were his thoughts. Truly the other fruits were beautiful to the eye, but the only real child of the vine were the grapes. While carried away in deep thought the lonely traveler was greeted with a strange voice: "Hallo! must be traveling?" "Yes," was the reply. "I am journeying in search of a treasure; not a worldly gain, but treasures in Heaven—the kingdom of God as our Lord commanded all to first seek." "I cannot see," said the newcomer, "your reason for making hard to travel a road I deem easy; note the teachings of our Redeemer, for plainly he said 'I am the vine and ye are the branches.' Does not that mean that through Christ we receive all nourishment? Did he not mean that all churches are His, and it matters not which one a person belongs to?" "Yes," responded the truth seeker, "the Saviour did say I am the vine and ye are the branches. James also asks if the fig tree can bear olive berries? Either a vine figs? Your idea of salvation reminds me of that vine. I noticed such a variety of seemingly good fruit, but do you know that but one kind received nourishment from that vine? The grape only being real. God's creation, while the others were imitations, pleasing to the eye, perhaps, but not to the taste, because they were modeled with man's hands." "Today I see before me what people claim as God's churches, which they delight to call the branches. Like the fruit, they have no connection with the vine. Their imitations neither bring blessings nor salvation promised true believers. Like the reproduction of the amateur artist, who copies the master production, when placed beside the original show many imperfections, not being guided by the divine hand of the master, modeled by men instead of God, they present a mass of confusion; having a form of Godliness, but denying the power thereof. Doubt walks upon the path which certainty should travel. Many, instead of having the spirit to guide them, trust in vain imaginations of their own wisdom. I must be on my journey and search for the pearl of greatest price. The little stone cut out of the mountain without hands. The true church and Kingdom of God, having such officers to bring all mankind to perfection and enjoying the blessings promised to those who will obey."

"So on life's path he sped his way,
To search for truth, and not delay,
For riches, Eternal, who will but seek?
This earth is promised to the meek."

THE DEAD.

Brother William L. Kitchen departed from this life on Monday morning, March 19, 1900. He was baptized Jan, 19, 1898, by Elder H. B. Crouch. He had been a faithful Latter Day Saint, though he was looked upon with scorn by some who had been his friends before he became a "Mormon," nevertheless, he had many friends, a wife, who is also a member of the "church," and two chuldren, who deeply mourn, because of his death..

He had not been confined to his bed but had been complaining for several weeks, and went to bed as usual on Sunday night. His wife awoke about 3 o'clock in the morning and found he was not breathing as usual, and she tried to wake him, but he was dead. His spirit seemed to have left him without bringing forth a struggle, leaving him while in the sweetest slumber. He remained faithful to the end. Was born July 28, 1832, and lived at Brierhook, Buckingham county, Virginia.

THE SAINT'S INVOCATION.

BY ELIZA R. SNOW.

Roll on thy work, Eternal God,
And speed the glorious time
When thy pure Gospel, spread abroad,
Will gladden every clime.

When burnish'd error will return
To chaos, whence it came;
When truth, the lamp of life, will burn,
With clear, Celestial flame.

When knowledge, flowing from on high,
Will o'er the earth be spread,
Deep-mantling as the waves that lie
Upon the ocean's bed.

O, give the happy period birth,
When strife and war shall cease;
When all the nations of the earth
Will learn the arts of peace.

When foul iniquity will hide
In shame its hateful head,
And wicked men no more in pride
Upon the righteous tread.

When all the people will be wise,
And all their dealings just;
When lying tongues and envious eyes
Will moulder in the dust.

When Zion will be plac'd on high
In bold security;
When all the watchmen, eye to eye,
Upon her walls shall see.

When love to God and neighbor, will Pervade each human breast;
And in the light of Zion's hill
The nations all be blest.

When Zion's lofty towers will rise
Above all earthly height;
And, mingling with the joyful skies,
Eclipse yon orbs of light.

Propel thy glorious kingdom forth,
Extend its light abroad;
Perform thy purpose on the earth,
Thou great, Eternal God.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Elder G. M. Porter.

Our beloved brother—Elder G. M. Porter—was born at Porterville, Morgan county, Utah, March 17, 1871. His parents were numbered among those who faced the stern realities of pioneer life in the vales of the far west, being content to earn their bread by prudent thrift and hardy toil. When Brother Porter was only two years of age, his angel mother died, and his father, being in the lowly walks of life, was not able to furnish him with more than a common school education.

At the age of 21 we find the subject of our sketch located in a new valley, endeavoring to make him a home, and grow up with the country. Before leaving the home of his father, he had taken as a companion one of the fair beauties of Zion, being married Oct. 25th, 1893. Three lovely children came to grace their home and comfort their hearts—making home the sweetest spot on earth, and the hearth-side near and dear.

After laboring on the farm and maintaining the wants of his family our brother received notification that the Lord desired him to perform a mission. This was in December of 1898, and in the following month—January, 1899—he was set apart for a mission to the Southern States. At Chattanooga he was assigned to labor in the Georgia Conference—and for the first two months was engaged as a canvassing Elder. When Conference was held in Atlanta, March 26th, 1899, Elder Porter was appointed to labor in company with Smith D. Rogers, in the interest of Sunday school work. It was while engaged in this line of missionary work that he and his companion were subjected to the ill-treatment of the Jasper county mob—while the good and noble sister who strove to guard and protect them was made a target for the bloodthirsty bullets of these fiendish outlaws.

ELDER G. M. PORTER,
President of the Mississippi Conference.

At the late Georgia Conference, held in Macon Jan. 27th and 28th, Elder Porter was called to succeed President Osmer D. Flake, and take charge of the Mississippi Conference. With such a man as Elder Porter at the head, we feel assured that the work in Mississippi will not be neglected, but that he, like his noble predecessors, will perform a work that will be for the glory of God, the welfare of the Mission, and an honor to himself.

History of the Southern States Mission.

August, 1895.

This month, true to itself, opened up extremely warm and dry. The heat overcame, for short periods, some of the Elders, but caused no fatalities. President Kimball met with the Elders in their respective Conferences as follows: West Virginia, held at Vanceburg, Ky., on the 1st and 2nd; East Tennessee, held at Notla, N. C., on the 8th and 9th; North Alabama, held at Russellville, Ala., on the 15th and 16th, and Mississippi and Louisiana, held together at China Grove, Miss., on the 29th and 30th. These gatherings did much good to Saints, Elders and friends. About this time many cities and towns were being entered, which is termed "capturing," and the people therein given a chance to hear the true plan of salvation as preached and practiced by the Latter-day Saints. Elders who entered these places succeeded remarkably well in making friends among the influential citizens, and did much good. During the conference at Vanceburg, Ky., the Elders were treated royally. An opera house was furnished them in which to hold meetings; a hotel in which to entertain their President, while plenty of friends were on hand, anxious to assist in rendering the occasion an enjoyable one. The people of the South are known throughout this broad land as being hospitable; that when entertaining friends nothing is too good for their guest of honor. Many, many honest-hearted people of the South have embraced the Gospel of Jesus Christ as taught by the so-called "Mormons," and thousands have been made to rejoice in its teachings.

Elder Rydalch, President of the West Virginia Conference, in behalf of his Elders, presented President Kimball with a beautiful gold-headed cane. This was followed by the Elders presenting a similar token of respect to their Conference leader.

During this month strenuous efforts were being made to establish a Mission paper, a medium through which the Elders and Saints could be counseled and kept thoroughly alive to their duties as children of God. Then, again, it would be a means of defense against many false and cowardly attacks made upon the pure Gospel. Through August much good was done, and as the reports came in, a marked improvement over those of the year previous was noticeable. Following is the report for the four months ending August 31st, 1896: Miles walked, 156,200; families visited, 64,654; families revisited, 27,055; rejected testimonies, 4,500; refused entertainment, 5,095; tracts distributed, 88,424; books sold, 1,095; books given away, 2,235; books loaned, 1,809; meetings held, 6,477; Gospel conversations, 39,440; children blessed, 277; baptisms, 561.

September, 1896.

On the 5th and 6th insts. President Kimball met with the Texas Elders in conference capacity at Lockhart, Caldwell county, Texas. These Elders were found to be in good condition spiritually and physically. They were succeeding nicely, considering the many obstacles they had to fight against; showing they were very "gritty." Several Sunday schools were organized, thus enabling many young people to learn of Gospel truth, tending to make them servants in very deed. The reports show plainly that many are willing to be baptized for the remission of sins and forsake worldly things to enjoy heavenly blessings. Sixteen Elders arrived during the month to swell the ranks and wage war against Satan and his aids.

October, 1896.

The month was pleasant throughout and afforded the Elders opportunities for work. Their reports show that their labors were not in vain. To the clear and peaceful sailing the Elders had enjoyed during the month an exception is noted in the treatment of Elders O. H. Shumway and N. Cottam. As they were standing near a school house about three miles east of Lancaster, Lancaster county, S. C., preparatory to holding a meeting, they were met and abused by two men and were made to leave the settlement. The men drove up in a buggy, stopped near the Elders and got out, and without any words whatever, one of them began lashing them with a buggy whip; threatening to fill them full of lead if they did not leave. The Elders saw there was no use resisting, as both men were drunk and could not be reasoned with; besides they were armed and had no more sense than to shoot. The brethren got their grips and started for the big road. Still the cowards followed, striking them with their whips. Elder Cottam received three, while Elder Shumway received five lashes. Friendless, the Elders had no one to aid them. The names of the men who did the whipping are Bart Sims, a drunkard, adulterer and murderer. His companion, Billy Belt, was of the same type and equally as bad as "Sims." The matter was laid before the Governor of South Carolina, and it is hoped that mob and brutal violence will be discontinued in that state; that the state will notice our plea for protection and vindicate her honor.

THE DARK AGES.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY presented a wonderful era of civilization and intelligence, producing many advanced thoughts, which were diffused through the medium of the newspaper. In the year 1709 appeared the first little sheet, no larger than a man's hand, but which the editor hardly knew how to fill, on account of the scarcity of news. The news was confined to very small territory those days, there being no telegraphic communication. At the present time there are more than 100,000,000 copies of newspapers published in the English language annually, many of which contain more reading matter, in a single number, than the whole New Testament. With the increase of this intelligence, the power of the people began to be felt; tyranny and despotism began to shudder, kings and potentates to quake; thrones to totter, and a general fear of a government of the people, by the people, prevailed amongst the great and mighty of the earth. In the nation of Great Britain the people virtually became the rulers.

Many enthusiastic spiritual guides started at this period what would be called today a remarkable religious revival, originating among a small knot of Oxford students, who recognized the immorality and drunkenness of the times. They revolted against such wickedness, and expressed the desire to live, enthusiastic, austere, methodical lives, from which they derive the name—Methodists. Of this band of students, three attracted especial attention by their fervor and extravagance. George Whitfield became a great orator, his voice soon resounding in the wildest and most barbarous portions of England, from the barren moors in the north to the dens of infamy in London, in the south. Whitfield's preaching was an innovation on the methods previously adopted, and such as England had never heard before. Theatrical, sensational, and sometimes calm and commonplace, he won favor by his earnestness and deep tremulous sympathy for the sins and sorrows of mankind. He was no common enthusiast, who could so eloquently plead the cause of the oppressed and downcast, and draw out the last cent from the cool and calculating Franklin; commanding admiration from the fastidious and skeptical Horace Walpole; or who could look down from an elevated rostrum on some 20,000 besmeared colliers, and see as he preached, tears, making white channels down their coal-blackened faces, drawn from the heart by his eloquence.

Charles Wesley was the singer of this movement, and was considered a wonderful man in that line, much like Mr. Sankey of recent years, but the greatest of this body of worshipers was his brother, John Wesley, an ordained minister of the Church of England, who, by his learning, energy and power of organization, gave stability to the movement. No man of that age surpassed him in self-denial and genuine goodness. John Wesley labored assiduously for many years, and was a tireless worker in the cause he advocated, dying at the advanced age of 88, in the year 1791. At the time of his death his followers numbered over 100,000, and today they are estimated to be nearly 8,000,000.

The rough and uncultured element was attracted by such preaching, which also stirred up a passionate hatred in the hearts of their opponents. Their lives were often sought, they were mobbed, ducked, stoned, and many times smothered with filth; but the enthusiasm they aroused among their followers was equally intense. These men were extravagant, fanatical and superstitious, much after the Salvation Army style of today, but fervent withal, and stand as the founders of a great many of the isms of today. It was the teachings of the Puritans, Quakers and Methodists that started the great wave of reform, which led to the establishment of Sunday schools, hospitals, insane asylums and other institutions of benevolence for which the Anglo-Saxon race is so noted.

While the moral and religious movements were in progress, things of a political and scientific nature were making equal strides. James Brindley made England a net work of canals; Watt was silently perfecting his steam inventions; William Pitt was startling the world with his oratory and statesmanship, while Capt. Cook was making his great discoveries in the South Pacific, enlarging the British Empire by the discovery and acquisition of the Australasian continent.

Napoleon, one of the most remarkable men this world has known, was born in the obscure island of Corsica, in the year 1769. He was a great warrior and statesman; coming like a meteor in the heavens, descending like a thunderbolt, and destroying like the lightning. He was a scourge to all Europe, and executed unconsciously the decrees of Jehovah. France had become very corrupt, the nation having gone over to infidelity. They called it an age of reason, when men could mock, deride, ridicule and deny a God. The temples that had been erected for the worship of God were used for bacchanalian revels. They would publicly elect some strumpet as a goddess of love and beauty, bowing down in mockery and derision; being an exact counterpart to the worship of Bacchus and Venus by the ancient Pagans. Is it any wonder that such a nation should need a man like Napoleon, that it might in a measure atone for its corruption, in rivers of blood, which flowed in the wake of this "man of destiny?"

While the above events were transpiring in Europe, the new world was blooming into a vast field, where religious freedom was cultivated, scattering its fragrance among all classes. It became the boast of many of the colonies that every man and woman could read and write, education being so general. The hereditary dynasties of the old world were so deeply engaged in war that they were unconscious of the rapid growth of this power, which was soon to inject into them its new ideas and principles. The hour of revolution was at hand, promising freedom to conscience and dominion to intelligence. From the broken fragments of European society was built up a self-governing democracy.

These noble pioneers met with much opposition from Indians, and it would appear that they subdued the wilderness, with an axe in one hand and a rifle in the other; but under the guidance of such men as Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, Hancock and other noble sires of this government—not forgetting the overruling protection of God—independence was declared July 4, 1776. The French were subdued in the north and the Dominion of Canada was surrendered into the hands of the British. It would appear as if the whole of North America was dedicated to freedom and to a high state of civilization. Unquestionably religious tolerance in America was brought about through the operations of Divine Providence. Such a medley of religious sects the world had never witnessed before; New England was the stronghold of the Puritans; in some of the southern colonies the Episcopal church was established by law; the Roman Catholics formed a majority in Maryland; Pennsylvania was a state of Quakers; Presbyterians and Baptists peopled New Jersey; Lutherans and Moravians settled up Georgia; and the Huguenots from France fled from the mother country to the forests of Carolina. In such a chaos of creeds religious persecution was almost impossible and much bigotry existed among them.

This century was peculiar for its agnostic views; such atheists and infidels as Voltaire, Mirabeau and Paine disgraced the earth at this time, sowing seeds of discord among the Christians, which bore an abundant harvest. They were remarkable men of great intellect, and through their reasonings have been the means of breaking down the faith of thousands, leaving them without hope. It was the teachings of these men that made France the corrupt and infidelic nation that she is, and it is their writings, principally, that bolster up the shallow thoughts of the infidel today. It is their iconoclastic views which defile the many thousands who reject the God of heaven, and who wallow as dark and hopeless pessimists in the filth of skepticism. These men undoubtedly saw the debasing results of the thing called Christianity, which was obnoxious to equity, justice, mercy and truth, and endeavored to breal down the system. In doing so, they failed to recognize the gift of faith in God, which is implanted naturally in man, and they vainly tried to crush that faith, destroying the hope of eternal life and making of man a miserable, faithless, hopeless pessimist. We do not object to reformers, we rather welcome them, but such spirits as those brazen-faced free thinkers, who destroy faith and leave a man devoid of hope, should not be encouraged to spread their evil thoughts. It would appear that infidelity cannot advance greater arguments against Christianity than were offered over one hundred years ago by Voltaire, Mirabeau and Paine. Such men as Ingersoll are but imitators; repeating the arguments of former infidels.

This century closes with the world still in spiritual darkness, no voice from the Heavens, no inspiration, no revelation, no vision, nothing but dark despair. Civilization was advancing, the arts and sciences were cultivated, literature was being disseminated, and still the science of theology, as advanced, taught and written by the Apostles in Gallilee, was retrograding, and did not at all resemble the system which the founder, Jesus, introduced. We find several hundred differing, jarring, discordant Protestant sects, all without authority, only that received from the abominable church, whose corruptions have been shown, and who is represented by the Revelator John, as the mother of harlots. This mother certainly has a large family; some of her daughters are getting full grown, while others again are small, then the sub-denominations, or grandchildren of this old mother, are shown in the multitude of the smaller sects of Christendom. They are all united in rejecting the God of the Bible, bowing down to the idolatrous nonentity that Athenasius erected in the fourth century. They also unite in rejecting the necessity of modern prophets, revelation and inspiration from heaven, with the gifts and graces that were so general in the primitive church. They also unite in building large pagan temples, churches and monuments to the memory of the dead prophets and apostles, and assume exactly the position that the ancient Pharisees took against living prophets and present revelation.

We can readily see that if Jesus came at this time with His exclusive system of theology, it would be unpopular and rejected by the world; and, like the ancient Jews, the bigoted, self-righteous, modern Pharisees would cry, "Crucify Him!"

THE PATHWAY OF LIFE

BY ELDER JOS. P. BISCHOFF.

When man has decided to travel the pathway to heaven he is confronted with an intricate problem as to which of the many roads is the proper and safe way to travel. The finger-board points in one certain and sure course, while a babel of voices urge the traveler in many uncertain ways.

The traveler with his wits about him, and especially if he is at all accustomed to the marts of mercenary agitators, will turn to the official guide book (Is. 8:20), and there determine which is the proper and original path, and which ones are perversions. (Gal. 1:6, 7.)

In reading in Matt. 7:13, 14 he finds a command to enter the "narrow way" by the "straight" gate, for, properly speaking, there are but two ways and two gates—the one gate is wide, with a broad way leading to destruction, while the other has a straight gate through which man enters upon the narrow way. He is also cautioned here from following the many, for they are thronging through the wide gate, hurrying along the broad way to destruction; but to enter with the few in at the straight gate and then travel the narrow way to life.

Still studying the guide book he reads in John 10:9, I am the door (gate), by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved. He that enters by any other door, or gate, is a thief and a robber. (John 10:1.) So the traveler concludes that if there are no counter orders nor side tracks mentioned in the guide book, that it is highly necessary for him to enter in at the straight door, or gate, and continue in the narrow way if he desires to reach the end—salvation.

Still reading in the Bible, or guide book, the traveler finds that Peter declared, "There is no other name (gate and pathway) under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4:12.) Reading still on he finds Paul's testimony that "There is one God, one mediator (gate and way) between God and men, the man Christ Jesus. (I Tim. 2:5). Again, in Eph. 4:5, One Lord, one faith, one baptism.

Considering the Bible, or guide book, as being official, no true and sincere pilgrim in search of salvation will enter any but the straight gate, and when he does Paul declares that on that narrow path he will find that the few travelling therein do not claim to be of this sect or that, nor of Paul or Appollos, but will find himself where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Bavarian, Scythian, bond or free, but Christ is all and in all. (Col. 3:11, Sal. 3:28), but that he will be a fellow-citizen with the Saints. (Eph. 2:19.)

Having now determined that of the many ways there is but one right and safe way to pursue, the traveler naturally would ask, "On what condition is the gate opened?" for he has read in the guide book the words of Jesus, Strive to enter in at the straight gate, (Luke 13:24), and understands that he must do something in order to enter.

He is the way, the truth and the life (John 14:6), the door or gate (John 10:9), and the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey Him. (Heb. 5:9.) So the traveller is convinced that he must render obedience in order to enter the gate or travel the narrow way.

GLEANINGS.

Arrivals.

A recent number of the Millenial Star says that the following named missionaries from Zion arrived in Liverpool per American line steamship Waesland, March 23, 1900: For the British Mission—Matthew A. Miller, Salt Lake City; John G. Wheatley, Honeyville. For the Scandinavian Mission—Carl A. Carlson, Salt Lake City, and Swen William Nelson, Fairview. For the German Mission—Henry G. Mathis, Price. For the Swiss Mission—Robert F. Meyerhoffer, Salt Lake City, and Gottlieb Komer, Midway.

Accompanying the missionaries were Elder Luke Crawshaw, of Ogden, who came over to visit relatives in England and for art study in Paris; Sister Caroline Briggs, of Salt Lake City, to meet her husband, President James Briggs, of the Manchester Conference, and Sisters Helen C. Buist and Mimmi Sjoberg, of Salt Lake City, to visit relatives and search for genealogy, the former in Scotland and the latter in Sweden.

Appointments.

Elder A. T. Hill, who, after laboring more than twenty-eight months in the German mission and having been honorably released therefrom, has been appointed to labor in the London Conference.

Elder Matthew A. Miller has been appointed to labor in the Scottish Conference, and Elder John G. Wheatley in the Nottingham Conference.

Enquirer, Provo.

The Brigham Young Academy expedition is about ready to begin its march toward the sunny south. The young men of the expedition are of splendid physique and abstemious habits. They will be able, we hope, to endure the hardships of the trip, and their labors should result in great good, for they are going to cover a rich field of antiquity. As the expedition starts from this city this week, the departure should be made one long to be remembered.

The Georgia Branch Conference, held at Fair Play, Morgan county, Ga., on the 14th and 15th insts., was a most enjoyable gathering. About twenty Elders were present and all bore an humble testimony of the Gospel truths.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

For behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things, for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant; wherefore he receiveth no reward.

Verily I say, men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness;

For the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good they shall in nowise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned. (Doc. and Cov., Sec. 58:26-29.)

Conference Presidents will please send us their Quarterly Conference reports.

ZION IS GROWING.

While the sweet children in our lovely Deseret are singing in beautiful strains, "Zion is growing," the humble servants of God in the Sunny South are witnessing the literal fulfillment of their joyful lays. Yes; Zion is growing, and her numbers increasing! During the last four weeks of the month of March there were fifty honest souls added to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints here in the Southern States Mission. These figures bespeak in forcible tones the glad tidings that Zion is growing, and give encouragement, hope, joy and comfort to all who are engaged in the service of the Lord. What greater encouragement can be given a pilgrim of peace; a messenger of life and salvation, than to know that the Holy One of Israel is blessing his feeble efforts, and that many souls are being brought to a knowledge of the will and word of God? This brings joy and gladness to the hearts of the Elders; to know that our Father is blessing our efforts with a goodly increase, and crowning our labors of love with success, gives us additional strength for the conflict with sin; faith in the promises of God; and hope for the glorious reward promised to the obedient.

What but the Spirit of God could prompt these honest souls to come forth in the midst of bitter opposition, and violent persecution, to face the scoffs and jeers of a frowning world for the sake of the Gospel, and the testimony of Jesus? These people realize and know that they will have to endure persecutions, by reason of embracing that form of doctrine which the world erroneously calls "Mormonism," for persecution is the heritage of the righteous, and a legacy attending the faithful in this mortal life. Still, notwithstanding these facts, they are willing to bear the mockings, scourgings, and revilings of men, to unite themselves with the much despised Saints of Latter Days. It is only a divine hope of eternal life; a blessed assurance of salvation and exaltation in the Kingdom of God's glory, that prompts and urges these people to render obedience to the everlasting Gospel.

Let us take encouragement from these good reports, which indicate the progress of God's work, and the spread of truth. We are not left alone, our God is with us by His Holy Spirit, blessing our endeavors to do good, and causing the words we utter to sink deep into the hearts of the earnest seekers for truth, and thereby producing the peaceable fruits of righteousness. Yes! Zion is growing—the work of the Lord is spreading far and wide—and the ranks of God's chosen ones are daily increasing in numbers. Moreover, she will continue to grow; her numbers will continue to be added upon, until, from every nook and corner of the earth, whether it be in the North, the South, the East, or the West, shall be heralded this joyful sound, "Zion is growing!" As Saints of the Most High God; as Elders of Israel in these last days, we can sing with vim and vigor, with a conscientious soul and a true heart, "Zion is growing." Therefore let us do all that lays in our power for the growth of Zion; the spread of truth; the increase of the faithful few—laboring with an eye single to the glory and honor of Him from whom all blessings flow.

"Behold, the way for man is narrow, and it lieth in a straight course before him, and the keeper of the gate is the Holy One of Israel; and He employeth no servant there; and there is none other way, save it be by the gate, for He cannot be deceived; for the Lord God is His name." (II. Nephi. ix.:41.) Our Lord has gone before. He has traversed this "straight course," and walked this "narrow way." He has marked the path which man should tread, and defined the way which all should pursue. "Follow thou me," is His holy commandment, and "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." The treasures which we "lay up in heaven," by reason of our keeping in His steps, will return, when time shall be no more, to bless and happify our lives throughout the countless ages of eternity. While laboring in the cause of Truth; while walking in a line of duty; we are working for a certain and a sure Paymaster—even Jesus Christ our Lord. We shall all receive the wages we merit, "every man according to works," thus it behooves us to labor while it is today, for the night cometh, when no man can work. Continue in the Truth, that the Holy One of Israel may greet you with the welcome, joyful plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful in a few things, I will make thee ruler over many. Enter thou the joy of my rest."

Let the mountains shout for joy, and all ye valleys cry aloud; and all ye seas and dry lands tell the wonders of your eternal King. And ye rivers, and brooks, and rills flow down with gladness. Let the woods, and all the trees of the field praise the Lord; and ye solid rocks weep for joy. And let the sun, moon, and the morning stars sing together, and let all the sons of God shout for joy. And let the eternal creations declare His name forever and ever. And again I say, how glorious is the voice we hear from heaven, proclaiming in our ears, glory, and salvation, and honor, and immortality, and eternal life; kingdoms, principalities, and powers. Behold! the great day of the Lord is at hand, and who can abide the day of His coming, and who can stand when He appeareth; for He is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap; and He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, and He shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness.

To The Star.

For some time I have been impressed to write a few lines to bear my testimony as a Latter-day Saint. It is four years since I first saw the Mormon Elders and heard them preach. The more I listened to them, the stronger became my conviction that they were true servants of God. They were perfect gentlemen, and often did I wonder why people would mistreat them. I had always been taught by my good father and mother to treat others as I would have them treat me. I often prayed to my Heavenly Father for wisdom and knowledge, that I might understand my duty. I thought that every man who claimed to be a minister had a perfect right to baptize, etc. I searched the Scriptures much, and when I understood that the Latter-day Saints only had authority I was then willing to be baptized and have the hands laid upon me for the reception of the Holy Ghost. Since I was baptized, on June 13th, 1897, my three daughters have also taken upon themselves the name of Christ. May we all prove faithful, that we may return back to our Heavenly Father and hear it said: "Well done, children, enter into the joy of thy Lord." We have a testimony of the Gospel, and may God bless all who are striving to do His will.

Your sister in the cause of truth,

SARAH E. BROWN.

Beaver Dam, S. C.

Dear Editor.

Allow me space in your paper for a few words I desire to say concerning the Mormon Elders. I have known the Mormons for three years and can say they are a God-fearing people. When the first Elder came to our home I formed a good opinion of them. I was told by many of my neighbors not to take them in, but I used my own judgment. I have read their books and compared them with the Bible and found them to be true teachings. I prayed God to show me what was right, and the more I read the more did the Lord help me to understand. I rejoice to say to the world, may God bless the day that the Elders first came to our door. If everyone could but know the truth as I do, life would indeed be a pleasure to them. May God bless all who are striving after truth and righteousness.

Your true friend,

ALICE B. HERRON.

What a Drudge Became.

John Campbell began life as a drudge in a printing office. When he died he was worth a million dollars, and had been Chancellor of England. He was so long, ungainly and awkward that an ordinary observer would have said, "That boy's place is to run errands, sweep floors and do general drudgery." But his employer noticed that John, though dull and slow, was prompt and painstaking. When told to do anything, he went at it promptly and kept at it until the job was done. The employer encouraged the dull, slow, but industrious drudge and threw odd jobs in his way, by which he earned a little money. The boy had vigorous health and a strong body. They, with his painstaking habit, were his sole capital. But they were sufficient. He worked them thoroughly and rose, step by step, until the printing office drudge sat on the woolsack.

"LETTERS OF LOVE."

A Letter Written to an Elder Laboring in the Missionary Field, by His Sister.

My Dear Brother:—Your welcome letter, also a copy of The Southern Star, were received and contents perused with pleasure. I am so glad you keep well, and although you may meet with difficulties and may occasionally have a door slammed in your face, perchance go a little hungry, yet, my dear brother, your testimony will be strengthened and that is what you must build upon. Testimony is the key that unlocks the door to greater achievements. It is that which will lead you to paths of greater enlightenment and will make the burden light to carry. Testimony will enable you to say:

"Each back is fitted for its load,
Which we may have to wear;
The weak must take the lesser,
The strong the greater share."

While you are in the field, and as persecutions and hardships increase, don't you know, dear brother, that we will pray the harder for you; our hearts will, if possible, be nearer to you than ever? Much is before you, because you represent so many; much awaits you if you are faithful. There is no happiness like that which comes from having done one's duty. No light so bright as the inward light which comes from the Holy Spirit, and when such a light is enjoyed, like God's sunshine, it radiates every nook and corner of the soul; warming and nourishing it, causing it to grow and expand, to send forth fruits of good acts, good thoughts and noble deeds. I often wish I could go on a mission, not because of the good I could do, but because of the good it would do me—perhaps a selfish desire, but naturally I crave spiritual light. I love religion and the peaceful influence of the Holy Spirit, yet I am weak and often wound and drown my good intentions; wound the Holy Spirit. If we lose the association of God's Spirit we are bereft, we lose all. None of us have a right to get discouraged, it is almost sinful to give way to it, and if we do so we cannot perform our duty as children of God. In the words of Longfellow, we should say:

"Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate,
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

In closing, dear brother, it is the desire and prayer of my heart to know you are cared for and blessed by our Father in heaven. May He watch over you and guide you; may He provide you with friends and the necessaries of life, that you may not hunger, nor thirst often. May He fill you with His Spirit and lead you to paths of holiness, love and peace; and when your mission is fulfilled may He bring you back to loved ones at home, who continually ask Him to bless you.

Affectionately,

Your Sister.

A Letter From an Elder to a Saint.

Pfafftown, N. C., March 12, 1900.

Mrs. Louisa C. Madaris, Dayton, Tenn.:

Dear Sister:—Your favor of March 6 reached me several days ago, but until the present I have been unable to answer. I was indeed pleased to hear yourself and husband had recovered from your illness, and were now, not only enjoying fair health, but that you were fairly contented; your great desire is to live so as to merit the smiles and approbation of our Heavenly Father. To a great extent life is just what we make it, or in other words, we are the framers of our own destinies. If we observe the laws of nature, keep our bodies pure, our system in good order, we generally have fair health, while if we neglect these essentials, we pay the penalty by suffering the pain flesh is heir to. Again, if we love God and our fellow man, do as our Father in Heaven has required us to do, we are contented and happy; while, on the other hand, a neglect on our part to follow these eternal requirements brings us remorse of conscience, mental pain and anguish. Oh, if the human family could and would obey those two commands, what joy, what peace, what satisfaction would be theirs; what a state of perfection might be reached, what a heaven on earth! This is the ultimate destiny of mankind, what feelings of rapture, of suppressed joy fills our heart, our mind, when we contemplate the new approach of this thrice blessed day. We who have put on the armor of righteousness are engaged in the labor that will eventually bring about this much coveted condition of affairs. Therefore you as well as all Saints and honest-hearted individuals, have a great responsibility upon your shoulders; you are expected to instill these truths into the minds of both young and old, and by a godly life set them examples of patience, forbearance and brotherly love. Such will have an influence for good, causing them to desire to emulate your example, and as a consequence you will become Saviors upon "Mount Zion." Therefore, let us return good for evil; when they revile us or slander us, let us not slander them in return, but let us show them we really love them and it may be that they will become ashamed, desist and perchance repent and beg our pardon.

I am pleased that you are determined to keep up the Sabbath school work, as I am sure good will result from the same. You should not become discouraged if you only have a few scholars, do your duty toward them, and if they from your instructions become honorable and useful members of society, you have done a great work. Emulate the example of Noah, who for one hundred and twenty years ceased not to warn the hardened antediluvians, although he could see nothing accomplished by the same. I ordered a small birthday present sent you from the office and hope it reached you safely, that you will accept of this token of my esteem. I hardly think I will have the chance of seeing you before I return home; if not, however, rest assured of this fact, that you and all the dear friends of Oak Hill and vicinity occupy a warm spot in my heart and will always be fondly remembered. Some day I hope to meet you in the Vales of Utah, and there we can spend many a pleasant evening telling of the pleasant as well as unpleasant features of life in the Sunny South. Remember me kindly to all, friend or foe, tell them I love them and desire their welfare. My earnest prayers to God the Father are that they may ere long see that the message of salvation that has been presented to them is of the utmost importance—that they will obey the Gospel, thereby securing the salvation of their souls. May heaven's choicest blessings be yours is the wish of your brother and friend,

JOHN PETERSON.

A Father's letter to his son laboring in the mission field:

My Dear Son.

This morning I came to the office early, that I might answer your several letters received since I last wrote to you. All the letters we have had from you have been received with much joy, and given us all good cheer. I have very much enjoyed the spirit of your letters, and am more than proud of the reports I have heard of you. May the God of Israel bless you with a continuation of your present humble spirit, and the energy you now seem to manifest. If He will do so an honorable mission for you is already assured. I inclose to you herewith your two blessings, and I want you to read them often and drink in the spirit they breathe; and keep always before you and forever in your mind the promises made in them. But never forget that the gifts and blessings promised are predicted entirely upon your own faithfulness. You can realize them all, or you can forfeit every one of them. I pray for you constantly, that you may live up to every privilege you have, and realize every gift, power and blessing named, and others that are in store for you as a servant of God. You have the most devoted faith and earnest prayers of all at home, and we feel that you are going to do your full duty to the Lord, to yourself and to us. The folks are all well and send unbounded love to you. We were pleased to learn you had met some of the Elders whom we know, and we wish to be remembered to them. Your report of your kind treatment by the good people of the south gives us all much satisfaction, and we know you will so conduct yourself as to merit a continuation of the same. Now, my son, write me often, for I am always anxious about you and think of you a thousand times a day; always with pleasure, for I have the fullest confidence in your manhood, your honor and your integrity. You know I would, with pleasure, bring you home a corpse, rather than have you perform one single act that would mar your honor, and besmirch your good name. But I have no uneasiness about that, for I have the utmost confidence in you. God bless and prosper you, my dear son, and preserve you in every way, is the constant prayer of Your Devoted Father.

"Thy Will be Done"

O. F. WHITNEY.

Words that should be written in letters of fire on the mind of every son and daughter of God. A motto that should be engraven on every heart, a motive that should guide and govern every impulse, a spirit that should inspire every prayer wafted on wings of faith through the open portals of eternity.

The fiat of the Gods in the councils of the beginning, the chorus of stars in the glad morning of creation; the prayer of the suffering Savior at life's weary noon: the song of Saints on earth, the anthem of the angels in heaven; it yet shall be the closing hymn, the benediction over the burial of human history, the solemn epitaph inscribed on the tombstone of Time.

"Thy will be done!" A river of power and of purity, flowing from the throne of God, making heavenly melody as it surges along the shores of life, bearing like bubbles on its breast the mightiest of human aims and achievements, it glides down the channel of the ages, glittering in the sunbeams of eternal truth, and rolling the music of its bright waves into the boundless ocean of the Evermore.

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths; in feelings, not in figures on a dial. We should count time by heart throbs. He most lives, who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.—Philip James Bailey.

ORDER.

It is a noticeable fact in all denominations of worship that the members of each church recognize their preacher as the proper one to officiate in all rites and ordinances of their church. If the Lord's supper be spread, the minister must officiate in the blessing or appoint a substitute; no individual member would think of stepping ahead of his preacher without an appointment. If a baptism or a confirmation be performed, it must be done by a minister—for none except him has this authority. In brief, the people recognize in their preachers the principle of authority, and they see clearly the essentiality and the absolute necessity of it in all church matters, in order to preserve any degree of unity and peace in their religious organizations.

The honest in heart, the humble and the prayerful, among modern Christians, find consolation and comfort in attending church. The story they hear of Jesus is to their yearning spirits a soothing balm, which heals the wounds of trial and sorrow and gives hopes for the day. The sacred hymns they sing fall upon their ears as the music of angels, which inspires their souls to thoughts and deeds of righteousness by which they hope to gain the earthly blessings of God and in eternity a crown of celestial glory.

Week after week these earnest devotees bend the knee of submission to the authority of their pastor—he has baptized or admitted them into the "fold," as is his custom, and perhaps, too, their children have been initiated into the church by the officiation of the minister. All confidence, all trust, and all faith is centered in their pastor—his profession is that of a servant of God, and no question is raised as to the divinity of his calling or the genuineness of his authority.

Dear Christian friend, 'tis seemingly cruel to induce you to call in question the authority and the divine calling of your minister, but if you truly desire to be what you profess—a humble, obedient follower of our lowly Master—truth cannot dawn too early upon your mind.

Let us reason together for a moment. Will the fact of your possessing a history of the United States install you the President of our Republic? In short, will that history elect and authorize you to fill even the humblest office in this government?

You answer "No."

Well, why not? The history contains a truthful record of every official commission granted to every officer in the government. Why could you not apply any one of these commissions to yourself and become a postmaster, a governor, a foreign minister, an admiral, or even President of the Union?

"Ah," you say, "such a thing would be foolish, and only insanity would inspire such ideas of disorder; and, again, if such a state of affairs as that existed everyone who purchased a history of our Nation would be entitled to an official position, which he could himself choose, and in consequence we would all be officers, exercising our authority to the confusion and danger of our fellowmen. Instead of living in peace we would be living in perpetual war."

Exactly. You understand that any official appointment in our government must come through the channel of legitimate authority, and that simply a record of another's commission cannot delegate some one else to act under that appointment, and that any attempt to thus officiate would place the usurper liable to imprisonment.

In view of these facts, how can you contend that your minister is called of God and endowed with authority simply because he possesses a record of the divine commissions given to the Apostles 1,900 years ago? Your pastor says God doesn't reveal anything to man today, and that the Bible contains all that we need for our exaltation. "From the Bible," he says, "comes the law of God, and from the same book comes my authority to preach and administer the principles of the Gospel."

Why doesn't your pastor assume the leadership of Israel and become a latter-day Moses? Why doesn't he become a Noah and build an ark?

Why doesn't your pastor go into Jerusalem and prepare an upper room for the Savior's Passover? Why doesn't he become a Paul, obey the command he received to go to Damascus and thence travel to Corinth, Ephesus, Galatia, Thessalonica, to Macedonia and to the great city of Rome? Or why doesn't he apply to himself the voice of God to Peter, "Arise therefore and get thee down and go with them, doubting nothing, for I have sent them" (Acts 10:20)?

Why does he not apply some of these delegations and commands to himself, and become a Moses, construct an ark, make ready for the Passover, become a Paul, or follow three men to Caesarea and baptize Cornelius? All of these apply to him as much as the official appointment of those Apostles and Seventies to the ministry. The Bible gives him as much authority to build an ark as it does to preach the Gospel and officiate therein. In comparison, he is as much called to the ministry by the Bible as I am called to the Presidency of this government by the United States history. Authority gave the commissions in the Bible, but the Bible cannot give authority; else every man, yea, every babe that can lisp "go ye therefore unto all the world and preach the Gospel"—if it possess this record—has equal and unlimited authority to act in the name of Deity, called or not called, authorized or unauthorized.

You agree that the record of the official appointments and commissions of men in this government can endow no man with the United States authority, and would you depreciate the wisdom and judgment of God below that of mortal man, and assert that the record of His delegations to men nineteen centuries ago empowers men today? The records of this government may be absolutely free from error, they may be as true as the polar stars, but they have no authority. The Bible may be pure and perfect; it may be unaltered and unchanged, it may be as exact as when it fell from the lips of inspiration, yet it has no authority. All commissions, all appointments, all delegations, must come from the fountainhead of authority, either in civil or ecclesiastical government.

God's wisdom is infinite and all men appreciate the fact that "order is heaven's first law!"

Today the servants of God are preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ and ministering its ordinances to mankind, but their authority comes not from the dead record of the past, but from the living God of heaven, and for this cause do "we both labor and suffer reproach because we trust in the living God, the Savior of all men, especially those that believe." (I Timothy, 4:10.) J. S.

Hatred is ingrained anger.—Cicero.

A PROGRESSIVE AGE.

A NON-PROGRESSIVE VS. A PROGRESSIVE RELIGION.

BY BEN L. RICH.

This is an age of marked advancement. The nineteenth century is the one century of centuries in which man has more fully developed his latent resources than in any other period of one hundred or five hundred years. In the past century, more than in any other, man has shown his predominate superiority over all other kingdoms of creation. Man is progressive, and, when he is not advancing, he is retrograding. But to look circumspectively and see the wonderful works of this similitude of God, it seems difficult to believe that he would ever sink back into a non-progressive state.

Discovery has been on the alert, and has pried into the mysteries of ages; it has disclosed many startling facts for contemplation. Education has pushed itself into another sphere, and facilities for mental development are within the reach of nearly every man of ambition. Philosophy is piercing deeper and deeper into the unknowable. It has unravelled many a stubborn problem, and passed many Gibraltars, which have, heretofore, seemed barriers to past civilizations. Governmental obstacles are becoming transparent in this dawn of intelligence. The Caucasian race is not now tyrannized over by barbarous chiefs, who banquet in mad revelry—drinking from the skulls of their beheaded subjects. Man is a free being, and if he desires can enjoy freedom or prosperity, and become his own master. If he does not enjoy these rights and privileges, it is because of his own negligence, and not a lack of opportunity. In literature and language the appreciative genius of man has not been idle, neither has his inventive genius been dormant. Customs and utilities of centuries standing have been shelved, and are now looked upon as relics of the past. The winds and waters have been turned into the service of man—the lightning has been bridled, chained, and made to subserve the desires of its captor, in the instantaneous transmission of thought, as also in locomotive, lighting and heating purposes. When we see the stage coach exchanged for the steam locomotive which goes thundering at a terrible speed across the continent, through canyons and over mountains, drawing hundreds of people; when we see the old-fashioned steamboat supplanted by the iron-plated ocean plows that cut the seas and care nothing for wind or storm; we are brought face to face with the stern reality that man is a progressive being, and this a progressive age.

While such progression has marked the growth of the past century in almost every branch of thought or occupation, we find that the religion of the world, that system which should be most dear to man; which should teach him truth direct from his Creator; progressive principles able to make him perfect as his Heavenly Father is perfect, we find the world's religion not only not advanced, or keeping pace with intelligence, but deteriorated from the simplicity and power of its incipiency.

Furthermore, it has fought liberty, free thought, and progression. It will have to answer for the death of more than one poor martyr whose life ebbed away amid the smoke of the stake because he dared to assert his honest convictions. The rapid flowing stream of disbelief and infidelity is growing wider and wider as time tallies the progress of years.

Scientific men, in their zeal for the establishment of true philosophy, have looked upon the puerile system called Christendom, with her superstitious contradictions and division, and taking these conflicting factions for true Christianity, have denied religion, counting as spurious everything that savors of religion. The agnostic is not to be inculpated as much as the systems of theology—if such they can be called—which practically forced his agnosticism. It is not arrogance nor assumption, neither is it blasphemy, to say that the system which men call "Mormonism" is a progressive and advanced order of theology. Its martyred Prophet taught that, "The glory of God is intelligence," and that a man is saved no faster than he gains intelligence; he cannot be saved in ignorance, for ignorance is sin. It teaches that the path of eternal progression is before man, and his future depends upon his progression. His advancement in power and intelligence, resultant from observance and obedience of law, will constitute his heaven; while his non-progressiveness or his deterioration, resultant from inobservance and disobedience of law, will constitute his condemnation or hell. "Mormonism" accepts all truth. "If there is anything virtuous, lovely, praiseworthy, or of good report, it seeks after those things."

It teaches the doctrine of continuous revelation, of communication or instruction from a merciful, loving Father to His children as they go through the life of probation in mortality. Its teachings, when understood, are elevating and inspiring. They show that man truly is the highest creation of God, and suggest his possibilities. Its teachings make plain the words of John: "Beloved, it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but now we know that we are the sons of God, and when He shall appear we shall be like Him." Its teachings satisfy both brain and heart. "Mormonism" is loved and cherished by its supporters, derided and ridiculed throughout Christendom, because it is not of the world, and the world knoweth it not. It is no exception to the venerable rule, that from prehistoric times down to the present it has been the disposition of man, because of priestcraft, to reject God's truth. Some of the best men who have stood for Truth upon the earth have been stoned and martyred, and their cause rejected. Sometimes the reformation can be measured in righteousness by the degree of persecution it invokes. Truly did a French author say: "Many a truth has reached its earthly kingdom by way of Golgotha, jeering mobs accompanying, brandishing sticks and clubs; or has reached its goal crucified between reviling thieves."

"Mormonism" receives its persecution largely at the hands of a frightened priestcraft, fearful lest it reach a premature doom, and lose the hold with which it has wielded and swayed the past. Professed disciples of the Nazarene who forget the commandments; "thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor; thou shalt not lie," incite the unthinking multitude to take up the cry: "Away with it, crucify it!" When the cry is said they have produced their strongest argument; more effective, however, when they are executed, which is sometimes done. All are not accused of being insincere and malicious. Many a well-intended person has earnestly fought "Mormonism" and thought he was doing God's service. Many more, however, have arraigned it solely from the standpoint of hatred and jealousy. To the first class let it be said: "Beware, ye men of today, what you do; if this work be of man it will come to naught; but if it be of God, beware, lest haply, ye be found fighting against God." To the second class of persecutors, let it be said, "Mene, Mene, Tekel," is stamped upon your forehead, and your future is sealed unless you speedily repent and pray to the Great One for forgiveness.

The history of the trials, tribulations and endurance of the Latter-day Saints, is one which invokes sympathy and admiration. The history of their persecutions and oppressions at the hands of American freemen, living under a government brought into existence to administer justice to its citizens in religious and political right, the very name of which government carries with it the ring of liberty—the history of the persecutions of the Latter-day Saints, I say, is one which causes the spirit of Truth and Liberty to rise in righteous indignation. Can you blame a "Mormon" youth for consecrating the best years of his life to the vindication of his cause, when, because of which cause, his parents were mobbed, plundered, whipped, imprisoned and driven from state to state? When his own flesh and blood has been wronged, and, as a result, forced to a premature grave, is it not his holy and obligated duty to contend for Justice? The early Christians did not suffer more than the early "Mormons." The Huguenots, Puritans and Pilgrims have not suffered more. Although in this age, and under the American constitution, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has felt the weight of tyranny, and the deepest injustice. Before and after its organization, in 1830, its advocates have been subjected to physical abuse, and violent persecution. From New York it was gradually forced west until it reached the banks of the Mississippi river, leaving in its trail the mounds of hundreds of graves, the result of blood-thirsty intolerance. There, at Nauvoo, the storm of bigotry and religious fanaticism, which had thundered at the heels of the "Mormon" people from the Empire State, burst upon the Saints in all the grim horrors of hell. Amid the terrors of carnage, the prophet of God was martyred—foully and cruelly murdered in cold blood. Oh! why did men crimson their own souls with the blood of these innocent Seers! The Saints were driven by brute force into a trackless wilderness to hunt their food and neighbor with the savage.

Though the way to the heart of the Rocky mountains is marked by human skeletons, God blessed the people, and the tree of life, planted at the cost of Saints' lives, and Prophets' blood, took root, deep and wide, in the bosom of the mountains which chain together the poles of the earth, and flourished. They transformed the desert wastes into beds of flowers. In their undisturbed peace for twenty-five years they founded upon true principles, a strong and healthy commonwealth. Look at it today. No purer, stronger, or healthier people are to be found. In education, advancement, tolerance and progress, they are among the peers. A religious system, productive of such results cannot be other than the most desirable, let puerile opposition pet and whine as it may. The founders of such a system could not have been other than the most noble types of humankind.

"Mormonism" is progressive, clean and elevating. It is proved by reason, it is corroborated by science. Science does not dispose true religion—they go hand in hand. Science does not disprove the existence of Deity—it does not confute that the soul is immortal. Man, whose organism surpasses all other creations, was not made to flourish or sparkle, and then, after a few short years of existence, sink into oblivion or blackness, like the dying embers of a camp fire. Man is made to endure, and religion and science are given him for his advancement. True religion and true science never contradict, but exist together, both subservient to Him who rules on high.

The present condition of the world is a doleful example of the negligence of true religion. Science has been at work; it has established a wonderful and mighty civilization, the likeness of which has not been known before. It has contributed much to ease human pain and increase human happiness. We fairly stagger at the rapid strides of progression, when we contemplate the possibilities of steam, electricity, liquid air, and ethereal waves. There is an agency which groans with more threatening power, as the prospects of civilization deepen. It is the same power which destroyed the civilizations of Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Greece, China and Rome, and it forebodes ill to our own advancement. Let us turn from the hum of the factory, the throbbing of the engine, the glare and brilliancy of artificial stars, into the wake of this civilization, and we shall see that our progressive, earnest, active age is an age of sin and crime, where wickedness and corruption fester and disease, threatening to decay the vitals of life itself, and call down the wrath of a just God. Because of the lack of true religion, crime and sin walk arm in arm with the civilization of the nineteenth century, producing an unbalanced stability. Is it not time that an earnest and an authorized reformation be waged?

"Mormonism" has been planted to redeem the world of sin through truth, which it champions. Like the Elias of nineteen centuries ago, its mission is to prepare the way of Him whose right it is to reign; to cry, "Repent! for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

Men of Genius.

Upon examining an old biographical dictionary recently, containing five thousand distinguished characters, of all ages and nations, I found the greatest proportion were Frenchmen, next English, Scotch and German, and next Italian, Dutch and others. The reason for there being a greater number of Frenchmen is, that in France genius is more patronized, no matter in what circumstances it is found; while in England few persons of talent, if they are not rich, or well-dressed, have any chance of being known.

One-half of these five thousand were descended from poor parents, and raised themselves from the depths of poverty by their own exertions. Some trades seem to have produced more men of genius than others.

Many shoemakers have risen to distinction in literary pursuits. A number have commenced life as tailors, many as weavers, and others as gardeners and stone masons. The following are among those who have struggled with poverty, but have succeeded in benefiting the world: Aesop, Terence and Epictetus, men distinguished in ancient times, were slaves at their first outset in life. Pythagoras, a Greek philosopher, was a common porter at first. Cleanthus, another philosopher, supported himself by carrying burdens and drawing water. Prof. Heyne, of Gottingen, one of the first classical scholars of his age, was the son of a poor weaver, and for many years struggled with the most distressing poverty. Sir Richard Arkwright, the inventor of the machinery for cotton spinning, was a country barber, a dealer in hair. Miss Benges, the authoress of the "Life of Mary Queen of Scots," and other productions of merit, was so poor in early life that, for the sake of reading, she used to peruse the pages of books in the booksellers' windows, and return day after day, to see if another page had been turned over.

Sir Edmund Saunders, chief justice of the King's bench, in the reign of Charles II, was an errand boy. Simeans was apprenticed to a shoemaker.

The famous Ben Johnson worked some years as a bricklayer. Kepler spent his life in poverty. Pope Adrian VI could not, in early life, afford candles; he often read by the light of the street lamps. Claude, of Lorraine, was the apprentice of a pastry cook. Buchanan, the Scottish historian, was born of poor parents, and underwent many difficulties. William Hutton, the historian, was the son of a wool comber. Bunyan, the author of the Pilgrim's Progress, was the son of a tinker, and himself followed the profession. It is well known that Burns was a peasant, and followed the plow. Capt. Cook, the navigator, was at first a cabin boy. Daniel Defoe, the author of Robinson Crusoe, was the son of a butcher, and had to struggle with many misfortunes. James Ferguson, the astronomer and philosopher, was the son of a poor barber, and was a shepherd. Geo. Fox, the founder of the Society of Friends, or Quakers, was the son of a weaver. Gifford, the distinguished editor of the Quarterly Review, was at one time so poor that he could not buy paper, and would work algebraical questions with a blunted awl on fragments of leather.—Juvenile Instructor.

From Country to City.

The migration of young men from the farming districts to the towns and cities has reached such proportions in Great Britain that not long ago a writer seriously contemplated the possibility that England would some day consist of a number of immense cities surrounded by districts of market-gardens, while the rest of the island would be as wild and uncultivated as the wastes of Central Africa.

Without accepting this prediction quite literally, it is still nevertheless true that the movement in question is going on in this country as it is in England.

The young men of today are most of them reluctant to adopt any pursuit that involves manual labor. Their impulse is to push into the already overcrowded sedentary employments in our cities. Thousands of them do not realize their anticipations, and live meager, discontented, unpromising lives. It is a mistaken choice. The hope is that the multitude of these failures will ultimately bring about a readjustment of the popular conception of country and city business life.

Meanwhile education will be extended and specialized. It is imperative that educational methods should adjust themselves to the needs of the times. Already there is a movement to establish agricultural classes in connection with our country schools. If the movement is successful, a large number of the boys of the next generation will be taught that intelligent farming is one of the most reliable pursuits to which thought and enterprise and industry can be given.—Youth's Companion.

The Gift of Prophecy—Its Fulfillment.

On Sept. 24, 1899, while Elders R. A. Bolin and Jos. P. Emery were holding services in Wrightsville, Hanover county, N. C., the gift of tongues rested upon the latter (Elder Emery), and for some time he spoke in an angelic language. There were some fifty persons present who were not connected with the so-called "Mormon" Church, and also six members of said Church. After Elder Emery had ceased to speak, Elder Bolin arose to his feet and interpreted the remarks of his companion, at the conclusion of which he said, that if the people did not repent they would be visited by a severe storm, causing the sea to heave beyond its bounds, and bringing destruction upon the place.

In three weeks after the above mentioned meeting the winds of heaven began to stir the calm of the earth. The mist of the coming storm bedimmed the sun's searching rays, and black clouds arose over the eastern horizon. The mighty Atlantic ocean roared, sighed, and groaned, as if some master hand troubled its tranquil rest. Finally the storm broke over Wrightsville with great fierceness, causing much destruction. From one-half to three-quarters of a mile the "Shell Road" was literally covered with lumber, boards, etc. Fine houses were swept away and one beautiful building was lifted bodily from its foundation and hurled into the "Banks Channel." The sea arose five feet higher than ever before known—tearing up and demolishing railroad tracks. So we see that when a servant of the Lord filled with the Spirit of God utters a prophetic warning, a literal fulfilment thereof is sure to come to pass, for Jesus said, "Heaven and earth may pass away, but not one jot or one tittle of my word shall pass away unfulfilled."

ERROR—TRUTH—SCRIPTURE.

BY DAY-VID.

Error—"The way is dark, the path is clouded o'er,
Thou cans't not know the perfect plan of life;
'Tis only understood by men of lore,
With knowledge, wit and worldly wisdom rife."

Truth—"Attend thine ear, the Plan has been revealed;
We have the Light, the Truth, the shining way;
'Tis only to the blind it is concealed,
The righteous it will lead to brighter day."

Error—"Content thyself, thou need not suffer here—
There're many ways and either one will do—
Just join the sect you like and never fear
But what you will this life pass sweetly through."

Truth—"Nay! All that will, in Jesus, godly live,
Must suffer persecution, scorn and hate;
There's only One, who can salvation give;
One straight and narrow way to Heaven's gate."

Error—"'Tis all a mystery, we have no need.
Of prophets, seers, or revelations new;
The canon now is full; enough's received;
Just pay your preacher, he will guide you through."

Truth—"Apostles, Prophets, Blessings as of yore,
Are needed in the Church of Christ today;
To perfect Saints of God, the world wide o'er,
And keep them in the straight and narrow way."

Scripture—"My tongue shall not be mute, or soul be dumb;
I come to vindicate Truth's righteous cause,
For Error, thou art blindly in the wrong—
Thou fightest 'gainst the Father's holy laws.

And Error, vain deceiver, thou shalt fall,
While righteousness and peace shall reign, supreme;
Our blessed Savior, rule as King of all;
The Saints be sanctified; the earth redeemed."

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Elder E. L. Pomeroy.

"God give us men!
A time like this demands,
Strong minds, great hearts;
True faith, and ready hands!"
—Holland.

Good men are required in all the vocations of life—in the workshop, on the farm, in the legislative halls, the judiciary chambers, or the pulpit—they are wanted everywhere. He whose gladsome features adorns this week's Star is counted by all who know him a good man, and of the number for whom the call comes, "Wanted every hour." Born in the quiet, peaceful little town of Paris, Bear Lake county, Idaho, May 19, 1876, of goodly parents—his father, Francis M., having been forced from his home in Missouri by wicked mobocrats—the early part of our brother's life was spent on the farm, where he was instilled with those traits and characteristics which go to make up the lives of good men and good women. While he was quite young his parents moved to Arizona, for the purpose of settling in that territory, and his father assisted in constructing the Mesa City Canal. Until the age of fifteen he lived in the frontier town of Mesa, attending the district school and assisting his mother (the father having died when Elder Pomeroy was only eight years old) in the maintenance of the family.

When only sixteen years old he attended the Maricopa Stake Academy—his brief sojourn here giving him a stimulus and sharpening his desires for study in the Brigham Young Academy, which was realized in 1897. Owing to unavoidable circumstances, he was compelled to forego his aspirations for the completion of his education, and at the close of the school year he drove by team from Provo City, Utah, to Mesa City, Arizona, intending to return in the fall and continue his work at school. When he reached home he received a call to devote a portion of his time to the work of the Lord, and apply his talents in performing a mission in the Southern States. His brother, F. T. Pomeroy, had just returned from a mission in Mississippi, where he had labored for some three years for the cause of truth, and the two met in Salt Lake City—the one having performed an honorable mission in the South, and the other (E. L. Pomeroy) ready to go forth with a fixed determination of doing likewise.

A little over two years ago—April 16th, 1898—he arrived at Chattanooga, and was appointed to the Florida Conference. Here he labored with diligence and energy—baptizing many honest souls into the fold of the Good Shepherd. In February, 1900, he was called to leave the Florida Conference, and when Elder John Peterson was released Elder Pomeroy was given the affairs of the East Tennessee Conference in charge. He says: "I have had more real joy and satisfaction in these last two years than I have ever experienced before in my life."

History of the Southern States Mission.

November, 1896.

The usual tranquility of our Mission was somewhat disturbed during the month. The spirit of mobocracy which announced in hellish glee its mission among those striving to serve the Lord. No lives were lost, but great persecution was waged against the Elders. Their success in spreading the truth among mankind had assumed such gigantic proportions as to force Satan to greatly manifest his powers. About noon of the 6th inst. some 150 armed horsemen passed the school house near the Carter settlement, about seven miles west of Live Oak, Fla., headed toward Mr. Geo. Carter's, where Elder John A. West lay almost dying upon his bed, being nursed by Elders W. G. Fisher and T. F. Wasden. Learning of the mob's intention as they passed the school house, little

Mamie Carter, 12 years of age, made a short cut through the fields and woods, reaching her home, about a mile distant, some three minutes before the mob arrived; bruised, brier scratched and well nigh exhausted, she sounded the danger signal.

Elder West was very low and had just dropped off into a fainting spell (these spells had been coming on him frequently, always leaving him very weak). The excitement aroused him. The Elders at once dedicated themselves to God and cooly prepared to meet the worst—let it be life or death. The mob was met at the gate by Mrs. Carter and her brave daughter, Hattie, who sternly refused them admittance. The outlaws threatened the women, but to no purpose; in no uncertain language the two heroines said: "If you pass through this gate you shall walk over our dead bodies." At the suggestion of Elder West, the three leaders of the gang were admitted to his room. By his cool, gentle, but impressive, determined manner, Elder West succeeded in melting their hearts—they left the room blessing him, while their eyes were filled with tears.

The purposes of Satan were defeated for a short time, but soon arose to former bitterness. Mob meetings were held in different parts of the county. It was openly avowed that "Mormonism must be uprooted, cost what it may." Whisky was provided by outside parties, and became a factor in the outlawry. There appeared in the "Florida Banner," a heretofore friendly paper, the following notice:

"To the People of Suwanee County:

"All the good citizens of the county that are opposed to 'Mormonism' remaining in their midst are requested to meet at the old Wilson mill on Tuesday, the 8th of December, at 9 o'clock, for the purpose of stamping it out."

(Signed) CRACKER.

Commenting editorially upon their actions, W. L. Whitfield encouraged the mob proceedings, characterizing them as very orderly and conservative. Elder W. G. Fisher wrote Gov. Thomas E. Mitchell at Tallahassee, Fla., relating to him the proceedings in full, giving the names of thirty or forty leading mobocrats, and praying for protection. A communication of similar import was addressed to the Governor from the Chattanooga office. The gubernatorial reply came from his private secretary, D. Lang, stating in substance the disturbance was one which the local authorities must deal with according to the laws and constitution of Florida: when they had exhausted their power to quell any disturbance, and upon their report of the fact to the Governor, the state would come to their assistance, not before. As the proposition appears to us, our Elders and Saints must first be hounded down, whipped, beaten, then hung, at which juncture the state will come to our assistance, cut the ropes and hold an inquest over the dead bodies. O, what perfidy!

With a view of averting some danger, Elder West was moved by wagon about seven miles to the house of Brother Redding, near Live Oak Station. The move was made in secrecy at night, while his condition was so serious as to necessitate sending the following telegram by Elders Fisher and Wasden:

"President West is very low; we fear it is serious."

The month closed the mob agitation still active, but no fatalities to record.

THE DARK AGES.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY opened with Europe filled with strife and war; men toiled to burn each other's cities, to waste each other's fields and destroy each other's lives. Napoleon was in the zenith of his power, and nothing less than the subjection of the world would satisfy his rapacity. His turbulent spirit was not conquered until after the battle of Waterloo, 1815, when he was banished to the Isle of St. Helena, dying in the year 1821. The career of this man reeked with blood, and war, with its ravaging influence, extended from the far north to the shores of the Mediterranean; from the confines of Asia in the east, to the Atlantic in the west; in some places could be heard the shouts of victory, in others the wails of defeat.

While the above was transpiring in Europe, the new world, America, was resting in tranquility, looking from afar with serene neutrality upon the throes of war abroad. Eventually England adopted high-handed and offensive methods to obtain sailors for her navy, using the "press gang" and searching American vessels, contrary to the laws of nations. America naturally resented such proceedings, and trouble arose between the two countries. These troubles and grievances could have been easily adjusted, but America and England were too angry to be reasonable, and war was declared in the year 1812. England was so embroiled in the Napoleonic troubles at home that she could spare scarcely 3,000 men for the defense of her possessions in this country; in consequence, the British force in America was principally composed of Canadian militia and volunteers, which were sadly defeated at the battle of New Orleans. This war lasted about two and a half years, when terms of peace were satisfactorily arranged. An era of peace and industry was ushered in, without a parallel in the annals of the human family, when the forces of modern civilization began to work, and a dawn of light, hitherto unprecedented, shone upon the world.

From the time of the invention of printing to the year 1814, scarcely any improvement had been made in the press; it had been a rude machine, printing, at its best, scarcely 150 copies per hour. This was still universally in use, while now we have machines that print 25,000 copies per hour. In consequence of this, books and papers have become very cheap and are at present within the reach of all.

This spirit of invention operated upon George Stephenson, who, in the year 1814, practically demonstrated the feasibility of his locomotive. In the year 1825 he operated a locomotive, carrying passengers and traveling at the rate of twenty-nine miles per hour, which was a wonderful innovation and a marvelous disseminater of intelligence.

Robert Fulton, in the year 1807, built the "Clermont," the first practical steamboat, and started up the Hudson, greatly startling the natives, who thought the devil was at the helm, it being beyond their comprehension to see vessels operating against wind and tide; it was too miraculous to their understandings, whereas in the present days of inventions and electricity, nothing shocks or appears at all marvelous.

Such were some of the forces at work in the early part of this century; forces which were bringing the human family to a high state of civilization.

Let us now examine the religious state of the world and see if theology has kept pace with the general advancement. We must bear in mind that we are approaching the year of jubilee, 1830, the termination of the 1,260 years of darkness, which has covered the earth, discussed in the first article from the prophecies of Daniel and John the Revelator.

We still find hundreds of jarring sects, all tenacious of their own ideas and bitterly denouncing one another, howbeit, all of them, being without the least degree of authority. If we admit the claims of these sects, their creeds are only the crystalized ideas of the leading men of the age that gave them birth. For example, the Roman Catholics did not depend on revelation, nor even upon the Scriptures, but wholly upon the tradition of the Fathers. In other words, the rule of faith, in the Church of Rome, was the conflicting ideas of men—often ill-informed and superstitious—who lived during the period of darkness, until the sixteenth century. The creed of Luther is simply his own uninspired ideas. In like manner the Presbyterian faith is but the reflex of the doctrines taught by Knox. Likewise Methodism and Quakerism are but the products of zealous reformers of the past. In fact, all the isms extant, that were known in the beginning of this century and that are known to this day, are entirely behind the times, non-progressive and unfit for the consideration of advanced thought. An up-to-date religion is needed; this earnest, active, thinking period demands a religion that has life and power in it.

The cold formalism of the narrow, contracted, long-faced, hypocritical sectarian, does not fill the bill. This is attested to today by the fact that infidelity is growing, and the empty churches show that their systems are failures and are going to pieces.

In the midst of this strife and confusion in the theological world, a youth was born on the 23rd of December, 1805, in Sharon, Windsor county, Vermont, whose subsequent life has proven him to be the most remarkable personage that has graced the earth since Jesus. He was born of humble parentage, living in poverty, amid pastoral scenes, among the pioneers of the new world. When fifteen years old, he was much concerned about his soul's salvation. He was living, at this time, with his parents, in the town of Manchester, N. Y., where a religious revival was in progress. It was a joint affair; the Methodists, Presbyterians and Baptists all taking part. This boy was unable to decide which sect to join; thinking of course their systems were all of God; never suspecting for a moment that they were all wrong, devoid of inspiration and an abomination in the sight of God. The only question with him was, which sect shall I join? who has the most truth? Incidentally, coming across the passage in James, where it says, "If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him," he became impressed, having great faith in this promise. The result of this faith was that he went in secret to the recesses of a wood adjoining his father's farm, and there, in humility, on a beautiful spring morning, while all nature rejoiced, this youth importuned his Father in Heaven for light. He relates a remarkable circumstance, which in this age of scepticism and man-made religions, seems incredible. He says the Father and the Son appeared unto him, and gave him advice and instruction, telling him that the various faiths, dogmas and isms were not acceptable to God, that they drew near to Him with their mouths and with their lips honored Him, but their hearts were far from Him; furthermore, he was told to unite himself with none of them, for "they teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof."

After the hundreds of years of darkness, the heavens are opened, communication is restored, God again speaks; what a glorious circumstance. The youth relates his vision, and naturally his story is not believed; he is cast out, derided and spoken evil of, being looked upon with discredit, as a foolish visionary boy. His good sectarian friends (?) tell him the days of revelation ceased when the Apostles died, that no such things as occurred in the Bible days are possible in this age of enlightenment, and that they are done away with. His story was rejected and considered ridiculous and preposterous by all; but in the face of all his opponents he continued to affirm that he had seen a vision. In the fall of 1823 this youth, who was then in his eighteenth year, declared that while in bed, in answer to prayer, he was visited on three separate occasions in one night by an angel. The angel gave him much instruction regarding the establishment of a Gospel dispensation, which he should be the instrument in the hands of God of restoring to mankind. He also spoke of a Divine record, which was hid up in the earth, which contained the everlasting Gospel, being also a brief history of the inhabitants of the western hemisphere, prior to its invasion by Cortez and discovery by Columbus. The ground where this record laid was shown in a vision and the youth was instructed to meet this angel, each successive year, on this sacred spot, until September, 1827, when the record was given him.

The young man, who was then twenty-two years old, declares, and it has been fully attested and corroborated by eye-witnesses since, that the book consisted of golden plates, and the writings were after the order of the Egyptian hieroglyph. This book was translated into the English language and for sale in the year 1829. It is a remarkable record, and goes by the name of the "Book of Mormon." This young man was named Joseph Smith, and the angel's name was Moroni, the son of a man named Mormon, who lived on this continent some 1,500 years ago. This record had been hid by Moroni while he lived in the flesh, and he had charge and care of it, until its delivery into the hands of the boy Joseph Smith.

The youth further declares that John, the one who is called the Baptist, came and delivered upto him, by the imposition of hands, the keys of the Priesthood, which was after the order of Aaron. Subsequently the Melchisedek priesthood was restored, and every key, ordinance and law constituting the everlasting Gospel of Jesus Christ, as taught by Him in Judea. The above events were not done in a corner, but have been attested to by hundreds, yea, thousands, of honest men, who today declare the truths which this young man has left on record. These men positively know, without doubt, that the thing called "Mormonism" is of God and nothing more nor less than the Gospel of Jesus, which has been off the earth, "driven in the wilderness" for 1,260 years, and restored through the power of God and angels, in this "the dispensation of the fullness of times," in fulfillment of the words of John where he says, "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." (Rev. 14-6.)

The revelations, visions and wonders pertaining to these latter day mysteries are strictly scriptural, and fully corroborated by the Word of God—the Bible—as every honest investigator has fully proven to his satisfaction and delight. Joseph Smith, as a Prophet of God, organized the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, on the 6th of April, in the year 1830. The progress, persecution and march of the church, from that day to the present time, indelibly stamp it as a perfect organization of the Kingdom of God. It is in line with the spirit of the times, progressive, up-to-date and in accordance with ancient prophecies.

For a concise history of the above events, I would refer you to number seven of this volume, page 49, "Sketch of the Life of the Prophet Joseph Smith," by Apostle M. F. Cowley.

As this closes the "Dark Ages,' or period of 1,260 years, which fulfills the prophecies of Daniel and John the Revelator, as described in the first article of this series, it would perhaps be better to throw a little light on the subject, and show what God has wrought since the establishment of His Gospel in the year 1830, up to the present time.

(To be concluded.)

GLEANINGS.

To his many friends here in the south, Elder Charles R. Spencer, of Randolph, Rich county, Utah, sends best wishes. He closes his letter, written to us of recent date, as follows:

Though my lot is not cast (personally) among the Elders of the south, still within my mind are thoughts and fond recollections of the Elders and friends of the Southern States Mission, especially of the South Alabama Conference. May the hand and promise of God ever be with His servants, and aid them in this glorious work, that His purposes may be brought about.

Elder William T. Jack, for some time president of the Southwestern States Mission, with headquarters at St. John, Kansas, has been released to return home, and Elder James G. Duffin, of Toquerville, Utah, now laboring in Texas, has been appointed to succeed him. Elder Duffin is the senior president of the Ninth quorum of Seventy.

During the past week Elders F.W. Karren, R. R. Humpherys, Charles McNeil and Thomas S. Karren, who are laboring in the city of Jackson, Tenn., have been doing much good. They have been holding street meetings with much success. To be sure they have met opposition, and that in an un-American-like way. At the close of one of their meetings a few nights ago, eggs were showered upon them. They did not expect to have boquets thrown at them, inasmuch as they preach such an unpopular doctrine, yet eggs were unexpected. An appeal to the chief of police was of an encouraging nature, and let it be said to his credit, he promised them protection. He assured them if he could find the guilty parties, they would be punished. The leading citizens of the town feel grieved that such a thing should happen within their community. The street meetings will be continued. These four brethren have been busy as the following report will show:

Two hundred families visited, 120 families revisited, 400 tracts and dodgers distributed, 144 books sold, 24 of which were O. P. works, 14 meetings and 260 gospel conversations.

Oratory.

Senator Hoar's reference to Aguinaldo and his associates as belonging to a race that "handed down to us the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, the poetry of David, the eloquence of Isaiah, the wisdom of Solomon and the profound philosophy of Paul," would be exquisitely funny, had it not been made in the legislature of a great nation, during the discussion of a most serious question. Under the circumstances it must be characterized as a grotesque attempt at hiding a grim falsehood under a brilliant cover of oratorical flowers. Someone might with as much reason compare the Russian Laplanders to the race that gave us the Bible.

Aguinaldo is, by all accounts, a Tagalo with Spanish blood in his veins. The race that gave us the Scriptures were neither Tagals nor Malays, but Shemites. These were the leaders of civilization through many centuries, and it was during their golden age that they produced the poetry of David, the eloquence of Isaiah and the wisdom of Solomon.

A legitimate use of oratory is to impress a truth, to illustrate an argument and to rouse sentiment in favor of that which is good and noble, but to use it for the purpose of concealing the shallowness of the water and induce people to believe that there is depth where there is nothing but mud, though very frequently done, is nevertheless reprehensible. It has no effect on thinking people but to render them suspicious of being imposed upon. A public speaker should first be sure that he has the truth to present, and then do it without recourse to the tricks of the orator.—Deseret News.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

USE NOT VAIN REPETITIONS.

An exchange has the following:

"Inability to lead in prayer cannot be pleaded as an excuse for neglecting family prayer. For even a youth of twelve or fifteen years can sit down and write a prayer to use in the family circle. It may not be ornate or elegant, but it will be acceptable in the ears of the Lord.

We are at once reminded of what Christ said about vain repetitions, as contained in the writings of St. Matthew 6:7-8. "But when ye pray use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do; for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. Be not ye therefore like unto them; for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him."

There are but very few copies of the bound volume of the Star left. Those desiring to make this desirable addition to their libraries should not delay in sending in their order. Sent on receipt of $1.75.

"IT IS WRITTEN."

Having gone down into the waters of baptism in obedience to the Divine will of His Father, and in order to set the children of men an example which all should follow; the worthy Lamb of God was "led up of the spirit into the wilderness," where for "forty days and forty nights," He fasted and prayed that He might be tutored in His ministry, and receive strength to overcome the temptations of the evil one. When the tempter came to Him, and said, "If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread;" Jesus answered, "It is written, man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Again, when the evil one told Him to cast Himself down from the pinnacle of the temple, He replied, "It is written, thou shall not tempt the Lord thy God." Still, a third time did the wicked Lucifer seek to entrap the immaculate Savior and once more was the vain deceiver rebuked with, "It is written thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve." Thus we see, that in all the evil desires and requests of the adversary, he was rebuked and his purposes thwarted by a "It is written;" or in other words, the written word, the Holy Scriptures were quoted by the Redeemer to silence and overthrow the wicked designs of Satan.

Last week we received an article, headed "Mormonism in Illinois," published in the editorial columns of the South Carolina Baptist, dated March 13, 1900. This article teemed with malicious misrepresentation, and the unjust conclusions of the author displays the fact that he was seething with splenetic hate for the people he ridiculed and reviled. The same kind of argument was manifest in this attack, as that engaged in by almost all who undertake to expose "Mormonism," vile abuse, calumny, and scandal; the same material was used, wherewith to tear down as is usually employed for that purpose—false histories, common report, and "they say so," but never once, "It is written." No, the one whose brain conceived and whose pen inscribed this article, "Mormonism in Illinois," totally neglected or entirely forgot the Divine way of answering opponents, but as such we have never arrayed ourselves. We are not opposed to any man, class of men, sect or denomination, but to error, vice, wickedness and evil, wheresoever it may be found. Against these by the help of God, we wage a righteous warfare. Don't you think, dear brother, whoever you may be that composed this article under discussion, that at least you should manifest as much respect for "Mormonism" as you erroneously term it, as did your Redeemer for the evil one, i.e., with a "It is written," when you want to explode its doctrines, and annihilate its advocates. If you be a Christian, then follow in the footsteps of the Master, emulate His Divine example; otherwise you forfeit your right to the honored title of Christian, and by your actions belie the utterances and profession of your lips. You have your Guide Book—the Holy Bible; you deny latter-day revelation, and say: "The canon of scripture is full;" therefore if you are earnest in your declarations, you, of necessity, must go to the book of your instruction and confession, and from its sacred page condemn those whom you wish to oppose. The moment you depart from the lids of your Bible, and resort to other works for proof and evidence, that moment you reject the example of Jesus and discredit the Holy Book you claim to believe in. Now, dear brother, whenever you take upon yourself to join the Philistines of these last days in snapping at the heels of God's chosen vessels, the "Mormon Elders," give us a little of the "law and the testimony," for we hunger after righteousness and truth.

In conclusion we will quote a few lines which are written by inspiration of God, and are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: "That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works" (II Tim. 3:16,17). Jude says: "There shall be mockers in the last time * * * having not the spirit" (Jude 18, 19). Again, "With all thy getting get undertsanding" (Prov. 4:7); and further: "Make straight paths for your feet," (Heb. 12:13), "that we may be delivered from reasonable and wicked men; for all men have not faith" (II Thess. 3:2). These are a very few of the written words of God, therefore, let every one take heed; for when God speaks let every one give ear, and let the sons of men hasten to obey. With Shakespeare we would say: "O, while you live, tell truth, and shame the Devil," ever being able to support the stand you have taken with, "It is written."

A HEEDLESS GENERATION.

Through revelation and the teachings of God's holy writings, we are taught that the many gifts and blessings enjoyed by the ancients can be enjoyed today, by obedience to laws divine. If the Gospel be the same, the Holy Spirit the same, why not such manifestations follow true believers? One of the powers which the Spirit clothes man with is prophecy. Today, in the world, can be seen Elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, traveling two by two. They go from city to city, village to village, crying "Repent ye ere judgments shall overtake all who heed not the message of truth." If these men be of God, then they are guided in what they proclaim unto the people. "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God;" and such things as are spoken by true servants will be unto the people as binding upon them to obey. Often, while preaching, Elders predict certain things which must come to pass. They prophesy, not with their own wisdom, but as moved upon by the Spirit. But a short time ago an Elder in this Southern mission, told the people under the sound of his voice that unless the laws of heaven were obeyed, unless they repented and were willing to bow to God in humble obedience, great destruction would be visited upon them. Time journeyed on and little thought of the prediction made was maintained in the minds of the people. One day came a most unwelcome visitor, heralded by the voice of a humble Elder, but unexpected by a non-repentant people. How the winds did blow and howl, the waters bound forward and all nature seemed to be enraged. Railroad tracks, bridges, houses, and all the handiwork of puny man, were piled in a confused and intricate mass. Then fear filled the hearts of many, and "O, Lord! Lord! spare us!" must have been their thoughts. While some would attribute the great destruction to the fulfilment of prophecy, yet there are those who thought it only a natural occurrence. In the hardness of their hearts they will not repent, preferring to continue in worldly ways. "But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. For as, in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark. And knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." This righteous man preached, plead, and labored with the people of his day, six score years; praying to God to aid him in his labors. Day after day rang out his voice, yea even did his very tools, used in building the ark, sound forth a warning voice, "Repent, ye ungrateful children!" He was laughed at, and perhaps called a fanatic, suffering much abuse, yet he would not falter, he could not fail, for God had sent him on this errand of love. Many people today will not listen to the voice of God, sounded by the Elders, they will not heed the voice of the elements.

"And again, the Lord shall utter His voice out of heaven, saying, Hearken, O ye nations of the earth, and hear the words of that God who made you.

"O, ye nations of the earth, how often would I have gathered you together as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but ye would not?

"How oft have I called upon you by the mouth of my servants, and by the ministering of angels, and by mine own voice, and by the voice of thunderings, and by the voice of lightnings, and by the voice of tempests, and by the voice of earthquakes, and great hailstorms, and by the voice of famines and pestilences of every kind, and by the great sound of a trump, and by the voice of judgment, and by the voice of mercy all the day long, and by the voice of glory and honor, and the riches of eternal life, and would have saved you with an everlasting salvation, but ye would not?" How long will you scorn the service of love, the advice proffered you by mine anointed? Will you not realize that every knee shall bow and every tongue confess? Woe unto those who heed not the commandments of a wise Creator. The servants of God will continue to cry "Repentance" until the Lord shall say enough. They will continue in the labor of love until all the honest shall be gathered into the fold, yes, they will continue to sow seeds of righteousness and strive to trample out the tares of worldly wickedness.

Tuesday, the 24th inst., President Rich returned to Chattanooga, having been absent in the West for the last few weeks. He brings with him a message of love, from the Living Oracles, to the Elders, Saints and friends of the Sunny South.

Literature, medicine, law and other occupations are cramped and hindered for want of men to do the work, not for the work to do. If you wish to test the truth of this statement, hunt up a first-class editor, reporter, business manager, foreman of a machine shop, mechanic, or an artist in any branch of industry, and try to hire him. You will find him already hired. If you need idlers, shirkers, half-instructed, comfort-seeking editors, lawyers, doctors and mechanics, apply elsewhere. They are plentiful.—Mark Twain.

Henry Ward Beecher recognized that the audience was not to blame if it got sleepy during his discourse. It is reported that when he took charge of the Plymouth Church he said to his sexton: "If you see anyone asleep in the congregation, go straight to the pulpit and wake up the minister."

Southern States Mission.

Deseret News.

Elder Ben E. Rich leaves the city this evening on his return to the Southern States mission, over which he has presided for some time with signal ability and success. During his visit here the subject of the commissary department, which has been for many years a feature of that mission, has been investigated by the general authorities of the church, and being in excellent condition and necessary to the financial welfare of the mission, it has received their approval.

From the office in Chattanooga, Tenn., the elders laboring in the southern states are able to obtain supplies in the shape of clothing of all kinds, traveling equipments, books, tracts, etc., specially adapted to the respective localities where they are called to labor, and these are furnished at the lowest possible rates with a small margin of profit which is used to sustain the mission. The funds thus obtained render it possible to conduct the affairs of the mission without encroachment upon the tithing, and a considerable amount in cash has been forwarded to headquarters recently.

There has been some misapprehension in reference to this department of that mission, and it is but fair to state that while it is essential to the financial success of the mission, no elder is compelled or required by the president to obtain anything whatever from that source. The brethren are left perfectly free in this respect, to obtain such supplies as they may need from any quarter they choose. However, it seems clear from the conditions surrounding the Southern States mission, that the elders called to labor there should obtain clothing specially suited to the peculiar climate of that part to which they may be assigned, of the very extensive country embraced in the mission. In some parts warm clothing is required, in other parts it would be a positive burden and detriment. In the summer time in the warmer districts alpaca suits are the rule, and anything heavier becomes a discomfort and a source of disease. All Elders who are called on missions to the Southern States are advised to put themselves in communication with the office at Chattanooga, before they invest in supplies for their journey.

It is gratifying to learn of the success which has attended the management of the commissary department in the Southern States mission, and also the labors of the Elders throughout that wide and varied field of operations. The work is prospering there, and Elder Rich returns with the blessing of the presiding authorities, and with prospects of still further advancing the cause of truth among the people in the various conferences under his supervision. The missionaries there have performed a noble work, and the power of God has been abundantly manifested in their preservation, and in the outpouring of His spirit as a consequence of their efforts to spread the gospel. May they continue to enjoy their work and have the pleasure of seeing the fruits of their labors!

The Girl With a Face Like Her Mother's.

I saw them in the car not so very long ago—this girl and her mother.

There could be no mistake in the relationship, the likeness was too great. Seated opposite, I made mental notes of the resemblance, and yet marveled at the difference; not in complexion, but expression.

The girl's hair was light, with gleams of gold in it; in the mother's hair the gold had given place to gray.

Both had low foreheads, from which the parted, uncurled hair rolled simply back; suiting as well the pure outlines of the oval girlish face as it did the quiet look of self-forgetfulness that marked the mother's.

The girl's eyes were blue—blue like the sky; and shaded by long, dark lashes that added to their beauty; they looked out at you with keen and searching power; the mother's eyes had lost their vivid blue, their sharp directness, but from their placid depths beamed forth a ray of love for all.

The girl's eyes asked the questions of life; did you but look into the mother's, you would find the answer written there.

Such they were when I saw them in the car—mother and daughter—like and yet so unlike.

Through all the girl's being runs the joy of living; in her mind dwells the thought of her faith in herself, and her power to dare and to do; while deep in her heart, unnoticed as yet, sleeps her faith in God.

The mother's joy consists in having lived and learned life's lesson.

"Thou shalt trust the Lord thy God." Therein lay the secret of the difference in expression.

As I looked at the girl I felt so happy for her. Shall I tell you why? Life gave such promise for her; she did not realize what it all meant, but she felt no fear. Far in the future, I saw the means by which God would change that strength of purpose she started with, into knowledge of Him; others coming into her life, would take away its selfish motive; trials, through those whom she loved, would cause her to turn from herself to God for aid.

Did I question the outcome? Not one bit. For I knew by the way her mother looked at her that out of the mother's heart rose this daily prayer: "God grant that she may do Thy will, in Jesus' name."

And ever as she toils along from day to day and year to year, she'll see again that look of love, she'll hear again her mother's prayer, "God grant that she may do Thy will in Jesus' name."

And doing His will, she will truly be the girl with a face like her mother's.

Abstracts from Correspondence.

Dear Brother.

I would like to have a few lines in the Star to express my feelings in regard to the Gospel. I have been a reader of the Star over twelve months. I am thankful to my Heavenly Father that I live in this day and age, and have the true plan of salvation. Since I have been a Latter-day Saint I have enjoyed the Spirit of God to guide me in the proper way. I know and testify to the world that Joseph Smith was a true Prophet of God. I remain your sister in the Gospel,

S. A. DANIEL.

The Southern Star.

To the honest in heart it is very plain that the Elders who travel in the world, representing the Latter-day Saints, are messengers of light, love and peace. To me it is very plain that the Gospel they preach is true. I enjoy reading God's word, penned by inspiration, by those who are pleasing to our Heavenly Father. May the work ever grow and prosper. For the benefit of my sister, who is ill, I crave an interest in the faith and prayers of the Saints.

Unbelief in the Promises of the Lord.

WESTERN STANDARD, FEBRUARY 7 1857.

One of the most cheering promises given eby the Lord to His people, is, that whatsoever they ask in the name of Jesus, nothing doubting, shall be granted unto them. This promise, given by a Being of perfect truth and illimitable power, who has the will and ability to grant whatsoever is asked of Him aright, ought to fill the hearts of His people, to whom it is given, with joy unspeakable, and cheer them in the midst of all their trials and sufferings. It has this effect with those who have kept His commandments, as they soon obtain the knowledge, which John said the ancient Saints received,—that whatsoever they asked, they received of Him, because they kept His commandments. If they asked anything according to His will, He listened to and granted it. Everything connected with the history of God's dealings with man proves that the Lord always was a Being who heard and answered prayer, and granted unto His people every desire of their heart in righteousness. And, if He is an unchangeable being, the same yesterday, today and forever, we can rest assured that He will as willingly listen to the cries of those who seek Him today as He ever did. This is one of the greatest points of difference between the Latter-Day Saints and the so-called Christian world. The Latter-Day Saints believe that the Almighty's power is unrestricted, that He can and will bestow every blessing upon those that diligently seek Him today as much as He would eighteen, twenty or forty centuries ago,—that His arm is not shortened that He cannot save, neither His ear heavy that He cannot hear; but that He presideth over the affairs of the children of men and dispenseth His gifts and blessings unto them according to their faithfulness in seeking Him, as much as He ever did.

Believing that Jesus meant what He said when He told His disciples that whatsoever they should ask the Father in His name it should be granted unto them, and that He did not mean it to be confined to them alone, but intended it as a reliable promise to His disciples in every age, the Latter-Day Saints have all confidence in asking the Lord to bestow upon them the wisdom and knowledge, the gifts and power which were enjoyed by the people of the Lord in ancient days. Because they do this they are ridiculed and condemned by the Christian world.

Christendom practically assert, by their teachings and course, that they look upon the Lord as a changeable being—a being who is a respector of persons. For they assert that the gifts, power, wisdom and knowledge that were attainable to the people of the first century, and readily bestowed by the Almighty upon them, must not be sought for by the present generation, as they are not for them, and, therefore, cannot be obtained. If they did not affect to be the people of God, and made no pretensions to keep His commandments, such assertions and ideas as they at present advance would be perfectly proper; but while pretending to keep the commandments of God and to be His accepted people, they are monstrous and anti-Christian, and clearly show that Christendom does not view God as a Being the same yesterday, today and forever, and who will bestow upon His people in every age the gifts and blessings of His gospel without partiality. Instead of their teaching mankind that the Lord will bestow upon them whatsoever they ask in righteousness, they teach them that there are but few things that they can obtain—that the Lord is not so favorably inclined to this generation as He was to former ones. The consequences are, doubt, gross darkness and unbelief have increased from generation to generation, until men have arrived at the conclusion that the Lord does not concern himself about sublunary affairs, and they can do almost as they please without any fear of interference from Him. These doctrines have filled the world with apostacy, have divided mankind into numberless sects and parties, and made the earth a pandemonium. Apostate Christendom, through the press and from the pulpit, has unhesitatingly and unblushingly proclaimed that God will not reveal Himself or His will unto man in this generation. This assertion, ministers, professedly Christian, will not scruple to support with the most sophistical arguments, and they will do it, too, with the Bible in their hands, the Book which gives the lie direct to such teachings, being replete with promises and covenants, made by the Lord Himself, that He will reveal Himself and His will to those who diligently seek Him.

That we do not misrepresent the teachings of the popular ministers of the present day, when we state that these are their doctrines, every individual who is in the least acquainted with their creeds and systems must know. Should it be a cause of wonder, then, that darkness abounds, and that faith in the promises of God and His ability to fulfill them, is stifled? Let a man go to a modern Christian minister and inform him that, being in doubt in relation to the commandments he ought to obey and the church he ought to join, he had gone to the Lord believing the promises He had given in His word, and had asked Him to reveal His will unto him and the Lord had done so by a dream, by vision, by open manifestation or by any of the ways which He has of revealing Himself unto man ,in what manner, we ask, would his statement be received by such a minister? He would be horrified at the idea, and would speedily caution the seeker after truth to beware of delusion, as such manifestations were not given to man now-a-days. What! the Lord inform a man what church he must join, give him any light as to what commandments he must obey, and who possesses the authority to administer them? Impossible! The idea is outrageous! If we let this doctrine gain ground our craft is ended, for men who will take this course will all join one church and obey the ordinances taught by it, and then our numberless systems and sects will fall to the ground! Acting upon these feelings, he spares no pains to convince the inquirer that he must not look for such things at the present day; these blessings were only conferred upon the people of by-gone generations. Vaunting about the truth of the Bible, and at the same time endeavoring to persuade the people that the plain and unmistakable promises contained therein, were not given with the intention of being fulfilled to men of the present day!

To us it appears strange that men will so obstinately close their eyes to these gross inconsistencies in the teachings and practice of the ministers of modern Christianity. For what were these promises given, if they were not to be fulfilled unto men when they complied with the conditions required of them? If man cannot rely upon them, how can it be expected that he can trust to the promises of salvation if he should be obedient? The moment that the attempt is made to weaken the faith of mankind in any particular promise, if successful, it weakens their faith in all the remaining promises, and such individuals are on the high road to infidelity. When Jesus made the promise, that whatsoever His disciples asked in His name it should be given them; He intended that they should avail themselves of it. When He said that He would manifest Himself unto them that loved Him, He did not intend to deceive, or to say one thing and mean another; but He uttered the truth, upon the fulfillment of which mankind might, if necessary, rely unto death. So, also, when the Lord said through James, that if any lacked wisdom they had but to ask Him, who giveth to all men liberally without upbraiding, and it should be given him,—He designed that it should be an incentive to them to seek for wisdom from Him, with the full assurance that they would obtain it. Were men to believe in these promises, and seek with all their hearts to obtain them, there would not be the confusion there is at present in matters of religion; but mankind would know what the Lord approved and what He condemned, and be prepared to adopt or reject, as truth or error might be presented to them. This is the great characteristic of the gospel of Jesus, or as it is now called "Mormonism;" it points man to these promises, and it assures him of their full and complete fulfillment if he will take the proper course. The Latter-Day Saints have experienced their truth. They know that God heareth and answereth prayer; that He revealeth Himself and maketh known His will to those who seek Him, and that He bestows all the gifts and blessings upon His people in these days, that were enjoyed by those of former generations. Of this they boldly and publicly bear testimony. Is it not reasonable and Scriptural? Who that believes the Scriptures, can examine the position taken by the Latter-Day Saints on these points, and not be convinced that it is the only consistent and tenable position that can be assumed? Or, on the other hand, who that is not blinded by prejudice, can scrutinize the belief of Christendom on these doctrines and escape the conviction that they are directly antagonistic to the word of the Lord?

Creed Revision.

The storm raised by the withdrawal of Prof. McGiffert and Dr. Hillis from the Presbyterian denomination threatens to become a cyclone. And now the demand is heard from all quarters for a revision of the creed. Among those in favor of something new is Rev. David Gregg, of Brooklyn, who says: "The Presbyterian church needs a new and simple creed. Though I am a conservative Presbyterian, I say that some of the items of the Confession of Faith, on which the Presbyterian church stands, are dead." Another pastor says he "abhors some statements in the Confession," and believes "there are men in the church today as competent as were the men of two hundred and fifty years ago." Of course there is some opposition, and the question is raised whether truth can be revised, or whether the Presbyterian creed is not the truth? And if the creed can be revised, why cannot the Bible, too, be revised, so as to eliminate from it what some consider objectionable? At any rate the Presbyterians now have enough questions on hand to require them to leave other denominations alone.—Deseret News.

What Shall the Harvest Be?

Extracts from an article prepared for the Chattanooga Times by Rev. Marion F. Ham:

"Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?"—Matt. vii:17.

"Behold, a sower went forth to sow." Think of this: every soul that cometh into life is directly concerned with this matter of sowing and reaping. The whole of human life is contained in a succession of seedtimes and harvests, and the whole trouble with the human family seems to be its disinclination to look this fact squarely in the face. We are continually dodging the logic of this truth and striving to reap in the harvest what we did not sow in the seedtime. The human race is constantly contriving and inventing ways to reap rich harvests without sowing good seed. In fact the theology of many people seems to be constructed with this particular end in view. We wish to construct some vicarious atonement scheme which shall relieve us from the necessity of reaping the fruits of our sowing in kind. I am persuaded that all such theories, however nicely adjusted to the sinner's view, will prove inadequate and disappointing in the end.

No man can pluck the blossom of lust without receiving the wound of the thorn. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Why? Because sin is a poison and death is the consequence.

* * * *

In nature there is never the slightest deviation from this law of exact reproduction in kind. Husbandmen know when they plant seed just what kind of a harvest to expect. Man is as yet ignorant of the cause of life. He cannot create the life germ. But he knows that a fixed law governs the process of this life principle.

The rosebush always bears roses and the bramble bush always bears thorns. The sower is absolutely certain when he plants the vine and sows the wheat, that grapes will not grow on the wheat stalk nor wheat on the grape-vine. Thus he is able to predict and make ready for the harvest.

Obeying this fixed law, seedmen are able to cause plants and grains to reproduce on higher planes. By careful attention to reproduction the plant is induced to bring forth a higher order of flower and seed. This result is simply the effect of choosing the best seed from each harvest. We call it cultivation.

* * * *

Now this law of exact reproduction in kind is not confined to the physical world. It applies with equal force to the spiritual life. Every soul in its daily life is a sower going forth to sow. And with as much certainty as the husbandman, every soul can predict and make ready for the harvest.

This parable of man's moral growth was continually upon the lips of Jesus. "By their fruits ye shall know them." It was his favorite illustration of the great law of spiritual development. "Behold, a sower went forth to sow."

The man who sows bad seed will reap a bitter harvest. "Do men gather grapes of thorns—or figs of thistles?"

This is only another way of saying that like produces like. Nothing can prevent us from receiving in kind what we sow. If we sow thistles—we shall not reap figs. The law of exact reproduction in kind will give us in the end, only thistles.

Is not this a wise provision of Providence? Suppose, for instance, that when we sowed wheat, barley or oats should spring up. If we planted and nurtured a rosebush and should find the blossoms only sunflowers—how could we ever be certain of any result in our labor?

Thus in the general operation of this law we see that it is designed for man's good. When, in the toil of life and the sweat of our brows we strive to wring from the stubborn earth the sustenance that is justly ours, how blessed a thing it is that nature is true to this law. How disastrous to life and happiness would be any break in this method. Who could picture the misery and want and woe if our fields, planted and cultivated with so much care and labor, should, for only one season, blossom and bring forth only tares and worthless grains in the harvest. Some unwelcome seed which we had not sown in the seedtime.

And so the wisdom which ordained that there shall be seedtime and harvest through all time also decreed that the souls of men shall sow and reap in obedience to the same law.

"Sow a thought, reap an action. Sow an action, reap a habit. Sow a habit, reap a destiny." There is the seedtime and harvest of life contained in a single thought.

* * * *

Now most of us doubt this fact in our youth. But when we grow older and sadly wiser we discover that character is formed in just this way. Some wit defines experience as "something that is acquired after it is too late to make use of it."

We all find in the later autumn of life that there was a seedtime in the early spring of youth and we were the interested parties who did the sowing.

And somehow a great many tares seem to have been mixed with the seed wheat. Some of us attempt to lay the blame on the cloven-footed gentleman who is reported to have ruined so many fine fields of wheat—but the majority of us are ready to shoulder the responsibility for our bad harvests. We can't accuse others of slipping in while the sower slept and sowing tares in our field. Everybody is too busy sowing his own tares to bother with our seedtime.

No, friends; these bitter tares which we recognize in the sheaf are the same old "wild oats" which we flung far out with a lavish hand. The first thought was a seed and the harvest is a destiny to be reaped in some future field of action. It may be on this side of the door we call death or it may lie on the other side. But remember this—according to the kind of seed we sow in this present seedtime, so shall be the harvest in autumn; and all the prayers that human lips can utter cannot change the character of the harvest.

* * * *

Young man! What are you sowing? In the fierce passion of impetuous youth; flushed with the ecstacy of novel pleasures; buoyant with the sun of life's golden morning beaming full upon your face—I know that you do not know.

No thought of the kind of seed in your hand disturbs your dream of triumph. The wide prairies of life, with their countless blossoms and endless vistas of hope and expectation and untried fortunes stretch out before you. Fallow fields of unrealized ideals, wherein you shall walk and sow—what? I know that you do not know.

Here in the beckoning furrows of time you stand to face the sunrise of life, with hot head and surging pulse, and feet eagerly set toward the far noon; with heart beating a rhythmic measure to the strange, new song of first love; with eyes bent upon the unfamiliar faces of unselected companions; with hands outstretched to clasp the false and the true alike in one thrilling, visionary fellowship—oh, boy, what are you sowing?

Father, trembling upon the brink of the grave, and mother, crowned with a chaplet of silver, you know the meaning of this. You realize the gravity of the situation. I see you with tearful, anxious eyes and loving hands, striving to help this boy select the good seed for his sowing, and may God pity the hand that brings the tares to this seedtime.

* * * *

Seedtime and harvest there shall be always; but if I could only tell this boy that the seed he is sowing shall not fail. That there is no possibility in the spiritual life that any sowing shall come to naught.

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Sow the wind, boy, and reap the whirlwind. But just as sure as you cast your seed upon the fields of life, just that sure will it spring up and bear fruit after its kind.

Whatever kind of seed you sow, God's soil and rain and sunshine are faithful to bring that seed to its just and legitimate harvest.

* * * *

God could not make us to gather grapes from thorns without breaking a most beneficent law.

Suppose that when you and I sowed figs, we should find thistles growing upon our fig tree? Would not that be ground for just complaint?

To sow righteousness and temperance and charity and reap infamous character, devilish habits, deformed moral nature—we see how terrible would be such a break in the law of reproduction. And so I thank God that His fields of spiritual life are faithful to bring forth after its kind all that we sow therein. I thank God that His providence decreed that like should produce like. That grapes should always produce grapes and thorns bear thorns, and virtue bear virtue, and sin bear sin.

With this firm ground beneath our feet we can defy evil to overwhelm us. We can build with assurance that our labor shall not be lost. We can sow with the knowledge that our harvest shall not disappoint us.

* * * *

I will cultivate my spiritual soil and plant my pleasant borders of roses and lilies of moral acts in the absolute certainty that God's justice will return unto me the blossoms and the perfume of noble and exalted character.

To the man who sows figs there is no power that can give him thistles. To the man who sows righteousness there is no condemnation nor death. "He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption: but he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting."

It has been said that God cannot afford to damn a good man; but the evidence shows that a good man cannot be damned. There is in his very goodness that which is the element of salvation. There is only one tree in all God's universe that bears death, and that is the tree of sin. The fruit of righteousness is life. It is our business to sow the kind of seed that produces life. We need not worry about the result. The God of nature and the God of the Bible are alike pledged to bring every act unto judgment and every seed to its rightful fruitage.

Too Much Intellect.

The dangers of the higher education are not often exposed so nakedly as in the following letter from a New England mother to the teacher of her precious boy, which has lately found its way into Harper's Bazaar:

Dear Miss: Please do not push Johnnie too hard, for so much of his branes is intelleck that he ought to be held back a good deal, or he will run to intelleck entirely, an' I do not dezire it. So please hold him back so as to keep his intelleck from getting bigger than his boddy, an' injooring him for life.

EXPEDITION STARTS FOR SOUTH AMERICA.

Deseret News.

Provo, April 17.—Amid resounding cheers from students and citizens of Provo and other parts of the state, the Brigham Young Academy South American exploring expedition started on its memorable march at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

A large crowd had gathered to witness the beginning of what it is believed will prove to be one of the most important exploring expeditions of latter times. Those who saw it could not but feel a thrill of pride when the sturdy young Utahns gathered about preparatory to taking their departure. There were many a warm handshake and embrace and many a God speed benediction pronounced upon them, while tears swelled in the eyes and trickled down the cheeks of fathers, mothers, sisters and brothers and sweethearts. All seemed to realize that the undertaking was a momentous one, and that a long time must necessarily ensue before they could meet again. How long is not known, but it is thought that the expedition will cover a period of from a year and a half to two years.

At the Academy.

All of the men have been carefully chosen with reference to the their moral and physical lives and all now seem to be in the very best of health and strength as well as spirits. When they entered the academy hall this afternoon in their brown canvas uniforms they presented a very natty appearance and were given a round of applause that almost shook the historic building, the institution in whose name and under whose auspices the researches will be made.

The exercises at the academy were very impressive in their character. They were presided over by Prof. Brimhall, who made a few brief opening remarks referring eloquently to the purposes of the great undertaking. The academy choir sang several beautiful selections under the direction of Prof. Lund. The opening prayer was offered by Bishop Johnson, of one of the Mexican colonies, after which President Partridge spoke feelingly to all present. He said that the expedition was one of the most important ever sent out by the church, and he exhorted the members thereof to lead the lives of Latter-day Saints in order that they might receive the blessings that they were entitled to.

Elder David John of the Stake presidency said that the spirit of youth came over him again in looking at the young men who were about to undertake this journey, and it made him feel as though he would like to take it with them, that he, too, might be able to follow in the footprints of the great men of God who lived anciently in South America as told by the Book of Mormon.

Elder Stephen L. Chipman endorsed what had been said by the other speakers and added he was certain that the expedition would perform a splendid mission for mankind. Miss Ida Peterson then sweetly sang a solo and Col. John Q. Cannon gave some practical advice to the members of the expedition, telling them that they should obey their leaders in all things. If they did this, he was certain they would succeed in the purposes for which they were about to set out. Furthermore he was proud to know that he had a son worthy of undertaking the trip with them.

President Wooley of the Kanab Stake also offered a few words of encouragement, but said that he would meet the boys later, when they were about to cross the line into Arizona. President Woolley was followed by Hon. Geo. M. Cannon, who felt certain that the blessings of the word would attend the expedition.

Apostle Reed Smoot was the last speaker. He admonished the members of the expedition to lead pure lives and to walk in fear before the Lord and to pray unto Him for aid. If they did this he was certain that the blessings of God would accompany them. The benediction was pronounced by W. H. Dusenberry.

Flag Presentation.

A beautiful American flag, the handiwork of the Brigham Young Academy training school, was presented to the expedition and was accepted by President Cluff, who said he deeply sensed the responsibility that rested upon him and appreciated the gift and the patriotic sentiments that were back of it. The flag, he said, would be triumphantly borne wherever the party went, and that it would be successful in all of its efforts. He asked for the faith and prayers of the Latter-day Saints.

The Banquet.

A banquet then followed, during which the members of the party partook of as sumptuous a meal as trained minds and hands could provide for them. Tonight they will be given a similar reception and banquet by the good citizens of Spanish Fork.

Party's Personnel.

The entire personnel of the party is as follows: President B. Cluff, Provo; Prof. W. M. Woolfe, Provo; Gordon S. Beckstead, South Jordan; Prof. J. B. Fairbanks, Ogden; W. S. Tolton, Waren Shepherd, Beaver; H. E. Giles, Jr., Geo. Q. Cannon (son of Col. John Q. Cannon), Salt Lake; Eugene Roberts, Provo; Masher Pack, Kamas; W. M. Hughes, Spanish Fork; A. C. Expedition Starts for South America.

Salt Lake Herald.

George M. Cannon, a member of the expedition's executive committee, told of the interest taken throughout the state in this enterprise. "We can hardly realize its importance. Hundreds of students in Utah are wishing they were members of this party. Where Cortez went with the sword this party of Saints will go on a mission of peace with the olive branch."

Apostle Smoot spoke with great feeling and earnestness of this movement, saying that the work contemplated could be accomplished only through the Spirit of God. He admonished the boys to obey the word of wisdom strictly, and promised them rich blessings if they should do so. He charged the company that they are not only representatives of the academy, but of the church, and many great things would be expected of them. The Apostle closed by assuring the explorers that they would have the prayers of the people, and that if the party does its duty well the 17th of April will be one of the greatest days of the academy's history.

President Cluff, in accepting the flag, said: "It will be held in fond remembrances, and our little band will be true to the stars and stripes and the covenants we have made in the house of the Lord. It is fitting that the United States flag, the emblem of freedom, should be carried for the first time through the old land by a band of Mormons. I trust the 17th of April will prove a great day, and I hope the academy will not regret our mission."

President Partridge, in his talk, considered the expedition the most important the church has ever before sent out. One of its objects is to bring to light evidences of the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon. "This party," he said, "go not to expand the Gospel particularly, but as explorers, pioneers, and will doubtless preach the Gospel to the people if an opportunity presents itself."

Flowers were presented to President Cluff by a little child, and the touching incident moved many to tears.

Bad Spelling a Disease.

A medical authority claims that bad spelling is caused by a disease. In certain conditions of brain and nerves the patient frequently writes "ot" instead of "to." In another slightly varying form, instead of "the," the first letter is omitted, and so on in many other short words. The malady usually affects the brain only in connection with words of one syllable, but cases have occurred where longer words have been so distorted that it was difficult to get their sense. It is a question whether one would be comforted by being told that bad spelling was caused by mental disease, or whether one would prefer to have this lack of accuracy set down to ignorance or carelessness. That it is not always a proof of defective education is quite certain.

MILESTONES TO SUCCESS.

Education, the capital of mind;
Success, without it, will be hard to find.

'Tis well to let this thought the mind impress,
That Enterprise leads always toward success.

When with Enthusiasm we begin life's busy race we never fail to win.
Economy—it is a magic door,
That leads to wealth's accumulated store.

To win the good and overcome the ill,
Requires but purpose, reinforced by Will.

'Tis sad, but none the less it is a fact,
That half life's failures comes from want of Tact.

He who by Faith is led, no danger knows;
He dreads not unknown ills nor unseen foes.

'Tis Push that puts one's business in the lead,
And makes success an easy prey indeed.

Most anyone the warrior's garb may don,
But in the fight, 'tis Grit that leads one on.

Than Purity, there is no brighter gem
Set in man's heavenly diadem.

'Tis Perseverance wins the victor's crown.
And carries one to honor and renown.

Let Patience be thy guide along life's busy way,
And ever be thy helper, night and day.

Let Prudence shape thy every word and deed,
And to her admonitions aye give heed.

Promptness is always much to be desired.
The prompt man honored is, and much admired.

The man who Courtesy always extends,
Is never lacking of respectful friends.

'Tis Cheerfulness that lights the world's dark ways,
And drives away the shadows with its rays.

Contentment is a jewel of the mind,
Which brings all good things unto those who find.

By Concentration of the thoughts and powers,
The objects that we seek may be made ours.

'Tis Courage, more than strength, that wins the day,
And leads the hosts to victory in the fray.

Good Character a sure foundation is;
Let man but build on that, success is his.

A rare possession, purchased not with wealth,
Priceless beyond compare, is perfect Health.

'Tis Aspiration burns the midnight oil,
And leads one on to unremitting toil.

Decision, prompt and firm, one should possess;
Without it you will scarcely win success.

Self-culture is the trellis of the mind;
As it is trained, thus is the tree inclined.

Era.

When young Elders are sent on missions and meet with opposition, prejudice and indifference, so general in the world, they often feel more or less discouraged. They often travel days and weeks without apparently having made a single convert; are refused a night's lodging, or even a meal of victuals, and are possibly reviled and threatened with violence. Under these circumstances, they are sometimes inclined to feel that their labors are in vain. They should remember, however, that Christ met with similar difficulties and discouragements, yet he said to His disciples: "I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance. Likewise I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth;" and his apostle, James, admonishes the Saints: "Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

The labors of an Elder who diligently bears a faithful testimony, warning the people to repent, will in time yield fruit. "Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days." I call to mind an instance which proves the truth of the above saying, and which came under my own observation while laboring in the Scandinavian Mission, thirty-eight years ago.

A young Elder, weary and foot-sore, called at the humble cottage of a lowly peasant and asked for a drink of water. He met with a kind, hospitable reception from the honest man and his wife; the Elder preached the Gospel, and bore testimony to the unassuming occupants of that simple cottage; and, taking his departure, left some tracts, which he told them would more fully and clearly explain the principles of the doctrine of Christ.

Months after this, another Elder by chance called at the same peasant's home. On learning that the stranger was an Elder of the Church, the man said: "I have been praying to the Lord that He might send one of His inspired servants to our humble home, as myself and wife believe in the truth of the Gospel as set forth in some pamphlets left with us some months ago by a 'Mormon' missionary, and we wish to be baptized and become members of the Church." And so this second Elder had the pleasure of baptizing that man and his wife, both of whom proved faithful to the covenants which they then made. Thus the "bread cast upon the waters" by that foot-sore and half-discouraged, humble servant of the Lord, who first bore his testimony to those honest people, was found by his successor, and the first Elder really filled an important mission, even though he himself never baptized a single person. That he did a noble work, the following results will prove. This family, consisting of father, mother and several sons and daughters, all gathered to Zion, and have proved faithful Latter-day Saints. The father and mother enjoyed the privilege of officiating in the house of the Lord for their progenitors and relatives for several generations back; thus conferring the blessings of the Gospel upon hundreds of the children of men. At a ripe old age, this worthy father and mother died in full faith and in the hope of a glorious resurrection, surrounded by their sons and daughters and numerous grandchildren and friends, loved and respected by all.

Three of their sons and several of their grandsons have filled honorable missions to the nations of the earth, and were the means of bringing many to a knowledge of the Gospel. Thus we see that the seed sowed by that servant of the Lord who first visited and bore testimony to that family, thirty-eight years ago, in far off Denmark, has borne fruit an hundred, yea, possibly a thousand fold, in the redemption and salvation of the children of our Heavenly Father.

Another very remarkable case showing the mighty and far-reaching results of the labors of the Elders in preaching the Gospel of repentance to the nations of the earth, is the following: President George Q. Cannon, when on his first mission to the Sandwich Islands, in 1850-54, baptized as one of the first fruits of his labors on these islands, an intelligent and highly educated native Hawaiian, who was a descendant of one of the old prominent chief's families of that race of people. This prominent Hawaiian was among the few of his people ordained to the office of Elder, and he labored efficiently as a missionary, baptizing hundreds of his countrymen. He was the first of his race who came to Zion. He was here at the dedication of the Logan temple. In that holy place, Napela, this descendant of the Hawaiian chiefs, was baptized for many of his progenitors in direct line of father and son. He thus carried back the blessings of the Gospel to his kindred and people to near the time when they separated from their Nephite forefathers on the continent of South America, when they built ships and sought to sail up the northwest coast, to seek a home in the north country, and by the trade winds were drifted to and landed on those beautiful islands in the great Pacific Ocean.

Now, with the knowledge the Latter-day Saints have of the redemption and salvation for the living and the dead, it will easily be seen, in this case, that the baptizing of Napela, by President George Q. Cannon, resulted in far-reaching benefits to a large number of Hawaiian families who will secure redemption through this act and the labors of Napela. The number thus benefited is almost beyond calculation, yet all a direct result of the conversion and baptism of Napela by President Cannon.

With this understanding of the effect and vast results from the preaching of the Gospel by our Elders, what should discourage them or lead any to feel that the time and labor they spend on missions is so much of their lives spent for naught? The grand and glorious results accruing should convince our young Elders that their labors are full of encouragement. They have no cause ever to be discouraged.

GLEANINGS.

The Elders laboring in Jackson, Tenn., were again, a few nights ago, targets of an unruly gang, who threw eggs at them. The eggs fell short of their mark and did no damage whatever. The Chief of Police has offered a reward for the conviction of the guilty parties.

The State Universities of Utah and Nevada will hold an intercollegiate debate in Salt Lake City on May 25th. The home institution will be pitted against its neighbor on the affirmative side of the question, "Resolved, That territorial expansion would be a benefit to the United States."

The many Elders who have received welcome greetings, hearty handshakes, and hospitable treatment at the hands of the kind people of Oak Hill, Rhea county, Tennessee, will rejoice to know that the good people there have a thriving Sunday School, and an organized branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Brothers C. B. Madaris and N. L. Brown are the Priests in charge, the latter also being Superintendent of the Sunday School. The branch was organized by President David H. Elton and Elder C. R. Humphreys, and is known as the Oak Hill Branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. May the good work grow, the Gospel spread, and the honest in heart be gathered out from the babel of sectarian confusion.

THE DARK AGES.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

(Concluded from page 171.)

Having shown how the Gospel of Jesus Christ was introduced in this age, we will now follow up its establishment, with a few of the marvellous happenings that have come to light from a scientific standpoint. Many mighty wonders have been wrought by the power of God, since Joseph Smith declared that God had again spoken from the heavens, but before discussing these, let us take a retrospective view of the past articles written on the "Dark Ages." I have endeavored to trace the death and burial of the plain and simple doctrines of Jesus Christ, which were submerged in Paganism, and hid from humanity in the year 570 A. D. It has been shown that these happenings were in fulfillment of the prophecies contained in the Bible, as alluded to in the first article. I have also tried to depict the terrible and deplorable age of ignorance and superstition that ensued under the dominion of Papal power. The condition of the civilized world since the reformation, up to the year 1830, when the church of Jesus Christ was organized, has been shown. Also that this church was instituted by God, after the pattern of the organization in Judaea, with similar officers, laws, rites, and ordinances, with similar graces and blessings following the believers. Strange to say, this is in fulfillment and confirmatory of the prophecies of those who wrote and spoke as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost.

The Holy Bible bears me out and testifies to the truth of the system called "Mormonism." Since God has shed this radiating light among the children of men, marvellous transformations have occurred. When the primitive saints and apostles were all killed, and the priesthood was taken away, gross darkness covered the earth and the thoughts of the people were continually of a wicked and evil nature. Finally a glimmering of light came; a star shone, shed its rays and died; timorously a second and a third came, looked upon the dark world, and also died. At last a cluster came; they were the Reformers, and their radiance shone like the glimmering of the candle; the world was attracted by this light, it looked so beautiful amidst the darkness. The inhabitants of the earth, however, mistook the source of the light and each followed a particular glimmer. Several hundreds of these stars shone in the darkness, and enough radiance was given for men to become civilized. The arts and sciences advanced, and much thought was disseminated through the illuminating rays shed by this candle power. But behold! in the far west, in a land advanced and prepared for freemen, where liberty and truth is inscribed upon her charter, the land of the free, America, a glorious light shining. The brighter stars in the east, cross the ocean, and the world gazes with awe upon this light, which is typical of the moon, whose luminous irradiation spreads in every nook and corner of this fair land. The scientific intellectuality surpasses any former age, and humanity looks with wonder and surprise upon this God-given light.

Conditions and circumstances being propitious, God, who is light, desired to shed the illuminating influence that radiates from His person, among His children on the earth. Accordingly He sent a representative, a mouthpiece, a prophet, a seer; with all the intelligence of former ages, when behold! a new orb, shining like the sun, whose influence was felt in the east, whose radiating power has been felt throughout all Europe. At present its luster is shed forth from the confines of the everlasting hills, the Rocky mountains of the land of Joseph, and its illuminating rays will eventually cover the whole earth. These rays impart knowledge and intelligence in all their ramifications, and declare the glory of God to be intelligence; they speak of a time when knowledge shall cover the earth as the waters cover the mighty deep; when the lamb and the lion shall lie down together; when a day of rest and peace called the Millennium shall come and when swords shall be beaten into plow-shares and spears into pruning hooks.

God has restored the sunlight of His everlasting Gospel, with every key, rite and ordinance necessary for the full establishment of His government on the earth. What mighty changes have occurred since Joseph Smith, that illiterate, God-fearing youth, went in the humility of his soul before his maker, desiring light from the heavens, which had been as brass for hundreds of years. How little this light has been comprehended and appreciated. The majority of the world is still in darkness and idolatry. Many in the civilized parts of the world prefer the candle to the gas, and others again there are who reject the resplendent rays of electricity, whose brilliancy they cannot fathom, preferring to accept the lesser lights. He who dares to investigate, with honest intent, the brilliant splendor of the theological orb which Joseph Smith was the instrument of rolling into space, will never again desire to grovel in the twilight of sectarianism. This system, called "Mormonism," embraces all truth, from whatever source, believing that all truth comes from God.

"Yes, say what is truth? 'Tis the brightest prize
To which mortals or Gods can aspire.
Go search in the depths where it glitters lies,
Or ascend in pursuit to the loftiest skies,
'Tis an aim for the noblest desire."

Like light dispelling darkness, pleasure overcoming pain, health destroying sickness, life replacing death, so truth will shine and mount, higher and higher, overcoming and surmounting every obstacle, until it reaches the pinnacle of perfection and is crowned in the Holy of Holies, as God's eternal gem. Error, on the other hand, will sink lower and lower into the depths of hades, into the darkness of oblivion and forgetfulness.

Let individuals and nations choose whom they will serve; there are but two churches—one of God and the other of the devil; one good and one bad; one right and one wrong; but one Lord, one faith, one baptism; there are but two ways, the broad way and the narrow way. Amid the din, discord and confusion of sectarianism, with its disunion and strife, we can see the devil grinning with glee. He, the father of deceit and lies, delights in war and contention, and for this spirit of rebellion was, with one-third of the hosts of heaven, who were his followers, cast out into darkness. The spirit of this mighty and discordant Lucifer is in the earth today, and before every knee bows and every tongue confesses that Jesus is the Christ, great changes must transpire; evil must be suppressed and wickedness eliminated.

In order to prepare for the reign of peace and righteousness, God has sent His Gospel, with its redeeming features; and has also introduced other powers, for the enlightenment and advancement of the children of men.

In the year 1832 Samuel F. B. Morse conceived the idea of the electric telegraph, and in 1837 the congress of the United States granted him $30,000 to aid his great enterprise. In the year 1844 Morse sent his first message and acknowledged the hand of God in this wonderful invention, his first message containing the words: "What hath God wrought." One would think that the great climax of invention was reached, when men could transmit their thoughts over the electric wire thousands of miles instantaneously, but not so. The powers of electricity were in their infancy. Standing on the threshold of a new century, who dares to foretell the powers of this mighty force, coming from the heavens, and generated through the dynamo.

The same power of enlightenment is at work in all the arts and sciences: philosophy has worked wonders; thinkers, inventors and discoverers have been busy: the astronomer throws light on the heavens; the geologist reads the earth; an thropology, sociology and philology are born; education becomes general; archaeology unseals the mysteries of the past; the telegraph, cable, railway, telephone, phonograph, kinetoscope, X-ray and the powers of steam, with the possibilities of liquified air, revolutionize the whole earth.

Not many years ago, wooden plows prepared the soil, and sickles gathered the narvest. Now the steam engines cross our fields of grain, cutting, threshing, measuring and filling bags, covering hundreds of acres in a day. Who would have thought it possible to cross the Atlantic in six days, or print 90,000 four-page papers in an hour; or to convert boiling water into ice in midsummer; or to transmit words from New York to London in half a minute. Any man guilty of even surmising the above, 100 years ago, would likely have been burned for witchcraft. Now, we harness the waters of Niagara; revolutionize war methods; use horseless vehicles; administer anesthetics to alleviate pain; talk to and recognize each others' voices, hundreds of miles away. Jules Verne or Bellamy apparently did not overdraw their fiction when they spoke of these possibilities. The practical utilities of the lightning are still as distant in their possibilities, as was Franklin's kite in his puny hand.

"The pen is mightier than the sword." Today more steel is used in the manufacture of pens than in guns and swords. Now who will dare say that swords and implements of war will not be done away with as civilization advances and methods of peace inaugurated? Who will dare to say that God is asleep, and that we are not approaching the Millennial dawn? And who will not admit that the powers of the sects, which make up Christianity are inadequate to cope with this advanced thought? Can we not see infidelity growing and stalking through our fair land? As men reason and think upon the inconsistences offered by theologians, they cannot help but fall into the mire of skepticism. We want an up-to-date religion, and "Mormonism" fills the bill. Its leaven has been set to work; the ideas and principles it teaches conflict not with true science; its arc light will shine when all lesser lights have burned away. Today many systems of religion are adopting principles of "Mormonism;" they recognize their own weaknesses and fallacies and, like the chameleon, change their coat to suit conditions. Potter, Parkhurst and many others are changing their views. Higher criticism is doing its work, and those who expect to retain the light of their little candle dip must continue to adopt changes, or be relegated to the past.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is true, and as truth it will prevail; its principles eventually covering the whole earth. From the light of the past, present and future, cannot we detect the way? It is clear, and "the man, though a fool, need not err therein." It is lighted by the visions of heaven and made plain by the revelations of inspired men. Prophets and apostles who are gifted as seers, are sure guides, and the message to the nations is now, as anciently: "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remisison of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Acts 2: 38 and 39.

THE END.

Longevity in Mental Workers.

Prof. Manterola contributes to a Mexican scientific society a paper on longevity in connection with mental work. The author divides professions into three groups, according to their influence on longevity. In mental workers he states that the general average of life is above sixty-eight years, and the average of men of science, lawyers and historians is more than seventy.

WITHOUT EXCUSE.

BY ELDER E. M. LEE.

We are drawing near to the great day of the Lord. That day is not an uncertain object in the dim and distant future, but to him who reads aright the page of prophecy and history, a vivid reality, even now throwing the beams of its approaching glory, and the light of its consuming fires upon a slumbering world. It comes not without the message of heralds, yet it will come to many suddenly and unexpected. With real and unfeigned surprise, multitudes will awake from their condition, as the terrible realities of this coming day bursts upon them. So different from expectations, so contrary to all their plans, so fatal to things hoped for and believed. What astonishment, what amazement, yea, what terror will seize them. At once they will find themselves in the unrelaxing grasp of eternity, its irrevocable decisions upon them, and they among the last, how many in the agony of their despair will put the question to their own souls: Why should I be found in this condition? What would be their reply to such a question, should the judge of all meet them with the solemn inquiry: "Why have you not made preparation for this day?" What answer would they give; what excuse could they render? Would they say "Lord this day of all days, this concluding day of human history, this decisive day for all the human race, should have been set forth in the holy word." Forcible would the answer ring: "It was set forth." Did not my ancient prophets speak and write the word? Have you not read your Bible? Do you not know that apostles and prophets lived in your age? What fear and trembling to the wicked, but what joy to the righteous. Would not they who had done evil stand speechless and condemned? O, Lord! Why were we not warned in regard to the moral state of the world? "You were, for it was declared in the word of God that iniquity would abound, that evil men,and seducers would wax worse." "Nations would become enemies, and wars and rumors of wars would cause much distress to mankind." "In your own day did not every paper groan with records of these things, and all the land was startled at the fearful spectacle which the world presented."

Did you not see and wonder? And why did you not read aright? Paul warned you in his writings to not heap to yourselves teachers, having itching ears, that would turn away your ears from the truth and would turn them unto fables. And, again in II Peter chapter 2, did you not read that these false teachers would bring in damnable heresies among you? And, through covetousness they, with feigned words, make merchandise of you? Also I Timothy, 4:13, "that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth. Then, again, the Prophet Isaiah, wrote in his 24th chapter, 5th verse that the earth was also defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances: and broken the everlasting covenant. And say further, that messengers divinely appointed and sent, should have given warning of the approach of the great and dreadful day, that the proclamation should have been made through all the land when that day was near. The answer would be, did you not read in Daniel 2:44 that in the latter days of the kingdoms of the earth that the God of heaven would set up a kingdom, which should never be destroyed, but it should break in pieces all other kingdoms, that it should stand forever? And the voice of John, the Revelator, would be heard saying, did you not read in the 14:6-7 of my Revelations that I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, fear God and give glory to Him; for the hour of his judgment is come." And, also, Jesus saying as recorded in Matthew 24:14 and this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come. Surely you read in Micah 4:1, where he says: "In the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it." And, no doubt Jeremiah would be heard saying: "Did I not tell you in the sixteenth chapter and sixteenth verse of my book that the Lord would send for many fishes and they should fish them, and after he would send for many hunters and they should hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks? The answer to these questions would be something like this: "No, I have not read of these sayings you mention. I depended upon my priest or minister to tell me what I should do to escape the calamities, and he told us that if we only believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, we would be saved, that we could no nothing of ourselves, but it would all be given unto us through grace." That such things as apostles and prophets were done away. There was no more visiting of angels, that inspiration had ceased and that these Mormon Elders that came among the people professing to be called and sent by inspired men were imposters and wolves in sheeps' clothing; and the false prophets spoken of in the Bible. That we were not to go to hear them preach nor read any of their books, nor entertain them, that they had no business in this country pretending to preach the gospel that they were a depraved and ignorant people and not fit to associate with the enlightened people of the world. But we have awakened to the awful realization of our condition and find that "surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity and things wherein there is no profit." We find that darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people. That we have been following the blind leaders of the blind, and that we all follow into the ditch of condemnation together.

"Without excuse! Without excuse!
Why was I blindly led!
The summer past, the harvest gone,
My sins upon my head!"

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

Men will wrangle for religion, fight for it, die for it, do everything except live for it.—Colton.

We are pleased to welcome into the journalistic arena a bright little magazine, full of good thought for those of tender years, entitled "Zion's Young People." This magazine is published at Salt Lake City under the direction of W. A. Morton, who also has the honor of being its first editor. It is a monthly educator for the young, subscription price fifty cents per annum. We wish it God speed, on its journey of instruction and enlightenment, and pray that the object of its publication may be attained, viz.: that the youth of Zion may know and understand the truthfulness of the Gospel and the goodness of God; together with a better realization of the beauty, reasonableness and divinity of what the world erroneously calls "Mormonism."

LOYAL TO THE FLAG.

Within the breast of ever true American is born a spark of deepest love for the Red, White and Blue, which is fanned to a blaze by the lilly hand of the Goddess of Liberty. The Mormon people are no exception to the rule, as their actions of loyalty and patriotism invincibly prove.

Between the years of 1830 and 1846, the Latter-day Saints, in their own homes in Illinois, Missouri and Ohio, were subject to the most barbarous and savage treatment recorded in history since the days of Nero and Diocletian; and ultimately, for their religion, they were forced to flee for their lives into the Rocky Mountains. Notwithstanding the fact that their redresses to the government had been ignored, they proudly bore the Stars and Stripes across the plains, and from a lofty peak in their asylum of peace they swung "Old Glory" to the breeze as a token of their patriotism for their mother country.

It is not our purpose to elaborate upon how this spirit of love for their country's flag has been kept aglow among this people in all of their celebrations, etc., but we desire only to refer to the following patriotic incident, which occurred in a "Mormon" academy established by the Prophet Brigham Young and directed today by the Latter-day Saints.

At the farewell party to the "Mormon" exploring expedition to South America:

A beautiful American flag, the handiwork of the Brigham Young Academy training school, was presented to the expedition and was accepted by President Cluff, who, in accepting the flag, said: "It will be held in fond remembrances, and our little band will be true to the stars and stripes and the covenants we have made in the house of the Lord. It is fitting that the United States flag, the emblem of freedom, should be carried for the first time through the old land by a band of Mormons. I trust the 17th of April will prove a great day, and I hope the academy will not regret our mission."

In a letter to the acting President of the Academy—Prof. George H. Brimhall—Prof. Cluff writes:

"As we left Wales these twelve young ladies, bearing the United States flag, marched in front on foot to the edge of town and then separating, six on one side and six on the other, they bid us God speed on our journey. It was a touching sight, and I could not repress my feelings.

After reading the above accounts of the patriotic demonstration of the "Mormon" people one is forced to the conclusion that their religion has preserved their love for their country and that their loyalty to the Stars and Stripes is unexcelled in the Union, notwithstanding the false charges of their enemies to the contrary.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES FOR SCHOOLS.

Lyman Abbott now favors daily religious services in the schools. While the world is in such a state of religious confusion, how can this be accomplished? The pupils represent different sects, and reason teaches us (judging from signs of the times) that a parent of one belief would not favor having contrary teachings instilled within their offspring. Perhaps separate services could be held for each sect, but if such be the case time allotted for studies would be monopolized. Then again if one school had a representation of, say, thirty sects, and there be but five teachers, would they not favor their own belief as the purest and best for those under their care? But considering the fact that many preachers who have been called (?), (but for some unknown reason are minus a position), could be employed, why could not they each day fill these appointments? If this rule be adopted many a minister will crane his neck to be sure, and hear the call to go and preach the Gospel to the children.

The latest work which President Geo. Q. Cannon has furnished, and presented to the public, is a neat bound volume of 216 pages, entitled "The Latter-day Prophet." We have carefully perused its pages and unhesitatingly recommend it to both old and young; especially do we recommend it to the Elders of Israel who are engaged in active ministerial labors. The language is beautiful and simple, its style interesting, the facts it contains instructive, and the whole compilation is of such a nature that every Latter-day Saint should understand its contents. We have the book for sale here, and its merit, worth and value can best be known by a study of the subjects it contains.

"A STRANGER, AND YE TOOK ME IN."

How dear to the heart and soul of every true Christian must ever be the words of the glorified Son of God—the perfect, holy Captain of our salvation. Behold Him! Patient in tribulation; lowly in walk and conversation; wise in counsel and admonition, and faithful in the midst of bitter persecution which He was called upon to endure, and fierce onslaughts waged against him by a hard-hearted, stiff-necked and altogether untoward generation. Go where you may today; journey whithersoever you will o'er the vast expanse of our fair republic, or continental Europe, and you will hear the sons of Adam's race singing praises to the Lord—even to that same Jesus of Nazareth, once a despised, rejected man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. 'Tis sweet to sing of His matchless love, but far better to walk in His righteous path, and keep His holy, sacred word. While He was yet on the earth performing His divine mission of love, He was everywhere spoken evilly of, and, although the Son of God, He had not where to lay His head. The foxes of the earth had their holes as a refuge from the storms; the birds of the air had their nests to which they could fly for rest; but the Messiah and Wonderful Counsellor had no safe abiding while He journeyed among the children of men, engaged in doing His Father's will.

Just previous to His betrayal and crucifixion He explained to His disciples the process of the judgment day. He told them how the Son of Man should come in His glory, accompanied by His holy angels, and that before Him should be gathered all nations. Then He, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from his goats, parting his goats on his left hand, and the sheep on his right; saying unto them on His right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was an hungered and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me." (Matt. 25: 34-36.) The righteous do not understand when they saw their Savior hungry and gave Him meat; thirsty and gave Him drink; a stranger and ministered to His wants; naked and clothed Him; sick or in prison and came unto Him. To which inquiries the King replies: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." (40th verse.) To those parted on the left hand the good Lord shall say, "Depart from me, ye cursed. * * * For I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in." (41-43 verses.) The same answer, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not unto me," will be given when the wicked inquire, "Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee?" (44-45.)

This explanation of the judgment coming from the lips of Him to whom the Lord hath given all power in heaven and in earth, gives us to understand that His servants shall be "strangers" to the people among whom they labor. Yes! A stranger, and ye took me in. Think of this, ye Elders of Israel, and be encouraged thereby. You are strangers to the people of this southern clime, and your mission, like that of our glorified Head, Jesus Christ, is one of peace, love, and good-will. Let the words of Jesus ring in your ears, Christians of the nineteenth century; let them sink deep into your hearts, and the practical, God-like application of them be manifest in your daily lives. We shall all be gathered before the Good Shepherd, and it depends upon our actions here on earth as to whether we will be numbered with the sheep on His right hand, or the goats on His left. Remember the words of the Apostle Paul: "Be careful to entertain strangers," and forget not the words of Jesus, "I was a stranger, and ye took me in."

President Diaz Favorable.

A recent communication from the secretary of the interior of Mexico brings the happy information that President Diaz favors the Academy South American Expedition and grants exemption from importation duties on all their wagons, animals, scientific apparatus, etc., requesting them to pay the usual entrance charges only on their provisions, medicines, and on quantities of paper, should they have any. These are dutiable, presumably, because the country can furnish them as cheaply as the United States. These marks of good will speak well for those who have the matter in charge, showing they have presented the motives of the expedition clearly and with force to the Mexican officials; for heretofore the Mexican government has proved itself somewhat close and unyielding in matters of revenue. Now they give free passage through their territory for a period of one year, in which term the party will have passed into Central America

* * *

After passing the Mexico line, the expedition will go through Colonia Diaz, and from there into Cave Valley on the southwest. They then will follow the Sierra Madre mountains, where game and forage is plentiful, until they reach the city of Chihuahua. Leaving there, their route will lead them to the city of Mexico and on into Yucatan and Chiapas, the site of the many ancient ruins. Traversing the isthmus, the Magdalena river will be the next objective point, though some travelers question the possibility of taking horses through the jungles and swamps that will be encountered before reaching it. Thence the Andes will be climbed and its valleys explored as far south as Lake Titicaca. The return will be made by water from one of the western ports.—White and Blue, B. Y. Academy.

History of the Southern States Mission.

December, 1896.

Elder West was released from his labors and Elder Frank Cutler was appointed to preside over the Florida Conference in his stead. While Florida groaned under the weight of outlawry, the same spirit found birth in the heart of Louisiana. It seems while Elder S. L. Swensen, President of the Louisiana Conference, with his companion, A. Dall, were preparing to hold a series of meetings in Livingston Parish, La., they were met by a mob of men, who commanded them to leave the county. The mob was led by a Methodist minister, claiming to represent the people, warning the Elders to "get out."

Not leaving immediately, again were they threatened by a mob, who made preparations to make an attack. To evade the mobbers the Elders slept in the woods all night, leaving the locality early the next morning.

Elders A. Nelson and A. F. Bracken, laboring in Plaquemine, Iberville Parish, Louisiana, reported having been forced to sleep out in the woods three nights in one week, and had fourteen meals in seventeen days. Instead of being discouraged at such treatment, it seemed to stimulate them, making them more determined to push the work onward. The Mission work was prospering, the Elders being faithful and determined.

The city of Richmond, Va., was closed by Elders T. C. Romney and W. W. Huffaker. They were in the city nearly two months and traveled without purse or scrip; held a number of well attended meetings upon the streets, making many warm friends.

Austin, the capital of Texas, was closed by Elders M. A. Miner and John Wood. They also made many friends and traveled as Christ sent forth His Apostles, without money, trusting in God to raise up friends unto them.

President Kimball returned from Utah, having come by way of California, Arizona and New Mexico. While in California President Kimball visited the President and some of the Elders of that Mission; since then the policy of traveling without purse or scrip has been adopted as a result of his visit there, he having been inspired by the Lord to accomplish that end. It was during this month that it was decided that Texas, after Jan. 1st, 1897, be transferred from this and made a part of the Indian Territory Mission.

The spirit of mobocracy still prevailed in Suwanee county, Florida. Threats continued to grow intensely bitter. Perceiving the danger Elder West and companions were in, Elder Musser left Chattanooga for Florida and assisted in moving Elder West. About 2 o'clock the following day, presuming not to have learned of Elder Wests' departure, a mob of some 200 outlaws gathered at the "old Wilson mill" as per previous appointment; then began a rampageous scour of the country in quest of them —— "Mormons." Finding Elder Fisher at the home of Brother Redding, a committee of six was appointed to escort him to town, where a public gathering was held, in which the speaker denounced Mormonism, and threatened with death the next Elder coming into that county, together with those of the Saints who persisted in sustaining the doctrine. The harangue was listened to by 500 people.

"'Tis sorrow builds the shining ladder up,
Whose golden rounds are our calamities."

Justice, Where Art Thou?

Thursday, the 26th ult., Elders J. A. Robison and W. G. Atkin began canvassing the small city of Pineville, N. C. They were getting along very well, until the next morning Satan thought it time to step in. While the Elders were in the postoffice, attending to their own business, a Presbyterian minister came in, and learning that they were "Mormons," followed them up the street, forbidding them to enter his premises. Filled with the spirit of the devil, he rushed up to the next house, warning the people against them. Not yet satisfied with his low work, he circulated lies throughout the business part, filling the minds of the merchants with falsehood, an art many ministers are masters of.

It was only a matter of a few moments before the Elders were invited by two of the leading men to leave town by 12 o'clock. It was then 11 a.m. and the officers were sought, but in vain, and the Elders were informed they were out of town. Whether this be true we know not, yet it does seem (judging from past experience) that officers of the law are very scarce when the Elders need deserving protection. The cowardly Mayor, one of the leading business men of the place, vanished through the back door of his establishment, upon the approach of the Elders. By this time twelve of the leading men, most of them merchants, assembled together and escorted the Elders to the city limits.

Woe unto the pious hypocrites of Pineville, who garnish the outside and say: "If we had lived in the days of the Prophets, we would not have been partakers with the Scribes and Pharisees in their deeds of death and banishment." The day will come when those bigots who drove from them messengers of salvation will pray for the rocks to hide them, for they will fear and tremble to know they had cast out from their midst God's true servants.

Elijah's Baptism.

But a short time ago one Elijah Sanders desired to be baptized and become a member of a Baptist church in Oconee county, S. C. The minister refused to baptize him for some reason unknown to us, yet he did not intend to let a small thing like that discourage him. The regular day for baptisms came, and again did Elijah (with a change of clothes under his arm) apply for baptism. Being refused, he walked a few yards up the river front, having on his mind the saying of the Savior: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God." Feeling that the ceremony should be performed, if he did it himself, he walked to the river, said a few words and fell backwards into the water, baptizing himself. Poor man, he came forth thinking the Master's commands had been obeyed. This man is just as near heaven (if he did immerse himself) as he would be had the self-appointed minister baptized him. Although Elijah deceived himself only, the minister he applied to perchance is deceiving many by claiming to have authority from God to officiate in the ordinances of salvation. We would refer our Reverend Brethren to Paul's teachings contained in Heb. 5:4: "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."

Ye who would in aught excel,
Ponder this simple maxim well:
A wise man's censure may appall,
But a fool's praise is worst of all.

OBEDIENCE.

BY ELDER R. W. SMITH.

"And being made perfect He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him."—Heb. 5:9.

A promise of eternal salvation is made by our Lord and Savior to the entire race of man on earth. This promise however, is based upon conditions, the sum of which may be expressed in one word—Obedience. Obedience to the requirements of the Lord Jesus.

Our beloved Savior having come to earth for that express purpose gave His life as a propitiation for the sins of the world, by which act He purchased the human family as an inheritance. Hence His right to prescribe the condition of salvation.

By reason of this great sacrifice of our Master, mankind have been redeemed from the effects of the fall and made sure of a resurrection from the grave. Thus far salvation is free and unconditional, extending alike to the entire human family. But to gain an exaltation in the kingdom of God, mankind, without an exception, must comply with all laws and requirements of the Master, which He has instituted for the government of His children.

The scriptures are replete with passages which, when understood, prove conclusively to the reasonable mind that this is a fact.

I cite the following as among the most pointed:

"Though He (Christ) were a son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered; and being made perfect, He became the author of enternal salvation unto all them that obey Him."—Heb. 5:8-9.

"Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father, which is in heaven. —Matt. 7:21.

"Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." —Jas. 1.22. "For not the hearers of the law shall be just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified."—Heb. 2:13. "And this is life eternal that they might know the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—John 17:3. "And hereby we do know Him, if we keep His commandments. He that saith I know Him, and keepeth not His commandments, is a liar and the truth is not in him. But whosoever keepeth His words, in him verily is the love of God perfected; hereby know we that we are in Him."—I John 2:3-6. "If we say that we have fellowship with Him and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not speak the truth. But if we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son, cleanseth us from all sins."—I John 1.6:7.

"If ye love me, keep my commandments. * * * He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him."—John 14.15-21. "He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." —Mark 16:16.

Numerous other passages of equal importance might be cited, if space would permit; however, I deem this entirely sufficient to firmly establish my point.

Salvation, then, as well as the blessings of God in this life, are secured by obedience to the gospel laws, and in no other way.

For one to have a knowledge or understanding of these laws, and then to disregard them is in itself condemnation. For "he that knoweth to do good and doeth it not to him it is sin."—Jas. 4:17.

We are told that without faith it is impossible to please God; and I think you will find that it is impossible to please Him without obedience. "Faith without works is dead."

It is not necessary to attend a theological seminary to learn how to obey God. If we live by the gospel precepts we shall live on gospel promises.

There is something very strange in the fact that everything but man will obey God literally and at once. In the beginning God said: "let there be light," and there was light. "Let the dry land appear," and it was so. The elements responded immediately to His commands. Notice the difference when He speaks to man. He commanded Adam not to eat of the fruit of a particular tree under penalty of death. But unlike the waters and the firmament he disobeyed the command and thus brought death into the world.

All nature rendered obedience to the Son of Man, when He was upon the earth. At one time He spoke to the sea and it recognized and obeyed Him. He spoke to the fig tree, and it instantly withered and died. He rebuked the winds, and they were instantly calmed. He spoke to the grave, and the grave obeyed Him, and gave back its dead. But when He speaks to man, he is either very reluctant, or entirely refuses to obey. He wants to argue the point; and avoid, if possible, doing anything, however directly commanded, that would humiliate him in the eyes of the world, or discommode him in the least.

And some there are more learned, (?) who want to twist and turn the word of God, and try to persuade themselves, and all others that will listen, that God never means what He says in a literal sense. And this point once established, they proceed to place their own private interpretations on the scriptures, which sounds much better, in their ears, and makes the law much easier to comply with than before. How fortunate the world is in having men who are able to improve upon the long-established law of God, and make salvation comparatively easy, or wholly unconditional.

The people hail this sort of man-made religion with delight, and pay large sums of money to a hireling ministry "who teach for doctrine the commandments of men" to have their ears tickled from Sabbath to Sabbath with "poor sinner you can do nothing for yourself, Jesus has done it all. You do not need to search the scriptures, the ministry will keep you well posted if you keep them well paid."

This class of easy-road-to-heaven seekers will utterly ignore or trample in the mire anything professing to be inspired, and hiss and jeer any people who teach that God requires literal obedience to His commands.

But as sure as there is a just God in heaven, the time will come when such foul systems of mockery and deception will be snatched from their proud heights and utterly consumed by the righteous wrath of a just Creator.

Learn an example of obedience from the lives of two Sauls. They lived about 1,000 years apart. The one started out poorly and ended well; the other started out well and ended poorly. The first Saul had a kingdom and a crown. He also had the friendship of Samuel, the greatest prophet of his day; and yet he lost the friendship of Samuel, lost his crown, his kingdom and his life, all through an act of disobedience. All his kingly dignity and power could not excuse him.

Now take the Saul of the New Testament. When God called him he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision and he was given a heavenly kingdom. He fought the good fight; he kept the faith; and in writing to Timothy he said: "henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

One act of obedience; one act of disobedience. The act of obedience gained all, the act of disobedience lost everything. "To obey is better than sacrifice and to hearken than the fat of rams."

It is said above fifty times, of Moses that he did according to all the Lord had commanded him. No wonder Moses was so well favored. The promises made to the children of Israel were always made upon the condition of obedience, and the calamities which befell them was the result of disobedience in every instance.

When Jesus Christ shall come in His glory He will render to every man according to his deeds. "To them who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life. But unto them that are contentious and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath."—Rom. 2:7-8.

"Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."—Rev. 22:14.

And to you who are troubled rest with us when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with His mighty angels in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the gosnel of our Lord Jesus Christ."—II Thess. 1:7-8.

Thirteen Months in a Year.

At the Paris Expsoition an attempt will be made to have the entire world adopt the new calendar of thirteen months, devised and copyrighted by C. H. Bundy, editor of the Marion (Ind.) Morning News. It is to be urged before the commission already appointed to consider this ingenious new system, that is the only practical method of measuring the flight of the years. No calendar in present use is satisfactory. The one by Russia is twelve days out. That in use in China was four days wrong, but has just been corrected by an imperial edict. Our own is forced to drop a leap year in 1900 to be with the sun. Bundy's solution of the vexed problem is the introduction of a new month, Century, in commemoration of its adoption between two centuries. The name is urged as being well chosen, in that it is not local to America, but would be acceptable to every country. Every month will then have just twenty-eight days. Every month and every year will begin upon Monday.—Ex.

Times Had Changed.

Stories of midshipmen in the English navy are almost as numerous as the sands of the sea, yet new ones are continually being told, and many of them are quite as good as the old ones. Cornhill recently printed one of an amusing nature.

It was in the harbor of Malta one day that a midshipman, of about four feet eight inches, addressed himself to the six-feet-two captain of his first sea-going ship. The captain looked down upon the boy, smiling, and good-naturedly said:

"Well, youngster, so you have come to join, eh?"

"Yes, if you please," meekly responded the youthful officer.

"Is it the same old story, 'sent the fool of the family to sea?'"

"No, sir," quickly responded the lad. "Oh, no: things have changed since your time."

"Go away," roared the captain, and the middy flew below as fast as his little legs would carry him.—Youth's Companion.

"WE'LL TAKE THE ANCIENTS BY THE HAND."

BY DAY-VID.

"O glorious day! O blessed hope!
My soul leaps forward at the thought;
When in that happy, happy land,
We'll take the Ancients by the hand;
In love and union hail our friends;
And death and sorrow have an end."

What rapturous joy thrills the soul, and fills the heart with gladness, when we clasp the hands of dear friends, and look into the sweet faces of those we love. Who is there, having been separate from companions and associates, who has not, upon being returned to their presence, felt the joyful emotions of the heart, while the whole being was filled with inexpressible happiness? It was to such an one a time of great rejoicing, an hour of much pleasure, a season of exquisite joy, to meet with those from whom he, or she, had been absent.

The beautiful little verse above given, being composed by the illustrious Apostle, Parley P. Pratt, speaks of a glorious time "when in that happy, happy land, we'll take the Ancients by the hand; in love and union hail our friends; and death and sorrow have an end." This thrice welcome, happy day, will bring the crowning glory for the faithful ones of God, when they shall shine with resplendent brilliancy in the divine brightness of the Father's everlasting light. Reader, can you contemplate the grandeur of this beautiful day of rest and peace when,

We meet with those who've gone before,
Those faithful, righteous ones of yore,
And take them by the hand;
And hear the blessed Savior say
"Come ye who've walked the narrow way,
And join the heavenly band."

As we ponder upon these future events, there comes the query, Who shall stand in that day, and who shall be able to join that blessed congregation of the righteous to grasp in everlasting friendship the hands of those faithful ones? And the answer comes, They who have pursued the same course, they who have walked the same narrow way; and embraced the same, one, unchangeable, eternal, everlasting Gospel. In the light of the Holy Scriptures, let us take a view of this blessed day of promise, and, permitting our imaginary faculties to expand in supposition, behold some events which are more than likely to transpire in that day.

We behold that great Apostle to the Gentiles—Paul—sanctified, crowned with a crown of righteousness, and glorified with the redeemed standing in the reception chambers of heaven's holy domains, ready to greet the ransomed of our Lord. Let us suppose that the first one to approach the great Apostle is a reverend Christian divine—one, who, while on the earth, was a very popular preacher, living in luxury and splendor, receiving a large salary for his ministerial services, feasting on the fat of the earth, and treading on rich carpeting. Something like the following conversation would naturally enough take place: The Apostle Paul: "Well, my friend, how did you get along while down on the earth?" Christian preacher: "Oh, first rate, no trouble whatever, all things glided along smoothly with me." "I can't say that," Brother Paul would remark, "for I was persecuted on every hand, and when I stood up to declare the truth all men forsook me (Tim. 4:16), therefore I can't shake hands with you on that, and by the way, how did you travel in your day?" "We went in carriages to our church, preparing our sermons beforehand, received a good wage for our labors, and pleased the people by our preaching." "That does not agree with our mode of locomotion; our sermons were delivered as the Spirit gave us utterance, we preached the good word of salvation free, coveted no man's silver or gold (Acts 20:33, 34), and sought to please God rather than man (Gal. 1:10), so we can't shake hands on that, my friend. And what kind of an organization did you have?" Brother Paul would ask. "Oh," the reverend would reply, "we had a pastor, a deacon, and perhaps an Elder; telling the people that all other officers, such as Apostles, Prophets, etc., were done away with, as no longer needed."

Again the Apostle would exclaim, "Why, God placed Apostles and Prophets in the church (I Cor. 12:28) as it hath pleased Him (18th verse), and we (the living oracles) were given to understand that these should remain until all should come to a unity of the faith, so taught I the people (Ephes. 4:13), thus you see our experiences are unlike in every respect; you were accepted, while I was rejected; you were welcomed and I was cast out; you received the smiles of men, counted a popular preacher; I received the stripes of men, counted a vain impostor; you was given your reward on earth, receiving your salary there, while I was martyred on the earth, to receive my salary here."

Should we continue the conversation, we would find that this Christian and his adventures were totally unlike those of the bold and fearless Apostle Paul, and therefore he would be prohibited the honor of grasping the hand of this valiant servant, and the glory of spending an eternity in his association. Jesus said, speaking to those who work iniquity, "When ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the Prophets in the Kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out. And they shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and sit down in the Kingdom of God." (Luke 13:28-29.)

To reverse the lever of thought and circumstance, let us introduce another person into the presence of this Apostle, and observe how goes the conversation. It is the Apostle Paul and a poor despised Mormon Elder, engaged in conversing with each other. Brother Paul: "Well, my friend, how did you get along while one the earth?" "Well, Brother Paul, I had many trials to encounter, much persecution to endure, and bitter opposition to meet." "I can shake hands with you on that," the Apostle would reply, "for I was smitten with stripes; beaten with rods; mocked and reviled, stoned and imprisoned; and finally put to death for the testimony I bore. And, by the way, how did you travel?" the Apostle would ask. "We went two by two, using the means of locomotion and perambulation which God had given us—afoot—preached the Gospel free of charge, receiving no salary, never seeking to please the children of men, but fearlessly preaching the truth as it is in Christ Jesus," the Mormon Elder would reply. Again there would be a striking of hands, a warm clasp, and a glad smile, while Brother Paul would say, "What kind of an organization did you have in your day?" The Mormon Elder would respond, "Our church organization consisted of Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc." "An exact pattern of the church in my day and time," the great Apostle would exclaim, and they would grasp each other's hands in joyous mirth. Paul could say to this Mormon Elder, "You were persecuted, so was I (I Cor, 11:24-28). You were reviled and called an impostor, I was cast out and denounced a babbler (Acts 17:18). Your doctrines were everywhere derided, and the Jews said of mine, 'Everywhere it is spoken against.' (Acts 28:22.) Our adventures are similar; our experiences alike; and our salvation shall be the same. See, here is the beloved Apostle John, a brother and companion in tribulation," (Rev. 1:9.)

"THE JUDGMENT OF GOD."

BY A. B. COSBY.

I would not have anyone think that I gloat over the misfortunes of my fellowmen; such is not the case, and is not the object of this short article. I would rather that God pity and help them. But it seems that in the many workings of the world that each incident has a lesson that is profitable to mankind. So in this instance I believe there is an object lesson.

In Caroline county, Virginia, in one corner, we have a very prosperous little branch of Saints, consisting of about forty souls. All who come in contact with them know that they are zealous for the Master. One of the leading members was at one time quite prominent, locally, in the Baptist church. Since he has seen fit to cast his lot elsewhere the ministers, especially two, of the church he had left, seemed to have taken special delight in heaping abuse upon him. One of them, speaking from the church pulpit at Bowling Green, the county seat, uttered falsehood and calumny that would do grace to one of our modern New York "yellow journals," and certainly too vulgar for decent men and women to hear, in regard to our Saints, even going so far in his dirty talk as to call some of their names.

Two Elders had been working in the county for some time, and as they had finished the rest of it they thought it would be well to canvass Bowling Green, which consisted of about one hundred families. All kinds of rumors had been set afloat as to how they would be treated if they attempted to canvass the village. However, they were not daunted. Putting on the armor of faith and trusting in the strength of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, they went into the place. One of the first men met was the reverend gentleman (?) who had used such vile language in his pulpit a few Sundays before. He treated them very rudely and heaped every kind of abuse at his command upon them, even going so far as to threaten to have them whipped.

After finishing the tracting the Elders found that about three persons out of every four had refused to take tracts, or have anything to do with them.

After the testimony of the Elders we are told that the people shall have the testimony of earthquakes, famines and scourges. The prophecies must be fulfilled. This is one fulfillment. Sometimes these testimonies, these judgments, do not immediately follow; but in this case it was different. It was canvassed on April 2nd, and on the 10th the larger portion was reduced to ashes. To show how terrible was the judgment, I take the following from last evening's Richmond paper:

Appeal for Help.

The Mayor of Bowling Green has issued the following appeal for aid:

Bowling Green, Va., April 13, 1900.

"To the Public:

"The Board of Trustees passed the following resolutions:

"Whereas, A conflagration occurred on the night of the 10th instant, whereby over forty buildings were burned, and all of the business portion of the town, except two stores, destroyed, and many people rendered homeless and destitute, with no insurance; and,

"Whereas, Such are objects of charity which this village of six hundred people is unable to relieve; therefore,

"Resolved, That this fact be stated in the press of Richmond and Fredericksburg, with the request to those people of means who may feel inclined to contribute to do so.

"Any aid you may feel willing and able to render will be gratefully received.

"A. B. CHANDLER, Mayor."

Perhaps it is not necessary that I should add more than that—

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

A True American.

A short time ago Elders Nielson and Johnson were laboring in Russell county, Kentucky. They were holding meetings in the Point Pleasant school house, enjoying their labors very much. There were in this neighborhood people who professed to be Christians, yet they were very jealous of the progress made by the Elders. Many made threats of what they would do if the "Mormons" did not get away from their neighborhood. These threats reached the ears of Mr. U. G. Anderson, who had manhood enough to stand for his convictions. He asked permission to say a few words, which privilege was granted him. His words had the true liberty-loving ring to them and were in harmony with the views of all the broad-minded peopel of the district.

Mr. Anderson said:

Ladies, gentlemen, neighbors: I regret very much to say, that I have heard that some people of this neighborhood have been talking of closing the doors of this school house against Elders Johnson and Nielson. I sincerely wish that these rumors of disorder were not true, but I am pained to say they are. Friends, this kind of talk casts deflection upon us as citizens of the United States. Why should we not be willing to hear these men? Is it a lack of confidence in ourselves to heed the admonition of Paul, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good," or is it on account of prejudice? I tell you we should hear all, no matter what a man's opinion is, he has the right to express that opinion, and no man has a right to deny him free speech. We live in a free country, where every man has a right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience. These men are not here to force their doctrines upon us; they do not ask you to become Mormons against your will; all they ask is for you to simply give them a hearing. They do not ask you to believe against your will what they preach, but to weigh evidence with reason, without prejudice, and decide for yourselves. They would not for anything blot out the faintest star of hope, which sheds its radiance within the human heart; they only ask you to hear their doctrine, and compare it with the Bible. You do not have to believe them; you cannot know a thing without evidence; if you hear not these men, how are you to know their teachings? Now, friends, there are a few of us holding this meeting here; we have invited these gentlemen to preach, and we are going to hear them. If there be those here who care not to listen to these men, let them stay away. If they have no respect for the Elders, nor themselves, they should have enough respect for the neighborhood to let those who desire, hear the Gospel.

Such were the words of a man who, in the face of opposition, stood up and declared for what many have suffered, bled and died—"Liberty."

Infant Baptisms in Russia.

"I was fortunate enough," writes Trumbull White, "to visit the Church of St. David, in Tiflis, Russia, just in time to attend a baptismal ceremony. According to the rites of the Greek Church, as practiced in this ancient Georgian temple, the youngster in question, a fine boy four or five weeks old, had to be immersed three times in a baptismal font filled with water, each time to be completely covered, in addition to various blessings and anointings with holy oil and several long prayers.

"The benevolent-looking old Priest proved himself a man of kindly thoughtfulness. While the family group around the baby was getting him properly unclad, for the ceremony requires that the child shall be naked, the Priest surreptitiously dipped his finger into the font, and I saw by his face that it was too cold. Then he stepped behind a screen, where his samovar was steaming, emptied the hot water into a pitcher, and while the family still kept busy over the baby he poured enough to temper the pool that had been provided for the shorn lamb. The result was that the little fellow took his plunges without a murmur and thereby distinguished himself."—Chicago Record.

THE DEAD.

Salt Lake City, Utah, April 18, 1900.

Editor Star.

Dear Brother—Many readers of the Star will feel extremely sorry, in one sense, to hear of the death of their departed friend, James Ragsdale, of Molder, Madison county, Alabama.

He was 69 years of age and first heard the Gospel October, 1894, at a meeting held near his home by Elders Bird Murphy and Warren Beckstead. Like hundreds of others with honest hearts, and with inquiring minds, his previous researches for truth had well fitted him to hear with favor the doctrine of Christ as presented by Mormon Elders. The tract which he received at the meeting was simply a taste of that for which he had been longing. He therefore awaited with impatience the return of the Elders, who, on meeting him, were kept busy for some time answering his questions. From this time until his death, which occurred on the 1st inst., he was tireless in his study of the church works. So proficient in a knowledge of the Gospel did he become and so energetic and persistent in its promulgation was he, that it is not putting it too strongly to say that the people of his neighborhood doubtless heard more "Mormon doctrine" than the people of any other neighborhood in his state.

A number of his relatives have been baptized; he never has been, for the reason, so he affirmed, that he felt himself wholly unworthy of the Gospel privileges. His home has been at the disposal of the Elders since 1894. When they have been footsore and weary he has been ceaseless in his efforts to comfort and refresh them; and the same can be said truly of his family. So, may I be permitted to say for all the Elders who have enjoyed the blessings of our deceased friend's home, that we join in tendering our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family, and join in praying that the Father of Mercy may assuage the grief and administer comfort to the hearts of those who have been called to part for a time from a promoter of righteousness, as well as a devoted husband and a loving father.

ALBERT C. MATHESON.

J. W. Webb, who departed this life September 18th, 1899, was a special good friend to the humble Elders, and many of them have found his home a welcome place unto them. All who called at his home near Lowell, Ga., were treated as only a true Southerner knows how. He had read and studied the teaching of the Latter-day Saints and was convinced of its truth.

PRESS ON.

PARK BENJAMIN.

Press on! Surmount the rocky steeps,
Climb boldly o'er the torrent's arch;
He falls alone who feebly creeps!
He wins who dares the hero's march.
Be though a hero! Let thy might
Tramp on eternal snows its way,
And, through the ebon walls of night,
Hew down a passage unto day.

Press on! If once and twice thy feet
Slip back and stumble, harder try;
From him who never dreads to meet
Danger and death, they're sure to fly—
To coward ranks the bullet speeds,
While on their breast who never quail,
Gleams, guardian of chivalric deeds,
Bright courage, like a coat of mail.

Press on! If Fortune play thee false
Today, tomorrow she'll be true;
Whom now she sinks, she now exalts,
Taking old gifts and granting new.
The wisdom of the present hour
Makes up the follies past and gone;
To weakness, strength succeeds, and power
From frailty springs! Press on, press on!

Therefore, press on and reach the goal,
And gain the prize, and wear the crown;
Faint not, for to the steadfast soul
Come wealth, and honor, and renown.
To thine own self be true, and keep
Thy mind from sloth, thy heart from soil,
Press on, and thou shalt surely reap
A heavenly harvest for thy toil.

History of the Southern States Mission.

After treating Elder Fisher to a good supper, he was furnished a ticket to Chattanooga and put on the Plant System train. Riding into Georgia, he sold his ticket, returning to another part of Florida, and continued his labors. The Suwanee county Saints were not discouraged, but firm and fully resolved to serve God at all hazards. In the mob, fifty-three of whose names were furnished us by Sister Ida J. Redding, were at least thirty-eight active Baptists, five Methodists, one Catholic. Their leader was J. R. Newlan, a very active Baptist member and the last tax collector of Suwanee county, assisted by W. L. Whitefield, a Methodist member, and editor of the "Live Oak Banner." Prominent among the mob were W. A. Parker, a very active Baptist member and county treasurer the year before, Chas. McClain, Methodist, and John Robinson, Baptist, both defeated candidates in the county election.

Capt. Newlan, in a statement published in the "Banner," sought to justify the action of the mobocrats, because Judge Stewart, of Jasper county, sustained their procedure.

North Carolina groaned under mobocracy. On the 8th inst. Elders J. D. Killpack and S. C. Carlston were waited upon by a mob just as they were preparing to retire.

Several shots were fired, but no violence done. They were escorted about two miles and told to leave, and not return under penalty of death.

It was 2:30 a. m. before they found a place to stop.

Elders Joseph P. Green and R. F. Cole were rotten egged on the night of the 13th inst. at Seaboard, Northampton county, after holding meeting in a hall. After the services the hall was quickly cleared, and upon stepping outside a fusilade of dust and gravel greeted the Elders.

They called upon a Reverend for entertainment and protection, but he could do nothing for them. While walking down the street towards the mayor's residence, the Elders were treated to a shower of rotten eggs, one of which hit Elder Cole. Not being able to find entertainment, they stayed all night in the woods.

While canvassing the city of Raleigh, N. C., Elders Ira Baker and C. J. Winter were arrested and placed in jail. They had been refused entertainment some thirty times and were about to ask again for lodging (9 o'clock p. m.) when a policeman placed them in jail. Next morning the Elders were released without being granted a trial; the mayor sent word for them to leave the city at once.

About this time Louisiana, not to be outdone by some of her sister states, added to the records of outlawry.

While working in Livingston Parish, and on the night of the 5th inst., Elders R. E. Caldwell and J. Granville Pace were severely whipped by a mob of about eleven men.

The Elders had just dismissed a meeting held at the home of W. T. Shelton, and were seated at the fire conversing with the family, when the door was quietly opened, and eleven men, masked and armed, walked in, demanding "them Mormon preachers." They were seized by the outlaws, hurried out of the house, and off through mud, water and thickets, a distance of about five miles. The party halted at a bridge spanning the Amite river, at the junction of Livingston and East Baton Rouge parishes.

The Elders were commanded to prepare for the hickory, and were given thirty-six lashes each. Three of the mob administered the lashes, the first giving each of them sixteen and the other two, ten each.

They were then forced out of the parish and commanded not to return; in the event of their returning "hemp" would be the next treatment.

The Elders were "gritty" and faithful, making their way back into the eastern part of the praish. Although they had obtained no sleep for sixty hours, yet they were by no means discouraged, but were thankful they were worthy of persecution for the Savior's name.

Recognized among the mobocrats were Jim Prickett, Cumore, Drs. Dukes and Prickett.

The details of this mobbing were written to Gov. Murphy J. Foster, at Baton Rouge, La., by President Kimball, to which no reply was made, showing the little regard for religious liberty maintained by the Governor.

Mohammedans Looking for Christ's Coming

Mohammedans throughout the world, but especially those residing in the Holy Land, are looking for the second coming of Christ. They expect Him to arrive at any time, and are prepared to receive Him. The reason they are so interested in such a subject is because the Koran teaches He will come, and that when He does so, certain new honors are to go to their own prophet, Mahomet. The Rev. C. T. Wilson has labored for years among Mohammedans of Jerusalem, as a representative of the Church Missionary society. His work is itinerating, for he visits families in their homes, and directs the work in hospitals, where thousands hear the gospel. Direct work is not carried on, for it is death for a Mohammedan to turn Christian. There are few results of present mission work, and the few there are the missionaries say nothing about, much less publish. Mr. Wilson says the Turkish government keeps readers even in England and in the United States, charged with the duty of reading religious papers for information. One mission mentioned in an American paper was closed up within a week, through information cabled from New York to Constantinople. Missionaries in Mohammedan countries, Mr. Wilson says, are working on, praying and hoping for religious liberty. A Mohammedan saying has it that at the day of judgment many a Christian will be found in a Mohammedan grave.

TRAITORS.

Solemn Warnings — A Traitor Can Never Be Anything But Despicable — Examples of the Past.

BY BEN E. RICH.

The traitor is the moral cannibal. He feasts on the mental worth, the social reputation, the political welfare and the earthly life of his trusting and betrayed friend. He is the human serpent, which nurses and revives at the fire of charity, and then darts his strengthened venom at the bosom of his benefactor. What the grub is to the heart of oak, the gnawing rat to the ship's timbers, the flaw to the diamond, the poisonous asp to the sheltering flower—all that, aye, and more, is the traitor to mankind. No cause is so sacred, no being is so exalted as to be free from the pollution of his betraying touch. Even the celestial legions had their arch-traitor. Earth, from the day of Eden, has never been free from his treacherous kiss. Since the hour when man first learned to owe allegiance to his fellow-man, profane, rebellious betrayers have worked their insidious way, like devastating worms, through all the pillars upholding holy men and noble causes.

The traitor is the worst of all thieves; for he steals sacred freedom from his trusting associates. The traitor is the worst of all murderers; for he plunges the assassin's knife into the back of his believing friend.

Two soldiers are standing at the picket post—in the dark night, the silent forest. They are sworn and trusted comrades. The army of the foe surges around them; and they know that ghastly death is grinning at them from every glade which opens from the dark center to the blacker depths beyond, and whispering to them upon every wind that stirs the odorous branches. But they fear no blow from a foeman's shaft—that noble death is but the chance of war. Secure in mutual confidence, they tremble not. They speak of country, home; of wives and little, prattling babes. And yet, while the words of soft, pathetic love are on the lips of one, the other plunges a traitorous knife, hilt-deep, into a friendly, loyal heart. And then the assassin sweeps like the shadow of a lost soul over the face of the betrayed sentinel; he creeps across tender moss and between the trunks of mighty trees—everywhere leaving the crimson, accusing stain—until he reaches a distant campfire; and at the feet of the waiting enemy he lays down his reeking knife and takes his purse of gold. This is the traitor. And when the moon comes up, stealing amidst the rustling leaves, he looks upon the cold, white face of a betrayed friend, whose last word was of confident love to the ear of a hired assassin.

Two men are joined in a patriotic cause. To the maintenance of the principle of just freedom they pledge their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor. History will call the men who are true to this cause loyal and brave. The tyrant whom they seek to overthrow calls them conspirators. They meet in a darkened room, with curtains closely drawn. Soft mats hush the sound of the firm footfall. Stern voices, more used to the vast circumference of the field or the resonant heights of the forum, are stilled to a woman's whisper. These two men are meeting to sign and yield to each other, for distant comrades, the pledge of mutual fidelity. The one who is master of the house places his guest at a table and spreads before him for final execution the plans of insurrection, the lists of friends and confederates, the oaths of reciprocal fealty. As the visitor attaches his name to the solemn instruments, he sighs and says:

"Oh, trusted friend! I yield to this cause not only my life, my fortune and my sacred honor, but I pledge to it and to the integrity of you and our allies my sweet wife and my only son—both at once my present pride and future joy!"

While the words are uttered, the bold and noble hand traces its way in affirmatory signature across parchment and paper. Scarcely has the thrilling whisper of the patriot ceased to agitate the damask curtains, when the hangings are parted by the vulture hand of the other conspirator; and between their open folds steal the soldiers of the tyrant. These warlike hands grasp the shoulders of the patriot; and as they drag him forth to dungeon and to death, the betraying host cries:

"Bind him fast, lest he should escape and slay me!"

The coward, muffled in a cloak, soon steals from the somber chamber to the palace of the minister and lays before that waiting officer his trophies of broken plans and fatal lists. He gets in return his patent of rank, his gift of confiscated estates, his pledge of his personal security. This is the traitor. And when the sun of the third day shall rise, its first pitying beams will fall upon the gory block, the black executioner, the basket with its dread burden, and the headless trunk of the patriot whose trust and hope had been in a false friend.

Two men are joined with others in proclaiming an unpopular but holy doctrine. Hand in hand they go through the earth testifying to men, to cities, to nations, the mighty truths. They say to all lands and to all peoples:

"We know that this is the living, burning truth. God has spoken from the heavens, and we are His witnesses."

To each other—in all the sacred friendliness of long association, of missionary labor, and of a communion together when every human law and hand seemed against them—they speak in faithful hope of the glorious cause which they espouse, and of the divine necessity which they are under to be faithful to God and their brethren. Their views are not in accord with public sentiment and suddenly they are dragged before a cruel tribunal and charged that they are teaching crime. But the law of the land says: "No man shall be punished because of his sincere religious views or practices." And the judge before whom they are arraigned calls to them:

"Continue to declare that ye are doing the will of God, and in prison ye shall rest. But acknowledge that ye are proclaiming a man-made system, and pledge that ye will cease, and ye shall go free."

And one of them who are arraigned says:

"Oh, judge! I acknowledge thy supremacy. I will obey thy law. I will not advise others to break it. So long as thou and thy masters shall command, I will worship the graven image."

And then he takes his seat of amnesty, bought at the price of a people's freedom, and creeps from the presence of the court a man—nay, a creature—inviolable of his fellows, but haunted ever by the shadow of Judas. This is the traitor.

And when the other prisoner is arraigned he cries:

"This is my religion! God gave it to me! Ye may take my earthly life, but ye cannot sap my manhood nor strangle my conscience."

Then the judge, who has a mission to learn if these people are sincere, answers to the prisoner and for the far-off masters of the court:

"Thou canst not come within the law; because thou canst not claim sincerity. Thy brother and fellow-laborer hath just now recanted, and this is proof that thou art not sincere, but wickedly obstinate. If thy brother had with thee remained firm and immovable I might have believed in thy cause. But what man hath done man can do again. Therefore, recant or rest thou within the cold and lonely walls."

And the sun and moon of another month, stealing through iron-bound chinks of rock, see the patriot pacing a dismal cell.

The traitor calls himself a reformer. He is merely a coward. And of all the wretches whose presence taints the air of earth and heaven, the coward is the worst. Great Caesar said:

"The coward's fears make him die many times before his death.

"The valiant never taste of death but once.

"Of all the wonders that I yet have heard, it seems to me most strange that men should fear seeing that death, a necessary end, will come when it will come."

The traitor professes to believe that his act of betrayal will disrupt the cause which he deserts. This is the coward rebel's wish. How abjectly and miserably he fails! Sometimes the traitor lops from the sturdy trunk a straggling branch; but does the tree thrive less for that? Nay. The other twigs only bear blossoms the more redolent and fruit the more rosy. Sometimes the traitor tears away a cracked, a seamed, a shaling stone from the half-completed structure. What if a measure of disaster follow? Cannot the builder renew? And does he not choose better rock to bear the weight of his fair edifice? Sometimes the traitor only hastens the success which he seeks to avert; sometimes he delays the triumph against which he rebels. But always ultimately the car of destiny moves to its appointed end. And the cowardly betrayer who thought to stop its career by holding back with his puny arms is dragged by it to his miserable end, while his associates—dead or alive—go with it to the day of triumph.

There was once a man of mighty prowess, endowed from his first breath with a wondrous strength. When he grew to manhood, brutes, men and even armies fell in the dust at his feet. It had been divinely promised of him that he should be a marvel of strength, and that he should begin to deliver Israel out of the hands of the Philistines, and men and chains, and bolts and gates could not prevail against his manly, heroic lustiness. But there came a woman, with her soft, betraying touch. She caressed him and begged for love of her that he would reveal the secret of his miraculous strength. In a foolish moment he yielded; and then were his Jove-like locks shorn from his head; and he became a blind lackey, the serf of the Philistines. Delilah, the betrayer, with her traitorous kiss upon Samson's lips, and her traitorous whisper through the tent to his waiting enemy, could do what no thousand of open foes could accomplish. She made the proud, superb, perfect lion, a weak, whining whelp.

A mighty king had a well-beloved son to whom he had given and forgiven more than is usually bestowed upon one of human kind. And yet the son traitorously plotted the downfall and even the murder of his royal sire, and the usurpation of the throne. He might have succeeded in his cruel, parricidal treason, but that he himself was in turn betrayed and finally slain. And when the grand, great-hearted, poetic monarch learned that Absalom, the sweet, the beautiful, the dearly-beloved, was dead, he wept before all Israel, and as he went his sorrowful way thus he said:

"O, my son Absalom! My son, my son Absalom! Would God I had died for thee, O, Absalom, my son, my son!"

If that arrow-pierced heart of the betraying and betrayed Absalom could have quickened but for one moment, how much sharper than the physical death-thrust would it have felt King David's cry of infinite forgiveness! But the past was irrevocable. Israel's lordly king, the beloved of God, was moaning in anguish at the gate of the city; and the beautiful Absalom, with the fatal hair, the beloved of his royal sire, was lying dead in the pit in the deserted wood, with ignoble stone crushing his lifeless body.

War, murder, exile were powerless to bring such desolation to these royal hearts; but when Absalom, the forgiven murderer, became a betrayer infinite woe fell around the name of the dead prince and the bowed head of the living king. But though the great tenderness of the psalmist could compass remission for the crime of Absalom, the nation and history must be more harsh. When a subject, for self-agrandizement, rises against a king, he is a traitor, but he is a thrice-damned traitor when that monarch against whom he rebels is his own father.

Women are often false to their lovers; subjects to their sovereigns, and even sons to their sires. Divinity itself is no invulnerable shield against betrayal. A merciful Christ came to save mankind from torment and lift them into eternal radiance. He chose and trusted his apostles. He ministered to them and with them. They each could give a testimony that their Master was the anointed Savior, the Son of the living God. Persecution came upon Him like the storm cloud lowers upon the snowy mountain and enfolded Him in a gloomy embrace. The prospect of suffering with this God-like Master, whom he had served as purse-bearer when the danger was not great, made Judas weak unto betrayal. Cowardice and avarice worked together in the traitor heart. He kissed and cried:

"Master, master; Hail, master!"

Then he took his thirty pieces of silver, and with them he accepted a hatred of all mankind.

The compassionate Redeemer of the world hung upon the cruel cross with drops of agony upon His radiant brow, while His lips were wreathed in a pained but forgiving smile. And Judas, the traitor, already tasting the infernal torments, called in vain to stay the progress of his dread act. The black-hearted deed was done. The mocking trial had passed, sentence had been pronounced and executed; and then the betrayer groaned and flung the money from him as a sinful, burning thing which had no worth. Upon the bloody field he cast himself and his bowels gushed forth in useless contrition. He died upon the spot which his blood-money purchased for the burial of strangers and criminals in the land.

A brilliant general fell into disgrace with his military superiors and with the civil government of his country. He was impetuous and impatient of restraint. He was proud even to arrogance; he was extravagant even to the furthest limit of honesty. Other men had been advanced to higher posts—he felt himself degraded. His disbursements upon one of his heroic expeditions were still unsettled—he felt himself defrauded. A tyrant foe invested his country and sought to subjugate her people. He listened to the voice of ignoble avarice, of proud passion, of offended arrogance. With deliberate humiliation he sought a place of vast trust among the defenders of his country. He was appointed to the command of a great river fortress—the key to the interior, the storage house of munitions dearly bought, highly prized and absolutely necessary for the repulse of the invaders. He sold his rank, his honor and his interest in his native land. Just at the hour when his bargain was to be decided, his old friend and admirer, the noble commander-in-chief, said to him:

"My dear Arnold, I am now forming my army for active operations in the field. I want a fighting general. Come, I offer you the command of the left wing; at once the post of danger and of honor."

The traitor's face flushed with shame. He pleaded an old wound as reason why he should not go into the battlefield. Then he went to meet Andre and give the last assurance to his British masters that he was theirs, body and soul. By the interposition of America's sublime destiny his plot was discovered and foiled.

Arnold, the trator, crept away to escape a betrayer's death. He received his British uniform, his British gold, his British sword. He even came back with his mercenary horde to ravage, burn, destroy the little town in Connecticut where first he saw the light.

Years later, the great Frenchman, Talleyrand, met a distinguished-looking man at an English country inn. The two gentlemen were total strangers to each other, but they soon engaged in conversation upon the great question of democracy. When they were about to part, Talleyrand said to his companion:

"From your knowledge of all that relates to the United States, I am sure that you must be an American; my name is Talleyrand, and I am about to visit that country; perhaps you will be kind enough to give me letters of introduction to some of your friends there."

When the illustrious diplomat had finished his request, the other gentleman bowed low; and when he looked up his face, even to his lips, was gray as ashes. In a voice which sounded weird and cheerless as the moan of a November wind across a deserted marsh, he answered:

"Yes, I am an American. I was born in America. I have spent nearly all my life there. But I am probably the only American living who can say, 'I have not one friend in my native land.' No, not one. Sir, I am Benedict Arnold."

Talleyrand turned away from Arnold with a shudder, while the miserable traitor crept silently from the room.

When the unhappy wretch was dying in the midst of contempt and poverty he grew delirious. At the last moment of his ruined life he called to the devoted wife who had been the sharer of all his woe:

"Bring to me, I beg you, the epaulettes and sword knots which Washington gave me. Let me die in my old American uniform, the uniform in which I fought my battles. May my God forgive me for ever having worn any other!"

The greatest army which the world ever saw was gathered at Thermopylae more than two thousand years ago.

This was the Persian host assembled to do battle to the little band of Spartans. So intrepidly did the Greeks defend that sacred defile which gave entrance to their beloved land that Xerxes became out of all hope of forcing his way through the Spartan ranks. This was the moment for the traitor. Before the proud Xerxes could withdraw his myriads, the betrayer came—a Greek, a native of the sublime country. With servile words he flung himself at the feet of the gorgeous Persian. He offered to lead the invaders to an eminence overlooking the heroic defenders of Greece. His coward wish was granted; and when the next morning dawned Leonidas and his followers saw the spears and helmets of their foes flashing at them from the heights.

The rest is the most sublime tragedy of profane history.

And the traitor who betrayed the noblest souls of Greece to their death received his gold and precious stones. He might have died in the honest obscurity in which he was born and reared, but for his coward act.

Ah! such notoriety is purchased at too high a price. It would be better for a man to stand modestly and firmly before his country's foe; to fall unrecognized and without praise; to fill a grave over which the words shall stand cut into ineffaceable granite, "An unknown soldier, who died in defense of his country." Ah, yes! far better thus to fall and fill an unknown grave—to be unremembered forevermore of men—than to win a name of infamy, to fill the pages of history and be recollected of all human-kind while men shall hate a traitor.

A prophet of Almighty God came in the full sunlight of this great nineteenth century to lead men back to the glory of their Creator. His open enemies sought his life; but for years their murderous effort was in vain. He continued his sacred ministry upon the earth, with a power which was divine, until the hour for the traitorous kiss. When Bennett sinned and then through hate betrayed, the shadows of martyrdom began closing around our grand Prophet and Patriarch. When the Laws and the Higbees, the Fosters and the Cowles, became traitors and gave their efforts to aid the assassin persecutors of their sworn brother and leader; then, indeed, was the fate of Joseph and Hyrum sealed.

A governor of a sovereign state betrayed them to a cruel death; and Carthage repeated the divine tragedy of Calvary. The Prophet and Patriarch have passed to their glorious immortality; their names shall fill a thousand hymns of praise on earth and welcome in the heavens. But the traitors—miserable reptiles—will be scorned through countless ages.

It is always the same—prince or peasant, apostle or soldier—if a man be a traitor he is remembered for that and nothing more. If his station be lowly, he will seek in vain to hide his shame in his native obscurity; for it will burst forth in lurid, bloody letters to the sight of all the ages that shall come. If his station be exalted he may try and try again, but vainly, to cover his treason with the glory of his rank or wealth; for it will blacken all his brilliance and leave his place a plague spot; his fame, a grinning skeleton of dead despair; his career, an undying infamy.

But whatever may be the varied circumstances and results attending the wretched lives of traitors, there is this lesson which all humanity may draw: Successful or unsuccessful in their treason, betrayers are always execrated; successful or unsuccessful in their treason, they always live long enough to repent; successful or unsuccessful in their treason, they may never in this life know a waking moment when their own coward fears do not make them doubt the fidelity of every soul about them; successful or unsuccessful in their earthly treason, when they shall stand in that other world face to face with their betrayed friends, they will know that the blackest of all offenders are cowardly, assassin traitors.

At that great day Judas Iscariot will not be the only traitor to cry:

"It had been good for me that I had not been born!"

Every crisis at every period and with every nation exposes traitors just as it exalts to view patriots.

Ah! today we see Delilah, who betrays her husband; and Absalom, who is traitorous to his father: and Judas, who would betray his master for gold or popular approval; the Arnold who says, "It is a losing cause, and I may as well desert while there is yet time."

Yes, there are cowards and traitors in the land. Well, let there be, then, since such are necessary to make the sum of human existence—let them live as hyenas do.

Grand Harry the V., of England—superb, glorious Harry—stood once upon the shore of France with his little band of soldiers to face the countless legions of his hereditary foe. He heard a murmur as of fear; and turning to his nobles he looked at them from flashing eyes and spoke these very significant words:

"He which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart, his passport shall be made,
And crowns for convoy put into his purse;
We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us.
I speak not this as doubting any here!
For, did I but suspect a fearful man,
He should have leave to go away betimes;
Lest, in our need, he might infect another,
And make him of like spirit to himself.
If any such be here, as God forbid!
Let him depart, before we need his help."

A valiant man ought not to undergo, or tempt a danger but worthily, and by selected ways. He undertakes with reason, not by chance.—Ben Jonson.

Among all the accomplishments of life, none is more important than refinement: it is not, like beauty, a gift of nature, and can only be acquired by cultivation and practice.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

CUTTLE FISH HYPOCRISY.

When the cuttle fish wishes to hide his true position it opens its spleen bag of black gall and squirts the inky substance into the water around it. There are, in the so-called Christian world of the nineteenth century, a great many professed "preachers of righteousness," who take a delight (apparently so, from the numerous instances thereof,) in using the same methods, and going through the same manoeuvres as the cuttle fish, when they wish to turn the public mind against that system of religion erroneously known as "Mormonism." This "cuttle fish hypocrisy" on the part of our good "Christian" friends is neither sound or convincing. Preachers may rant and rage about "Mormonism;" they may howl and storm from their lofty pulpits; but after they have foamed and frothed, and their boiling anger is somewhat cooled, they look down upon this strange, peculiar sect called "Mormons," and behold! they grow, increase, and multiply in numbers. Let us reason for a few moments, Christian people, for we do not look down upon you with scorn, derision, contempt or hate. No! Our mission is one of peace and good will; our labor one of love, forgiveness, gentleness, and sweet charity. You know the Lord says through His servant Isaih, "Come now and let us reason together;" and, if the Father of all mercies will condescend to reason with His erring children on the earth, have we not the right, and should we not exercise the same, by reasoning among ourselves? Yes! for "wisdom and reason make us men." To reason then; would it not be a great deal better for Mr. Baptist to preach Baptistism; Mr. Methodist to declare Methodistism; than for either of them to fight against and endeavor to tear down "Mormonism?" Yes! And why? For this reason: They are commanded by the Lamb of God to let their light shine, and in fighting "Mormonism" they are railing at what they suppose to be darkness, and not exhibiting the light they profess to possess. As well might you shout to a man who is struggling in the deep, "You are drowning," and not throw out a life line, a buoy, or any other means by which he might be saved, as to rave and abuse the doctrines and teachings of "Mormonism" without casting forth your precious beams of holy light which you lay claim to have. Why do modern Christians forever continue to slander the Mormon people, and fail to give reason or Scripture for so doing? It is simply this, they, like the cuttle-fish, are desirous of concealing themselves, they are anxious to have the minds of the people turned from the shallowness of their own false systems, hence they belch forth wild anathemas against the Latter-day Saints, hiding themselves at the same time behind this sectarian fog of error, heresy, vile abuse, and misrepresentation. They define "Mormonism" as being a system of lust, false, heinous, treacherous and vile. Their definitions of the subject—Mormonism—puts us in mind of the student's answer, when asked by the zoological teacher, "What is a crab?" The student's answer was this, "The crab is a red fish which moves backward." "Very good," said the teacher, "your definition is correct but for three things. First the crab is not a fish; second, it is not red; and thirdly, it does not move backwards." So it is with those who would define for you, that "Mormonism" is a system of lust, vice, and fraud. They are as far from knowing the truthfulness of what they speak, as the boy in the zoology department; i. e., they know nothing of its virtues, divinity, and praiseworthiness. You cannot draw water from a dry well. If the Christian world has light we shall expect them to produce the same, that we might walk in the paths of righteousness. As yet they have failed to bring the light of the Holy Scriptures to bear upon us, but have gone astray from all righteous precedents, and have resorted to vile abuse, mob law, and scandalous reports. These are the cogent arguments, the powerful reasonings, the spotless eloquence of those who pose as "Truth Reflectors" in the van of modern Christendom. The mason generally uses the materials at hand for the erection of the structure he has contracted to build; so do preachers, therefore we are forced to admit that better material, sounder logic, more honorable eloquence, and God-like conduct are needed in the sects of distorted and turbulent Christendom today. Brother, you can never build up your own church by striving to pull down one with kindred objects like as you profess to have. If your own cannot stand on its miry foundation you should keep perfectly quiet and let it have an early and peaceful death.

WORDS OF CONDOLENCE.

A letter from President J. N. Miller, of the Louisiana Conference, dated May 6th, brings the sad news that three of his brothers fell victims in the Scofield explosion, as noted herein. Brother Miller says: "The news was indeed shocking to me, and to make it worse I was not there to render my assistance in that awful hour of trial. While I try to think that all is for the best, and recognize the hand of the Lord in all things, yet the trial is a severe one." Brother Miller has spent over two years in the Southern States Mission, and at all times he has been found at the post of duty, performing his part with a cheerful heart, and accomplishing the labors allotted him with an energetic will, and a faithful ambition to do the right. In this hour of anguish and sadness we extend unto this our beloved co-laborer our sympathy, love, and brotherly affection. May the Holy Spirit conduct him safely home, and may he be enabled to comfort, cheer, and console those of his household who now languish in sorrow and affliction, is the prayer and heart's desire of all who know him.

SCRIPTURAL PREACHING.

An exchange has the following under the above caption:

"Many are the sermons, prepared and preached with the best possible intent, which yet fail of being edifying in a degree that is comparable to the ability of the preacher. The sermon is clear, it is systematic, it is elegant, it is closely connected, and yet it falls to be highly edifying. What is the matter?"

Yes! Christian friends! What is the matter? Why is it that such "sermons," "elegant," "prepared and preached with the best possible intent," "clear," 'systematic," will "fail of being edifying in a degree that is comparable to the ability of the preacher?" This seems to be the one question of questions which puzzles the learned synods and theological students of the present day. Neither time nor space will permit of an elaborate elucidation of this all important question, and the purpose of our allusion to the above is merely to discover the methods used, the qualifications necessary, and the cheering results of those who lived in days of old—in the days which Biblical history bears record of. We shall find by searching the Scriptures that our Lord chose twelve Apostles, together with other officers placed in the church (I Cor. 12:28) to carry on the work of the ministry, and "preach the Gospel to every creature" (Mark 16:15). Continuing His instructions to them, He says, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high" (Luke 24:49). Having been "filled with the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2:4), they straightway began to tell men what to do to be saved (37-39 verses), and their words, seasoned with love, guided by the Spirit, and spoken with power and authority, sank deep into the hearts of those who were assembled together; had the desired effect for which they were uttered, for "the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." (41st verse.) Here then we see that the Lord required His servants to wait until such times as the Father would bestow upon them the gift of the Holy Ghost, and by being obedient to His divine command they were enabled to preach with power to the conviction and conversion of the honest in heart. "What is the matter?" asks our Christian friends, and the answer comes in plain, simple, explicit terms—a lack of the gift of the Holy Ghost. The Christian world will sing, "Holy Spirit, feed us till the Savior comes," and at the same time deny and reject the power and gifts of the spirit of Truth. Paul and Timothy were made able ministers of the word by the Spirit (II Cor. 3:6), knowing full well that by the wisdom of man the things of God could never be understood (I Cor. 1:21, 2:11). Neither the eloquent tongue of the great preacher, nor the skilled pen of the ready writer, will prove sufficient for the conversion of honest souls, but the one qualification absolutely necessary to bring about this blessed condition is the power of God—the Gift of the Holy Ghost. Peter says that in "old time" "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost;" today "wise men" speak as they have learned in their schools of worldly wisdom. In conclusion:

Let wisdom take her proper place;
And reason claim her own—
But give to God the power and grace
To make the Gospel known.

THE SCOFIELD DISASTER.

During the past week there was a sad calamity befell the people of Utah, and especially those of Scofield and immediate vicinity. The cause of this sad disaster, in which almost 300 souls were returned to that God who gave them life, was a terrific explosion in the coal mines. More than 225 bodies have been recovered, and these, for the most part, are horribly mutilated, being subjected to the fierce flames to which they were consigned. On May 3rd, President McKinley wired the following message to Gov. Wells, of Utah: "I desire to express my intense sorrow upon learning of the terrible calamity which has occurred at Scofield, and my deep sympathy with the wives, children and friends of the unfortunate victims of the explosion. William McKinley." We join the President of our glorious Republic in extending to those bereaved our sympathy, love, and affection for them in this their gloomy hour of bitter affliction, and we ask "our Father" in heaven to bestow upon them the sweet peaceful influence of His Holy Spirit, that their hearts may be comforted, their souls cheered, and the wounds of sorrow healed.

Decline of Churches.

The Presbyterian.

A great awakening is needed all over this land, and those who feel the least desire for it perhaps stand most in need of it. The tide of worldliness and false doctrine is coming in like a flood, and the only hope is that the Spirit of the Lord will lift up a standard against it. The revival that is needed is one that must reach into hearts, into homes, into churches, into business, into schools and colleges, and theological seminaries, and into the highest seats of power and authority in this nation.

We believe the day for it is drawing very near, for there are indications that it is approaching rapidly. The good news comes, of times of refreshing in many quarters, even now.

The Catholic News.

Two things are demonstrated by this appeal to the members of the Methodist church—first, that the Catholic practice of fasting and prayer is copied, and, second, that American Methodism, the strongest sect of Protestantism, is beginning to go down. The so-called evangelical Protestants have in the past not only criticized the Catholic habit of observing the Lenten season, but even practically denounced it. These Protestants, in their desire to be free from every possible taint of "Romish superstition," have made a religion that does not appeal to the higher nature of man. They have even refused to sanction the cross, the emblem of salvation. The result has been that their cold and undevotional churches have been steadily losing ground. Another reason for the decay that has set in is to be found in the surrender of Protestantism to the so-called "higher critics." One leading Methodist, Bishop Andrews, in an interview with a reporter last week, practically admitted this.

GLEANINGS.

Lumberton, May 4, 1900.

President Ben E. Rich, Chattanooga, Tenn.:

Dear Brother:—Yesterday I received my release, ticket, etc., all satisfactory to me, and I leave here today at 11 a. m. for the Valleys of Zion. I rejoice in very deed to be numbered among those who have performed honorable missions. It is with reluctance I bid my co-laborers adieu, for I can truthfully state my happiest hours in life have been those spent in the missionary field. But now that the Priesthood has seen fit and proper to present me wih an honorable release, I rejoice and will return home, hoping ever to be faithful in the discharge of every duty given me in the Church and Kingdom of God. Although I may be absent in person from the missionary field, yet I assure you my prayers will daily ascend to God in behalf of the Elders and this grand work of love.

I am thoroughly satisfied with my treatment at the commissary and take this opportunity of thanking you for the many accommodations shown me.

Praying God to be with you and all His chosen servants,

Your brother in Christ,
JAMES L. EDLEFSEN.

We are pleased with the spirit manifest by Elder Edlefsen and wish him success and prosperity in his labors in the future. He has manifested the true spirit of love and bears a humble testimony, as do all men who perform their duty unto God and their fellowmen.

By the instructions of President Rich and under his direction some changes in the work and management of the Ohio conference have been made. On April 29th, some new appointments were made in connection with the Conference Presidency, the former President, Geo. E. Maycock, having lately been released to return home.

Ohio was divided into two conferences—North and South Ohio—and the following named Elders will labor in their respective fields: H. Z. Lund, Ben L. Rich, T. M. Warnock, R. L. Shepherd, J. S. Cazier, E. M. Lee, J. M. Boothe, W. B. Parkinson, Jos. Sutherland, M. C. Miller, A. J. Stoddard, Jos. F. Nibley, C. D. W. Priday and J. W. Bently will labor in North Ohio; L. M. Nebeker, Ralph Cutler, Ben Hunsaker, S. A. Hanks, J. T. Wright, T. T. Durham, A. A. Paxman, Nelson Miller, David Sudworth, C. O. Cherry, E. J. Hunt, S. S. Smith, M. R. Fisher, Wilbur Sowards and A. B. Haskell will labor in South Ohio.

Elder H. Z. Lund has been appointed President of the North Ohio conference and L. M. Nebeker of the South Ohio conference.

For the present, until President Lund can visit the northern part of the state, locate his headquarters and arrange as to what parts he will assign his Elders to commence labors, they will report as formerly in the Ohio conference; but when he has arranged for the commencement of work in North Ohio, the Elders now laboring in South Ohio, who are to go north, will be notified to move and the work will then operate under the two heads.

Elder A. C. Strong has been appointed to preside over thte North Alabama conference, to succeed President T. H. Humphreys, who was honorably released to return home on the 1st inst. Under Elder Humphrey's management the North Alabama conference has been in a prosperous condition and the reports from that quarter speak well for the Elders. We know President Strong will have the love and good will of all the Elders, and look for a continuation of the splendid work done in the past.

Abstracts from Correspondence.

Thatcher, Ariz., April 20, 1900.

Editor Southern Star.

For the encouragement of new converts in Tennessee, my native state, and to all others where the Star may shed its light, please allow me space for the testimony of one who took passage on the old ship "Zion" sixty-seven years ago, and has faced the storms of persecution that have been hurled against the truth, and is still on deck. I was in the postoffice when the father of Elder Joseph Woolsey received his calendar, and having a dollar in my pocket, sent for your paper, which is very much appreciated. I received my third number last night and read it through before I laid it down.

Gazing upon the portrait of Joseph Smith brought to my mind that familiar face which I had beheld with so much pleasure in times now past. The last time I looked upon him he lay in death, a martyr to the cause of truth, which he, through inspiration, established; my feelings on that occasion I cannot describe. My testimony is that God is able and will in His own due time and way meet every emergency.

To the Star.

It is my desire to express my views in regard to the Latter-day Saints. Some three years ago I began to attend the meetings conducted by the Elders, also reading literature presented by them. I searched diligently and found their teachings true, harmonizing with the Bible. On the 26th of March, 1899, I was baptized by Elder A. T. Stewart, and from that time have had the Spirit of God to be with me, teaching me the ways of light and truth. I am trying to live up to my duties and follow in the straight path which leads to eternal happiness. We are unjustly persecuted, but that only causes our faith to be strengthened. May the Lord bless the faithful. Your sister in Christ,

Fanney E. Prescott.

Language and thought are inseparable. Words without thoughts are dead sounds; thoughts without words are nothing. To think is to speak low; to speak is to think aloud.—Max Muller.

I have somewhere seen it observed that we should make the same use of a book as a bee does of a flower; she steals sweets from it, but does not injure it.—Colton.

CHARITY AND SPIRITUAL GIFTS.

Discourse Delivered By President George Q. Cannon, at Salt Lake City.

I have great sympathy for these returning Elders, for I know how I felt upon my return from my first mission, and being asked to speak to a congregation of Saints in the old Tabernacle. I had been absent five years, preaching in a foreign language. I had had a great deal of experience on that mission in preaching, baptizing, organizing branches and conferences, and laboring in every direction. But when I came back and was called to the stand, it seemed as though the bottom of my memory dropped out, I was so frightened at facing so many people. I could scarcely recollect anything, and, having been speaking in a foreign language, it was difficult to speak in my mother tongue. I had translated the Book of Mormon into that language and had become thoroughly familiar with it—so familiar that all my thoughts and my secret prayers were in that language, instead of my mother tongue. I suppose that has been the case with these Elders who have come from Germany. No doubt, they have done their thinking as well as their talking in German; and therefore they probably have had to translate their thoughts into English, as I had to do. I sympathize very deeply with Elders, whether they have been preaching in the English language or in a foreign language, when they come back and have to face a congregation like this. It is terrifying to some men, though some can face it better than others. I feel that these brethren deserve our sympathy. We cannot form as good an idea of their labors as we could if we were better acquainted with them or they with us. I remember just after my return there was a meeting being held in the Seventies' Hall, and a great number of Elders were present. President Young, President Kimball, President Wells and several of the Twelve were there. It was a general testimony meeting, and the Elders were called on to speak. I rose and attempted to speak in English. I said, in the course of my remarks, that I could not express myself with the fluency that I desired, having been accustomed to speak in a foreign language for a good while. President Young spoke up and said, "Brother George, speak in the language you are used to." I commenced to speak in that language, and it was like hoisting a flood-gate—the words came out in a torrent. I have no doubt that these brethren, if we called upon them to speak in German, would speak with a good deal of fluency and much more ease.

Spiritual Gifts to Be Sought After.

I have felt this afternoon that I would like to call the attention of the Saints to some points of doctrine, if time permitted. I will read a portion of the 12th chapter of I Corinthians:

Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant.

Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led.

Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.

Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit.

And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord.

And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all.

But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.

For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit;

To another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit;

To another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues;

But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.

For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ

Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular.

And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.

Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles?

Have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?

But covet earnestly the best gifts: and yet shew I unto you a more excellent way.

I will read a portion of the next chapter (13th), for the subject is continued here:

Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.

And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing.

And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up.

Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil;

Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth;

Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away.

For we know in part, and we prophesy in part.

But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.

These last words declare that prophecies shall fail, tongues shall cease, and knowledge shall vanish away, because "we know in part, and we prophesy in part; but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." We shall then not need tongues, we shall not need prophecy, because we shall have a fulness of knowledge. But charity, Paul says, never faileth.

Purpose of Spiritual Gifts.

I feel and have felt for some time that as Latter-day Saints our attention should be called more than I think it has been of late to those gifts which God has placed in His Church for the benefit of His Saints. For some time past I have been led, in speaking to the Saints at various places, to dwell upon this subject. We cannot be the people that God designs we should be, unless we seek after and obtain these spiritual gifts. It should be the constant prayer of all the Latter-day Saints for the Lord to give us those gifts that are suited to our condition, and that will make us perfect, because the bestowal of these gifts is for the express purpose of making those who are entitled to them perfect before the Lord. Through the Fall we have inherited very many weaknesses and infirmities. We are all more or less conscious of them, especially if we come unto the Lord in humility. He shows us our imperfections and points out to us our defects in character, by His Spirit. We see some very glaring defects in ourselves. This being the case, it should be our aim to seek unto the Lord for gifts that will remedy these defects. If I am an unwise man (and all are—some more than others), what gift should I seek for? I should plead constantly with the Lord to give me the gift of wisdom. I may be deficient in discernment, and easily led astray. False spirits arise and make this manifest constantly. We are surrounded by visible agencies, many of them very bad, and if we yield to them they have influence over us. Influenced by these wrong spirits, men and women will talk to us and strive to bring us under the same influence. Is it not, therefore, a good thing to have the gift of discerning of spirits? Is it not a blessed thing that God has placed in His Church and promised unto the members thereof this precious gift, whereby they can discern false spirits when brought in contact with them? Assuredly it is. It is a gift that should be sought for by all of us. There are none so perfect but they can derive benefit from the possession of this gift.

Fasting for a Purpose.

I have often been struck at our fast meetings with the thought that the Latter-day Saints ought to have a purpose when they come together fasting and praying. One day a month is set apart by the Church as a day of fasting, of prayer, of humiliation before the Lord. When we get together there should be in all our hearts a desire that our prayers may ascend to the Lord unitedly for certain definite objects. Of course, we are all interested in Zion and in the great cause of God. We desire righteousness to prevail, the will of God to be done. We can all pray unitedly for this great object, and we should do so when we come together in this capacity. But I may have secret desires, secret wants; I may have thoughts that none but God knows. Therefore, I should petition Him in secret that He will grant unto me that secret desire of my heart. And at such times, it seems to me that our prayers, offered in humility and accompanied by faith, are likely to be heard and answered; in fact, I know that they will be heard. This also is a good time for us to seek for these gifts of the Spirit. Do we not all need them? Is there any one among us that does not need these gifts? I need prophecy. How can I magnify my office, how can I stand in my calling, how can I do my duty to the Latter-day Saints in the office to which God has called me, unless I have the gift of prophecy? That gift I should seek to have it increase upon me. The gift of revelation should increase within me. I should seek for the gift of wisdom, to have it increase within me; the gift of knowledge also. Should we not all do so? I need these gifts; you need them. You need to have patience, long-suffering, forbearance. A presiding officer in the Church needs the gift of instruction, the gift of counsel, and, when needed, the gift of reproof and warning. He needs to understand the plan of salvation, and what constitutes godliness; he needs to have the gift of healing, and the gift of discernment of spirits. We all need to have the gift of a broken heart and a contrite spirit; for that is the offering that is acceptable unto the Lord. When we come to Him with broken hearts and contrite spirits He hears us, and He accepts the offering. It is the offering that He asks at our hands.

Purpose of the Gift of Tongues.

So I might go on and enumerate gifts that we need. If I were called on a mission to a people speaking a foreign language, I should pray constantly for the gift of tongues, and for the gift of the interpretation of tongues. I obtained that gift a few days after I reached the land where I was sent; I understood all that was said to me. I also received help in acquiring the language. I know that such a gift is within the reach of those who seek for it. It is not alone given to us to get up in our testimony meetings and speak in tongues and somebody interpret it. That is very comforting and a very desirable gift, when it is governed properly. It appeals to many people; they thing it is a wonderfully great gift. But in my experience it is a gift that is apt to lead people astray, unless it is properly controlled. Under its influence people sometimes give way to a wrong spirit. We have known in our experience many instances where branches of the Church, especially newly organized branches, have got into difficulty through this spirit taking possession of them and there not being wisdom enough in the presiding officer to control it. This gift, as I have said, is a desirable gift; but it is especially desirable for our Elders who go to foreign lands. They should seek for it with all earnestness and faith. I testify to you that there is such a gift, and there is such a gift as the gift of interpretation of tongues. So in relation to all of these precious gifts. Why, what is our religion if we divest it of these gifts and we do not possess them? It is a powerless thing. But with the bestowal of these gifts, with the Lord giving them to us according to our needs, each one in his or her place, there is power in our religion.

Gift of Government.

The sisters have as much right to these gifts as the brethren. They have the right to go unto God and ask Him in the name of Jesus to bestow upon them such gifts as they need. How good a gift it would be for a mother to have the gift of governing her children, the gift of wisdom to train them and to point out to them the path that they should pursue. The mother who seeks for these gifts and exercises them before the Lord, she will have great joy in her children and will get amply rewarded for all the faith that she has exercised and the prayers she has offered in their behalf. For what is there that brings greater happiness to human beings than to see their offspring doing right and walking humbly before the Lord? Therefore mothers should seek to obtain such gifts as are suited to their condition and circumstances. The Lord said to Joseph in the beginning, "Be patient in thine afflictions: for thou shalt have many." So it is with all of us. We have great afflictions from time to time. It seems to be necessary that we should be tried and proved to see whether we are full of integrity or not. In this way we get to know ourselves and our own weaknesses; and the Lord knows us, and our brethren and sisters know us. Therefore, it is a precious gift to have the gift of patience, to be good-tempered, to be cheerful, to not be depressed, to not give way to wrong feelings and become impatient and irritable. It is a blessed gift for all to possess. The gift of integrity also is a splendid gift. Men may do many wicked things, and repent of them, and the Lord will forgive them, if they have integrity. I value that gift exceedingly. I have seen men that in many respects were anything but what they ought to be as Latter-day Saints, but they were full of integrity. They would not do anything to betray the work of God. Under all circumstances they were full of integrity. I have met, as you have, such characters; and I have felt that such men, notwithstanding their weaknesses, will be blessed of the Lord. The Lord will forgive their sins and He will bless them because of their integrity. Therefore the gift of integrity is a good thing. It is good also to have steadfastness, valor and courage in the hour of trial and danger—in the hour when men's lives are in danger.

Beautiful Gift of Charity.

Before I close I will call your attention to what is said about charity. Let us dwell on this glorious gift. What beautiful characters we should have if we possessed this precious gift of charity. Let us read and see what the Apostle says about it. The same things can be found also in the Book of Mormon, in almost identically the same language.

"Charity suffereth long, and is kind." Is not that a lovely trait of human character?

"Charity envieth not." There is no envy in a man or a woman who possesses charity. They do not envy their fellow beings anything that they may possess.

"Charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up." Charity never boasteth. I often think of that. If I feel inclined to boast a litle, I am checked immediately by the reflection that that is not charity. When we are filled with charity we are not vaunting ourselfev, we are not boasting of our good deeds, we are not puffed up, we are not telling people what mighty men we are, or how much good we have done. Charity does not indulge in this.

"Doth not behave itself unseemly." It is modest.

"Seeketh not her own." That is the spirit of the Savior. He said, "If any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also;" if they wanted us to go with them a mile, to go with them two miles. It is not always quarreling and contending for "rights." Persons who have the gift of charity are not always afraid that they are going to lose something, and that they must look after their "rights." You see that spirit frequently manifested.

"It is not easily provoked." Always good tempered; does not lose patience.

"Thinketh no evil." It does not indulge in evil thoughts concerning others. It looks upon their conduct in the best light possible.

"Rejoiceth not in iniquity." Takes no pleasure in iniquity, but rejoices in that which is good—"rejoiceth" as the Apostle says, "in the truth."

"Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things." These are blessed qualities.

My brethren and sisters, what a precious and a glorious gift is this gift of charity Would not we be perfect Saints if we had it? Would not this be heaven if we exercised it? Would not our houses be habitations of peace and joy? Would not the angels delight to be with us? I am sure they would. And why should we not possess it? What is there to prevent it? God has given to us the promise that we can have this gift of charity if we seek for it. That promise never faileth no more than charity faileth. We can obtain it, and it will beautify and adorn all our characters. If our children possess it, how beautiful they will be in every moral attribute! Let us seek for it, let us cultivate it everywhere. Let us read about this occasionally, and not be quarrelsome, not be fault-finding, not be slandering, not be back-biting, not be saying evil of each other. That is not of Christ; but charity is the pure love of Christ. God, we are told, is love. One of the last injunctions of the Apostle John was, "little children, love one another." If men do wrong to me, what must I do? Must I resent it and fight back? No; I must bear it patiently. I must suffer long, and be kind. I must not lose my temper and think that I must get even with them. That is not the spirit of the Gospel. Christ has taught us very differently. As Latter-day Saints, we should exercise those qualities and gifts that He has commanded us to seek for.

Brethren and sisters, God bless you and fill you with His Holy Spirit. Let us contend earnestly for the gifts of the Spirit of God. When we notice a defect in our characters, let us ask God with all the faith we can to give us the gift that will correct that, that we may be perfect: for Jesus says: "Be ye perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect," showing that it is possible for us, even in our fallen and low condition, to become perfect in our sphere. That God may grant unto us this, and our hearts with this desire and this great faith, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

APPRECIATE THOUGHTFULNESS.

Salt Lake City, Utah, May 3.—Hon. William McKinley, Washington, D. C.—Your telegram, expressing your generous sympathy for the families and friends of our fellow-citizens who have so unexpectedly met death in the mine explosion at Scofield, is received and appreciated. Sorrowing Utah thanks you for your thoughtful interest. HEBER M. WELLS, Governor.

From Congressman King.

The following dispatch has been received by Gov. Wells, and indicates that Washington stands ready to help:

Washington, D. C., May 3.—Gov. Heber M. Wells, Salt Lake:—I mourn with Utah's people in this sorrowful hour. Please express my sincere sympathy with the suffering families. All classes here deeply sympathize with the bereaved ones. Evening Star offers to accept and transmit contributions. Can we do anything here? WILLIAM H. KING.

France Sympathizes.

Washington, May 3.—The French ambassador called on President McKinley and Secretary Hay today and conveyed the condolence of the French republic to the President of the United States over the mine disaster in Utah. He handed the secretary the following personal letter on the subject:

"Embassy of the French Republic in the United States.

"Washington, D. C., May 3, 1900.

"Mr. Secretary of State:

"The President of the French republic has heard of the terrible catastrophe which has taken place in Utah. He has instructed me to be his interpreter near the President of the United States of America, and to assure him of the sympathy which he feels on account of this sad event.

"In transmitting to me the expression of the sentiments of President Loubet, M. Delcasse, minister of foreign affairs, likewise instructs me to convey to the American government the expression of the profound sympathy of the government of the republic.

"Be pleased to accept, Mr. Secretary of State, the assurances of my high consideration. JULES CAMBON."

Late this afternoon a dispatch was sent to Ambassador Porter, at Paris, directing him to acknowledge receipt by President McKinley of President Loubet's message and to convey to M. Loubet the appreciation of the President at the expression of sympathy of the French government.

Prayer for the Dead.

Deseret News.

The question of prayers for the dead seems to be coming to the front in some parts of the Protestant world. A Baptist periodical, quoted by the Literary Digest, takes the view that the departed ones are safe and blessed and need not our prayers, but that for our own consolation, prayers may be offered for them. In this connection it quotes approvingly this prayer written by the late Mr. Gladstone:

"O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, in whose embrace all creatures live, in whatsoever world or condition they be, we beseech Thee for him whose name and dwelling place and every need Thou knowest. Lord, vouchsafe him light and rest, peace and refreshment, joy and consolation, in Paradise, in the companionship of saints, in the presence of Christ, in the ample folds of Thy great love.

"Grant that his life may unfold itself in Thy sight and find a sweet employment in the spacious fields of eternity. If he hath ever been hurt or maimed by any unhappy word or deed of ours, we pray Thee of Thy great pity to heal and restore him, that he may serve Thee without hindrance.

"Tell him, O gracious Lord, if it may be, how much we love him and miss him, and long to see him again, and if there be ways in which he may come, vouchsafe him to us as a guide and guard, and grant us a sense of his nearness in such degree as Thy laws permit.

"If in aught we can minister to his peace, be pleased of Thy love to let this be, and mercifully keep us from every act which may deprive us of the sight of him as soon as our trial time is over, or mar the fullness of our joy when the end of the days hath come.

"Pardon, O gracious Lord and Father, whatsoever is amiss in this our prayer, and let Thy will be done, for our will is blind and erring, but Thine is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

That reveals the position of one of the greatest thinkers of the age on this question. It shows that the ordinary channels of philosophy and theology convey no certain knowledge of the state of the departed. It indicates also the need of human nature to feel that the ties that bind hearts together are not severed with death. Why, then, is mankind so slow in turning to revelation for the light needed?

If no other principle were revealed through the Prophet Joseph than that by which the dead and living are joined together across the chasm of death, that alone would place him among the foremost of men of God. Were there no other doctrine of "Mormonism" than this, it would be a perfect justification for its existence, for by it a new light has been shed on the world, for which the noble spirits of the earth have been praying. But there are other principles as grand and as far-reaching as the one relating to the salvation of the dead. They have emanated from the Eternal Source of all truth.

An Editor's Mistake.

Editors have their troubles. One of these men, who presides over the destinies of a western newspaper, is mourning the loss of two subscribers. Number one wrote asking how to raise his twins safely, while the other wanted to know how he might rid his orchard of grasshoppers. The answers went forward by mail, but by accident, the editor put them into the wrong envelopes, so that the man with the twins received the answer: "Cover them carefully with straw and set fire to it, and then the little pests, after jumping in the flames for a few minutes, will be speedily settled." And the man with the grasshoppers was told to "give castor oil and rub their gums with a bone."—Ex.

Postal Charges in 1792.

Kansas City Journal.

The first law of congress, fixing rates of postage went into effect on June 1, 1792, with rates as follows:

Not exceeding thirty miles, 6 cents.

Over thirty and not exceeding sixty miles, 8 cents.

Over sixty and not exceeding 100 miles, 10 cents.

Over 100 and not exceeding 150 miles, 12½ cents.

Over 150 and not exceeding 200 miles, 15 cents.

Over 200 and not exceeding 250 miles, 17 cents.

Over 250 and not exceeding 350 miles, 20 cents.

Over 350 and not exceeding 450 miles, 22 cents.

Over 450 miles, 25 cents.

It would seem that the postmasters of that day must have been greatly perplexed in adjusting the rates on each letter under such a diversified schedule as the above. The weight limit was one ounce (single), but a single letter was a single sheet; two sheets double; three sheets triple; four sheets a quadruple letter, even if the whole did not exceed an ounce.

HE LIVES LONG WHO LIVES WELL.

Would'st thou live well? The only means are these—
'Bove Galon's diet, or Hippocrates;
Strive to live well; tread in the upright ways,
And rather count thy actions than thy days;
Then thou hast lived enough amongst us here,
For every day well spent I count a year.
Live well, and then, how soon soe'er thou die,
Thou art of age to claim eternity.
But he that outlives Nestor, and appears
To have passed the date of gray Methuselah's years,
If he his life to sloth and sin doth give,
I say he only was—he did not live.
—Randolph.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN'S ANECDOTES.

The Silver Hook.

Doctor Franklin, observing one day a hearty young fellow, whom he knew to be an extraordinary blacksmith, sitting on the wharf, bobbing for little mud-cats and eels, he called to him, "Ah, Tom, what a pity 'tis you don't fish with a silver hook." The young man replied, "he was not able to fish with a silver hook." Some days after this the doctor passing that way, saw Tom out at the end of the wharf again, with his long pole bending over the flood. "What, Tom," cried the doctor, "have you not got the silver hook yet?" "God bless you, doctor," cried the blacksmith, "I'm hardly able to fish with an iron hook." "Poh! poh!" replied the doctor, "go home to your anvil; and you'll make silver enough in one day to buy more and better fish than you would catch here in a month."

True Independence.

Soon after his establishment in Philadelphia, Franklin was offered a piece for publication in his newspaper. Being very busy, he begged the gentleman would leave it for consideration. The next day the author called and asked his opinion of it. "Why, sir," replied Franklin, "I am sorry to say that I think it highly scurrilous and defamatory. But being at a loss on account of my poverty whether to reject it or not, I thought I would put it to this issue—at night, when my work was done, I bought a two-penny loaf, on which with a mug of cold water I supped heartily, and then wrapping myself in my great coat, slept very soundly on the floor till morning; when another loaf and a mug of water afforded me a pleasant breakfast. Now, sir, since I can live very comfortably in this manner, why should I prostitute my press to personal hatred or party passion, for a luxurious living?"

One cannot read this anecdote of our American sage without thinking of Socrates' reply to King Archilaus, who had pressed him to give up preaching in the dirty streets of Athens, and come and live with him in his splendid courts: "Meal, please your majesty, is a half penny a peck at Athens, and water I can get for nothing."

THE DEAD.

Sister Tinsley, wife of Samuel Tinsley, of Charleston, Tenn., on March the 11th, was summoned home by Him whose wisdom is infinite and whose mercy is perfect.

Sister Tinsley was not a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, but she was so kind and hospitable to the Elders that her name is written in love upon their hearts. She leaves a husband with whom she lived faithful and true for fifty-six years, and also a noble and an honorable family of children. We sympathize with the bereaved father and children and pray God to comfort and cheer their hearts and to give them light and knowledge to lead them through life, that they may be prepared to meet their loved one on the other shore. Every Elder who is acquainted with these kind and worthy people join in saying from the center of their hearts, "God bless Brother Tinsley and his dear children, and may they feel that their darling loved one has gone to rest in peace."

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF PRESIDENT LORENZO SNOW.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

PRESIDENT LORENZO SNOW.

"God, that made the world and all things therein," hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth; and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." Acts xvii, 24,28.

It was no accident that Abraham, Moses, Samuel, Isaiah, Jeremiah, the Messiah, Joseph Smith and all other prophets and leaders of men in the history of the world, were born in the age and at the particular time in their respective ages, when they were. The Father designed it thus. "Determined the times before appointed," each one coming when his God-given graces and abilities qualified him for the events to transpire and the circumstances with which he would have to deal in this mortal state. So when the Lord was about to establish this great and last dispensation of the Gospel among men, He sent forth a coterie of men, whose lives, characters and deeds have proven them to be of the very choicest spirits which ever came forth from the bosom of the Father.

Among the foremost and noblest of these noblemen of God is the subject of this sketch, President Lorenzo Snow. He was born in Mantua, Portage county, Ohio, April 3, 1814, the eldest son of Oliver and Rosetta L. Pettibone Snow. His parents were of the old Puritan stock, and, naturally enough, from them he inherited the sterling qualities which characterized the early promoters of civil and religious liberty in this land. Ohio, at that time, was considered in the extreme west and although President Snow was reared upon a farm in the "wild west," and inured to hard manual labor, he early exhibited a strong desire to secure a good education and was often found by those seeking his company "hid up with his book." He also entertained an inclination to military tactics and gave them considerable attention. His faithful sister, Eliza R., made him a suit of uniform. She became somewhat alarmed at her brother's aspirations, lest he should become a military man, become identified with the armies of his country and end his career upon the gory battlefield. Her anxiety, however, was relieved when she found him turning his attention more completely to a collegiate course of education. He attended the celebrated Oberlin college. At that time it was strictly Presbyterian. In the meantime his sister Eliza had identified herself with the Latter-day Saints. He would write home and ask her many questions regarding the subject of religion, on one occasion stating in a letter that if he found nothing better than he did at Oberlin college, "goodbye to all religions." During these years the Saints were building up the city of Kirtland and regions round about, which were not very distant from the home of the Snow family. This brought them in close contact with the Latter-day Saints. On one occasion while journeying to Kirtland he fell into the company of Elder David W. Patten, who engaged him in conversation on religious matters. The ideas advanced by Elder Patten were both reasonable and Scriptural. They made such a lasting and favorable impression upon the youthful seeker after truth, that he constantly meditated upon them until he became fully convinced of the truth and embraced the Gospel. In Kirtland he joined the Hebrew class and applied his mind closely to the study. He became intimately acquainted with the Prophet Joseph Smith, and as his association increased, so did his love and admiration for the Prophet of God. In June, 1836, he was baptized by Apostle John H. Boynton.

Upon joining the church he was filled with the desire to obtain a testimony for himself and while pondering upon the promised witness, the adversary sought to darken his mind and weaken his faith. While in this frame of mind he retired to a secret place and sought the Lord in humble prayer. The following is a description of the result, given in his own words:

"I had no sooner opened my lips in an effort to pray than I heard a sound just above my head like the rustling of silken robes; and immediately the Spirit of God descended upon me, completely enveloping my whole person, filling me from the crown of my head to the soles of my feet, and oh, the joyful happiness I felt! No language can describe the almost instantaneous transition from a dense cloud of spiritual darkness into a refulgence of light and knowledge, as it was at that time imparted to my understanding.

I received a perfect knowledge that God lives, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and of the restoration of the Holy Priesthood, and the fullness of the Gospel. It was a complete baptism—a tangible immersion in the heavenly principle or element, the Holy Ghost; and even more physical in its effects upon every part of my system than the immersion by water."

President Lorenzo Snow is now 86 years of age, and has been true and absolutely undeviating from that testimony these sixty-four years. He has traveled tens of thousands of miles in bearing witness of it. He has suffered privation, hardships, persecution, laid down his life in the Pacific Ocean, and by the power of God took it up again, suffered bonds and imprisonment, yet through it all he bears the same testimony given over sixty-four years ago. We ask, where does the Old or the New Testament produce a witness whose testimony is stronger, worthy of more respect or more incontrovertible than the testimony recorded above given to the Prophet Lorenzo Snow? This testimony will endure forever and be presented at the bar of Jehovah, a witness against those who have heard and rejected it. Subsequent to the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, President Snow attended meetings there with the Prophet of the Lord, and other leading men of the Church. He enjoyed the rich outpouring of the Holy Spirit in that sacred edifice. During the trouble and apostacy in Kirtland, Elder Snow remained faithful and true to the Prophet Joseph Smith. In the spring of 1837 he performed his first mission, traveling in the state of Ohio "without purse or script."

In the year 1838 the Snow family joined the Saints in Missouri, and there witnessed the scenes of mobocracy enacted in that state. From Missouri he went on his second mission, this time to Kentucky, Illinois and Missouri. While in Kentucky he learned of the expulsion of the Saints from Missouri, and walked 500 miles to Kirtland, Ohio. The two winters following Elder Snow was occupied in Portage county, Ohio, as a school teacher, in which profession he was very successful.

In the spring of 1840 Elder Snow went on a mission to England. It was prior to his mission in England that President Snow had revealed unto him this glorious principle, "As man now is, God once was; as God now is, man may be."

This sublime truth was not then known to the Latter-day Saints. It had not been taught by the Prophet, and Brother Snow wisely kept the matter to himself, except that he confided in his sister, Eliza R. Snow and President B. Young. The latter also cautioned him not to confide the matter to others. He presided over the London Conference; besides laboring in Manchester, Liverpool and Birmingham. Upon returning home in 1843 he was welcomed by the Prophet Joseph. Returning to Nauvoo, President Young informed Brother Snow that the doctrine he had mentioned concerning God and man was ture, the Prophet Joseph Smith having taught it to the people. While in England President Snow became one of the Presidency of the British Mission. Until this time Elder Snow was unmarried, his intellectual and spiritual pursuits having excluded from his mind to a very considerable degree the subject of matrimony. While on a brief mission to Ohio Elder Snow heard of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Previous to the Prophet's death he taught Elder Snow the doctrine of celestial marriage, including a plurality of wives. He left with the exodus from Illinois, when the companies for emigration were organized by President Young, and he became the Captain of Ten. At Mt. Pisgah, a temporary resting place for the Saints, Elder Snow was appointed to preside. Here he distinguished himself as a leader by organizing and planning to alleviate the sufferings of the people and to provide for their maintenance. He moved to Salt Lake Valley in the fall of 1848. In his new location he was among the most industrious and cheerful in the performance of every labor and duty incidental to building a city in the desert.

Early in 1849 he was called to the Apostleship and was ordained a member of the Council of the Twelve Feb. 12, 1849. As an Apostle of the Lord President Lorenzo Snow has labored with ability and energy since his ordination, covering a period of over half a century, and with his present vitality bids fair to continue his labors in mortality for several years to come; Lord, grant that he may. Notwithstanding the marked ability with which the Lord has endowed him, the wisdom and efficiency which have ever characterized his labors, his humility and meekness are such that on one occasion himself and the late President Franklin D. Richards went to President Young and offered to yield their places in the Quorum of the Twelve, if he felt disposed to accept their resignation and fill their positions with other men. Of course such a proposition was not accepted. At the October conference in 1849 President Snow was called on a mission to Italy. En route he visited London and Paris, arriving in Genoa on the 25th of June, 1850. Among the Catholics Elder Snow and companions made little progress, but in the Piedmont valley they labored with considerable success among the Protestant Waldenses. In the prosecution of missionary work Elder Snow issued a number of pamphlets which were as widely circulated in their mission as circumstances would permit. The "Voice of Joseph," "The Ancient Gospel Restored," and "The Only Way to be Saved" were written by Elder Snow. He caused the Book of Mormon to be translated into Italian and under his direction the Gospel was sent to Switzerland, where good success attended the Elders, and since which time hundreds have been gathered from that land. President Snow was so thoroughly filled with the spirit of preaching the Gospel to all nations, that he planned for missions to extend into Greece, Turkey, Russia and Malta; at the latter place many converts were made. He also sent missionaries to Calcutta and Bombay, where branches of the church were organized. At Malta, journeying eastward, he was released to return home, where he arrived July 30, 1852.

The following year he was elected to the Utah Legislature, a position he occupied for twenty-nine years, ten of which he presided over the Council.

In 1853 he was called by President Young to remove to Box Elder county, and locate fifty families there. He cheerfully consented and for forty years made his home in Brigham City, where he has been the leading spirit, not only in spiritual matters, but in every laudable enterprise looking to the development of the country and the growth of the people in every desirable way. He also presided for years over the Box Elder stake of Zion. He organized the Brigham City Mercantile and Manufacturing association, under which several industries were brought into successful operation, such as a woolen mill, tannery, shoe factory, hat factory, sheep and cattle herd, cheese factory, saw mills, tailor, furniture, black smith, wagon and tin shops. The products of these industries in 1875 amounted in value to $260,000. The enterprises were conducted as nearly as possible under the existing conditions in the spirit of the United Order. The country was unbroken, the resources undeveloped, and when these things are taken into account it will be readily seen that the task was not an easy one. Although the organization became extinct, and the industries ceased, President Snow fully demonstrated the fact that under a more perfect condition of the people spiritually the United Order is an absolute possibility. In 1864 President Snow, with Elders Ezra T. Benson, Jos. F. Smith and other Elders went on a brief business mission to the Sandwich Islands. While going to shore, the small boat carrying them was capsized and President Snow was thrown into the sea. When rescued he was to all appearances dead. The brethren exercised great faith and worked over him for more than an hour, when life came back to his body.

He concluded his mission in the Island successfully and returned to resume his labors in Zion. In 1872, he, with his sister Eliza R. and other tourists, visited the land of Palestine and dedicated from the summit of Mt. Olivet the land for the gathering of Israel in the last days.

The interesting account of their visit will be found in their letters published in book form, entitled "The Palestine Tourist." Upon his return home President Snow was active in his calling, frequently visiting the settlements of the Saints in company with President Brigham Young and other leading men.

During the crusade against the Saints under the Edmunds-Tucker act, President Snow personally suffered the persecution incidental to those times.

Under the segregation process inaugurated by the Utah courts but afterward reversed by the United States supreme court, President Snow was convicted and sentenced to fine and imprisonment in the Utah penitentiary. He served eleven months without a murmur or complaint. Before being sentenced he was offered his liberty if he would do violence to his own conscience by making a certain promise. The following is his address to the court:

Your honor, I wish to address this court kindly, respectfully, and especially without giving offense. During my trials, under three indictments, the court has manifested courtesy and patience, and I trust your honor has still a liberal supply, from which your prisoner at the bar indulges the hope that further exercise of those happy qualities may be anticipated. In the first place, the court will please allow me to express my thanks and gratitude to my learned attorneys for their able and zealous efforts in conducting my defense.

In reference to the prosecuting attorney, Mr. Bierbower, I pardon him for his ungenerous expressions, his apparent false coloring, and seeming abuse. The entire lack of evidence in the case against me on which to argue, made that line of speech the only alternative in which to display his eloquence; yet, in all his endeavors, he failed to cast more obloquy on me than was heaped upon our Savior.

I stand in the presence of this court a loyal, free-born American citizen; now, as ever, a true advocate of justice and liberty. "The land of the free and the home of the brave" has been the pride of my youth and the boast of my riper years. When abroad in foreign lands, laboring in the interest of humanity, I have pointed proudly to the land of my birth as an asylum for the oppressed.

I have ever felt to honor the laws and institutions of my country, and, during the progress of my trials, whatever evidence has been introduced has shown my innocence. But, like ancient Apostles when arraigned in Pagan courts, and in the presence of apostate Hebrew judges, though innocent, they were pronounced guilty. So, myself, an Apostle who bears witness by virtue of his calling and the revelations of God, that Jesus lives—that He is the Son of God, though guiltless of crime, here in a Christian court I have been convicted through the prejudice and popular sentiment of a so-called Christian nation.

In ancient times the Jewish nation and the Roman empire stood versus the Apostles. Now, under an apostate Christianity, the United States of America stands versus Apostle Lorenzo Snow.

Inasmuch as frequent reference has been made to my Apostleship, by the prosecution, it becomes proper for me to explain some essential qualifications of an Apostle.

First, an Apostle must possess a divine knowledge, by revelation from God, that Jesus lives—that He is the Son of the living God.

Secondly, he must be divinely authorized to promise the Holy Ghost; a divine principle that reveals the things of God, making known His will and purposes, leading into all truth, and showing things to come, as declared by the Savior.

Thirdly, he is commissioned by the power of God to administer the sacred ordinances of the Gospel, which are confirmed to each individual by a divine testimony. Thousands of people now dwelling in these mountain vales, who received these ordinances through my administrations, are living witnesses of the truth of this statement.

As an Apostle, I have visited many nations and kingdoms, bearing this testimony to all classes of people—to men in the highest official stations, among whom may be mentioned a President of the French Republic. I have also presented works embracing our faith and doctrines to Queen Victoria and the late Prince Albert, of England.

Respecting the doctrine of plural or celestial marriage, to which the prosecution so often referred, it was revealed to me, and afterwards, in 1843, fully explained to me by Joseph Smith, the Prophet.

I married my wives because God commanded it. The ceremony, which united us for time and eternity, was performed by a servant of God having authority. God being my helper, I would prefer to die a thousand deaths than renounce my wives and violate these sacred obligations.

The prosecuting attorney was quite mistaken in saying "the defendant, Mr. Snow, was the most scholarly and brightest light of the Apostles;" and equally wrong when pleading with the jury to assist him and the "United States of America," in convicting Apostle Snow, and he "would predict that a new revelation would soon follow, changing the divine law of celestial marriage." Whatever fame Mr. Bierbower may have secured as a lawyer, he certainly will fail as a prophet. The severest prosecutions have never been followed by revelations changing a divine law, obedience to which brought imprisonment or martyrdom.

Though I go to prison, God will not change His law of celestial marriage. But the man, the people, the nation, that oppose and fight against this doctrine and the Church of God, will be overthrown.

Though the Presidency of the Church and the Twelve Apostles should suffer martyrdom, there will remain over four thousand Seventies, all Apostles of the Son of God, and were these to be slain there still would remain many thousands of High Priests, and as many or more Elders, all possessing the same authority to administer Gospel ordinances.

In conclusion, I solemnly testify, in the name of Jesus, the so-called "Mormon Church" is the Church of the living God; established on the rock of revelation, against which "the gates of hell cannot prevail."

Thanking your honor for your indulgence, I am now ready to receive my sentence.

The following extract from a letter to his family, dated Salt Lake City, Feb. 9th, 1887, speaks for itself:

"Eleven months I had been incarcerated within the walls of a gloomy prison! Imagine for yourselves, how like a dream it seemed, when, suddenly and unexpectedly the prison gates flew open, and, clad in my striped convict suit, I was at once ushered into the presence of a multitude of warm-hearted friends, anxiously awaiting my appearance. O, what warm clasping and shaking of hands! What hearty greetings and expressions of congratulation!

"Having gone the rounds of this animating introductory scene, I repaired to the tailors' department of the prison, and donned a new black broadcloth suit and "Richard was himself again."

"Amid the soul-enlivening and heart-cheering gaze of my numerous friends, I was conducted by Hon. F. S. Richards to a carriage and seated with my daughter, Eliza S. D., my son, Alvirus, and a son of Hon. F. S. Richards.

"When we started for Salt Lake City, it was a matter of astonishment that so large a gathering should put in an appearance on the spur of the moment. Included in the number were Heber J. Grant and John W. Taylor, of the Quorum of Apostles; Hon. F. S. Richards and wife, Abraham H. Cannon, representing the seven Presidents of Seventies; John Nicholson and George C. Lambert, representing the Deseret News; President W. Shurtliff, of the Weber Stake, and many others—ladies and gentlemen—noble men and women of God, of whose society I am justly proud."

At the general conference April 7th, 1889, Elder Lorenzo Snow was sustained as President of the Twelve Apostles, which position he filled with distinction until he became President of the Church (subsequent to the death of President Woodruff) Oct. 1, 1898. Soon after the dedication of the Salt Lake Temple in 1893, President Snow was installed in it as President, which honored position he still holds. No more fitting appointment could possibly have been made. He had ever been interested in Temple work. He is spiritually minded to a very high degree, and with his heavenly countenance and sweet, gentle dignity, no one living was better, if so well, qualified to stand as the watchman at the door which opens between the living and the dead.

When President Snow succeeded to the Presidency of the church, he said to his brethren: "I do not want this administration to be known as Lorenzo Snow's administration, but as God's in and through Lorenzo Snow." Being personally acquainted with President Snow and observing his course in Council, the writer can testify that he is careful not to act in matters for the benefit of the church unless satisfied that he has the approval of the Lord. President Snow chose for his counsellors President Geo. Q. Cannon and Jos. F. Smith, who have served faithfully in the same relationship to Presidents Taylor and Woodruff. During the first and very foremost subjects of consideration with President Snow was how to relieve the church from the heavy burden of debt which has rested upon it since the confiscation of church property by the government. He issued church bonds and with money borrowed almost entirely from our own people, liquidated the most pressing obligations of the church. Soon after this he was impressed to make a tour among the settlements of the Saints in southern Utah. While in St. George the Lord revealed to President Snow that the Saints must repent of their indifference to the law of tithing, reform and do better or many blessings would be withdrawn, and our enemies have great power over us, but if the Latter-day Saints would do their duty in this regard the obligations of the church would be fully met, the land more thoroughly sanctified as a land of Zion, and the people prepared for the great redemption.

President Snow and the brethren have visited many states of Zion, and in all 1899 was a year of tithe preaching and tithe paying. The spirit of obedience to this law has permeated every state of Zion and every land and clime where a mission is established, and the Elders are found proclaiming the Gospel to the nations of the earth. With the advancement made as a result of this movement, it may be safely believed that the administration of the Lord through President Snow will be one of the most remarkable the church has ever seen. President Snow is now past 86 years of age. He stands erect, is active in body and bright in every faculty of his mind. As said of Moses, "his natural force abates not, neither doth his eye wax dim." In reviewing the history of his life, we find him a humble farmer's boy, a student at college, a teacher and a missionary in many lands, "without money and without price," a pioneer colonizer, a promoter and manager of financial enterprises, a legislator and an Apostle of the Lord, a Prophet of God, truly a man who can sympathize with the people in all the conditions of life, especially those common to the experiences of a Later-day Saint, thus aptly fitting him by experience, faith and the revelations of God for the high station he now occupies. Long live our Prophet, to be a blessing as in the past to the hundreds of thousands of Latter-day Saints, and to all who know and respect him among the nations. For those who know him right cannot but respect him as a man of God.

Let me here quote the testimony from an intelligent man not of our faith, Rev. Dr. Prentis, a student of human nature, who gives, unsolicited, the following pen sketch of President Snow:

"Ye Are My Witnesses."

"Nothing is stranger in this strange world of inquiry and wonderment than the subtle power of the human heart to distil itself through and utter itself permanently in the human face. Every face is either a prophecy or a history. The tender grace of a baby's face commanding peace to the troubled waves of the mother's heart, is but a prophecy of the conquered peace of a noble life upon which that warm heart may later lean. The droop of the school girl's eyelash, the furrow of the student's brow, the compression of the youth's lips in the various trials of life, are all promises to the physiognomist of a tale that is yet to be told; but upon the countenance of the aged saint or sinner every line, every shade, every tracing speaks unerringly of a history of glorious triumph or disastrous defeat. Before the story is told and the character completed, regularity of feature, lines of texture, and delicacy of coloring may cover up from careless eyes the deadly work of spiritual destruction going on beneath the appearances; but when these have fallen like forest leaves in the autumn of life, and the hoar frost of winter whitens the head and furrows the smooth skin, the history of the life can no longer be hid, and men may read it as in an open book. ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are; First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

HAVE EYES, BUT SEE NOT.

It is customary for ministers throughout the land to read a portion from the Bible before preaching their sermons. But recently a Methodist minister in South Carolina was called upon to deliver a funeral discourse, and selected for his reading I. Corinthians xv. He read along until the 29th verse was reached. "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?" Continuing, he said: "This is the worst false doctrine that ever was preached. There are men (meaning the Elders) traveling about here preaching this kind of doctrine, and I want you to know that it is the worst that ever went abroad in the land."

It seems that this self-appointed spiritual adviser thinks himself a better judge of God's work than Paul, the inspired apostle. Yet he is only one of thousands who pretend to accept the Scriptures; but when pinned down to cold facts, juggle, twist and wrest God's holy teachings to suit their own windy conjecture. This reverend gentleman is somewhat like the small boy who went into his father's blacksmith shop to make a little hoe. He pounded and worked with the iron until convinced he could not make a hoe, when he changed his plans and started to shape a knife. After much work he became very impatient. Getting the iron red hot, he said: "I know what I can make, a 'phizz,'" and suiting the action to the word, thrust the hot iron into the water. Some ministers of this age start out to convert the people with their flowery talk, but seeing they cannot combat truth with their weapons of falsehood, they must do something, which usually ends in a "phizz." Inasmuch as the glorious principle of Salvation for the dead has caused our preaching friend so much worry, occasioned by the lack of the spirit of God to enlighten him, we will for his and others' benefit refer to the words of God's anointed. For example, Christ (as recorded in I. Peter iii.:18-21) went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which were some time disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah." These spirits were held in subjection for disobedience, and two thousand years having passed, God saw fit to send His Son (who being put to death in the flesh was quickened by the Spirit) to preach the only plan of salvation, which embraced the rejected truth—Baptism for the dead. "Every knee shall bow and every tongue confess," therefore we see the reason why God gave these spirits a chance to accept the grand message of eternal happiness. I. Peter, 4-6 says: "For this cause was the Gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the Spirit;" showing very plainly that whether the word be received in the flesh or in the spirit, it will be the same unchangeable plan, as preached and taught by our Savior. The Scriptures in numerous places teaches this sacred doctrine, which the world cannot understand, because they will not humble themselves; preferring to crawl in through many different gates under the guidance of false teachers. But a miserable and sorrowful calamity awaits those who are being led by the blind leaders of the blind, who teach many lords, many faiths and many baptisms, but reject the glorious principle of—Salvation for the dead.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

The Latter-day Saints have always been a people to recognize and uphold religious liberty without restraint from opposing sects; and the manifestations of their acts and labors prove beyond controversy, that they extend freedom to all, with intolerance for none. Shortly after the Church was organized in 1830, when the Prophet Joseph Smith was asked to give an epitomized statement of the "Mormon Faith," as it is commonly called, among other declarations of the religious convictions of the Latter-day Saints, he made the following assertion, which has ever been kept sacred and inviolate by this much despised people: "We claim the privilege of worshipping God Almighty according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may."

This declaration breathes of the same spirit as that which actuated the noble defenders of '76. Hear those sturdy, bold, faithful patriots in Congress assembled—stirred by the promptings of justice—filled with a spirit of love for their country, and freedom for its sires, affirm that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press." Happy for the country, blest would be the Union, if that same spirit of freedom, and the same acknowledgments of religious liberty had descended to after years, that the people of the present day might enjoy its glorious privileges. Need we say that the country is full of religious intolerants today! Have we not seen these Pharasaical zealots, blinded in their own ignorance and bigotry, mantled in the flaring robe of usurped authority, placing daggers in the hands of the reckless and unthinking rabble, with which to ply upon the righteous and God-fearing, because they cannot force or persuade them to follow in their wake? Simply because we do not see alike, or believe as our Christian friends do, should this give them a license to abuse and persecute us? No! verily no! We accord to every man the privilege of worshipping and believing as his conscience may direct, and we look for a reciprocation of such treatment, especially from those who profess to be followers of the Lord Jesus.

It is often argued by our opponents, that the Mormon people are seeking to gain power and authority in civil affairs to the exclusion of all others not of their faith. This is not true—the power they seek for, is the power of Almighty God, and the liberty they crave, is freedom to worship Him according to the dictates of their own conscience. The first President of the Church of Jesus Christ in these last days—that faithful martyr who sealed his testimony with his life's blood that his testament may be of force to this generation, said: "The Saints can testify whether I am willing to lay down my life for my brethren. It has been demonstrated that I have been willing to die for a 'Mormon.' I am bold to declare before heaven that I am just as ready to die in defending a Presbyterian, a Baptist, or a good man of any other denomination: for the same principle which would trample upon the rights of a Latter-day Saint would trample upon the rights of a Roman Catholic, or any other denomination who may be unpopular and too weak to defend themselves." By the spirit of its leaders, one can very readily come to know and understand the motives of their adherents. This being true, certainly the leaders of "Mormonism" have been (judging from the above declarations and assertions) men who were broad-minded, liberal, patriotic, and willing to grant unto others the blessed privilege of believing and worshipping as they thought best. We have no moral right to suppress, or control others in their religious views; for it is a God-given legacy and agency bestowed upon man, that each shall choose for themselves the goal they would obtain. Then let us not be so contracted with hide-bound bigotry as to endeavor to choke others out of existence simply because "they don't believe as we." Remember the Lord God is the Judge, and He will reward every man according to his works.

Elders who have ordered alpaca suits and hats should send immediately to us their addresses, so we can forward goods.

History of the Southern States Mission.

December, 1896—The results of labors done during 1896 were most gratifying. The Elders as a general rule had little opposition and much encouragement. During the year the missionary force increased to over 400. The number of baptisms nearly thribled those of the year previous, while friend making was phenomenally successful. The Elders as a body enjoyed good health and no deaths occurred in the mission. Our brethren manifested a prayerful, obedient, determined and zealous spirit; they met the opposing storms of prejudice with a full front, becoming victorious in nearly all their conflicts for the cause of truth.

This "Word of Wisdom" was carefully observed by the Elders, who also did their traveling absolutely without purse or scrip, since they were urged to do so by President Kimball early in the spring. While thus working the Lord endorsed the plan by providing them with all they have needed, making them wonderfully successful in their labors.

Not only did the mission grow stronger because of the successful operations of the rules directing its prayers, but individuals were correspondingly strengthened; all was harmony, union and love.

January, 1897.—With the passing of 1896 the new born year of 1897 was ushered in. The junior month in the new year was auspicious in tameness with reference to mob violence. Judging from the great number of books and tracts ordered, the Elders began the year in earenst.

Elder Daniel H. Thomas was appointed to preside over the South Alabama Conference, succeeding Elder J. S. Geddes, released. Elder W. E. Rydalch being called to assist with the work at the office, Elder Elias S. Woodruff was appointed to preside in the West Virginia Conference.

Regarding mob violence in the Middle Tennessee Conference, Elders A. L. Crillimore and C. Collett reported a lively time in the north of Chester county. An armed mob called upon them one night and ordered them out of that neighborhood.

On the 19th inst. twenty-four Elders arrived and were assigned to their fields of labor.

February, 1897.—During the month many of the Elders were somewhat hindered in their work by the great amount of sickness existing throughout the mission. In many sections scarcely a family could be found free from sickness. The angel of death seemed extraordinarily busy, still the Elders enjoyed good health.

About this time the newspapers all over the south were becoming friendly toward our people. Many of the editors seemed quite anxious to obtain reliable news regarding our people and belief. Twenty Elders arrived during the month, and many releases were recorded.

March, 1897—The month was stormy. From the almost incessant rains resulted high waters throughout nearly the entire south, in consequence of which the people, the poor especially, suffered intensely; while the Elders were greatly hindered in their work. In the Mississippi valley the water spread over an area of more than fifty miles. The poor farmers were driven from their homes, their food and stock were destroyed. The people were destitute of food and means to sustain life. Added to the horror of floods, a famine was raging in parts of Louisiana, where over 100,000 people were being supported out and out by the government, because of their poverty.

Elders John Woodmansee and Thaddeus W. Naylor were called to the office to assist in the work.

The plan of furnishing uniform writing material to the Elders was adopted, adding dignity to our correspondence, and was in pleasing harmony with our calling. On the 14th inst. a letter was received from the First Presidency of the Church stating that inasmuch as the great work of the Lord was increasing in the world they thought it to be in harmony with the interests of the church and Saints to make a few changes in the various missions. They thought it well to add the states of Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Maryland to the Eastern States Mission. But before making the change they desired to have the opinion of the different Mission Presidents. The change was made and Elders laboring in those states were instructed to remain and report in the Eastern States Mission. Elder Elias S. Woodruff continued his presidency over what was to be known as the East Kentucky Conference.

Abstracts from Correspondence.

To the Star:

With a desire to say a few words regarding the Mormon people, I write you at this time. During the last four years I have been acquainted with them and their teaching. The first Elders to visit our place were G. A. Reed and Ira Call. We always welcome these servants of God, as they are so pure and noble. On the 6th of December Elders Reed and Johnson returned, and the day following my father, sister, three cousins and myself were baptized. May the good work of salvation continue until all the righteous are gathered into the fold of Christ.

Your sister in Christ,
Miss Lucy Henderson.

Editor Star:

Allow me but a small space to say a few words in behalf of the Latter-day Saints. It will be three years the 16th of last month since I was baptized, and I can bear my testimony to the truth of the Gospel, and realize the beauty of being a member of the only true church. I feel to thank my Heavenly Parent for the beautiful plan again restored to earth through Joseph Smith, whom I know was a true prophet. The message delivered to me has carried me from darkness to a bright and glorious light. I have been blessed by the healing power of God; for at times I could not walk but through the prayers of His humble servants I was made whole.

Salt Lake Herald:

Ann Arbor, Mich., May 11.—Alonzo B. Irvine, formerly of The Herald, won first place in the final cup debate tonight, winning Detroit's silver cup and championship of the university. Four societies contested. In the preliminaries Mr. Irvine won first place against seventy competitors in the Webster society. In the semi-finals his team won by a unanimous decision. In tonight's debate a unanimous decision was given.

For several months until last fall, Mr. Irvine was a valued member of The Herald reportorial staff. Especially in the railroad offices was he well and favorably known. Mr. Irvine formerly resided at Logan. His wife is a daughter of Hon. George Q. Cannon.

When Mr. Irvine went to Ann Arbor last fall to study law all his friends knew that he would give a good account of himself at the first opportunity, and he has not failed to fulfill their expectations.

WISDOM.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

At this period of the world's history the children of men are aspiring after knowledge, wisdom and power, and from an intellectual worldly standpoint, this is preeminently a wise age. If we look into the past and consider the rise and fall of nations, we find that invariably those nations have attained to great power and intelligence after passing through scenes of blood and carnage. When they became wealthy, they became corrupt and effeminate, but were still in possession of great worldly knowledge, which gave them power. Continual corruption brought indolence and weakness, and finally the enemy would come, besiege their cities and bring them into captivity and slavery. Then would be established another empire and it would rise and fall, passing through a similar experience to its predecessor, and so on. This has been the history of the past, and we find, amid these corrupt governments, established by man, much worldly wisdom.

Wisdom is defined by Webster as "the quality of being wise; knowledge and the capacity to make use of it." I like the definition given by Coleridge: "Common sense in an uncommon degree is what the world calls wisdom," and I think if the world were in possession of the common sense, which is knowledge, they would be wise.

It was the lack of common sense which brought corruption and dissolution upon every nation in the past, and it is the lack of wisdom which brings death and destruction to both body and soul, nations and empires, at the present time.

It is hard to define wisdom in all its phases, as many conjuctions occur, as to what it is. For instance, some say it is soothing and good to smoke and chew tobacco, and others say it is unwise; some will argue that whisky and beer are good for the body, while others contend they are hurtful and not good for the body; there are others who delight in drinking tea, coffee, cocoa and light stimulants, and will say they are beneficial and conducive to health and strength; but others who contend that these stimulants are also harmful, deleterious to health and a bane to the human family.

In these last days the God of Heaven has revealed through the prophet Joseph Smith, some simple rules to health and strength; making many promises to those who will obey this "word of wisdom."

However, wisdom was necessary and good anciently; let us look to the good old book, 'the Bible," and see how the ancients lived. We read of Adam living until he was 930 years old; of Methuselah dying at the advanced age of 969, and many antedeluvians who approached the thousand year mark. Why was this? It is possible that environments have changed somewhat, but it is more likely that mankind has forgotten how to live. Hear the instructions of God in the beginning;

"Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of the earth, and every tree, in which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat." We find no account of the children of God using such baneful stimulants as tobacco, or wine, or of eating meat until after the Deluge; then God said: "Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the green herb have I given you all things. But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat. And surely your blood of your lives will I require; at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man." Here we find the Father advising and counselling His children in the use of flesh meat. In the beginning He gave Adam laws and rules of life; his children became murderous and wicked and it had been deemed wise to destroy them from off the earth. It also appeared wise in God to again instruct His children how to live, and thus we find Him instructing them not to needlessly take life, for the blood of every beast needlessly slain would be required at the hand of that man. The life of man was shortened, he commenced to eat flesh and also drink wine; he became savage and gluttonous and animals became wild and afraid of man.

In the beginning it was not so. God had pronounced everything good, and men and beasts lived in unity and peace. Animals were not hunted, and subsisted wholly upon the bounties of nature; the lion, lamb, tiger, bear, camel, leopard, deer, and even the untamable hyena, at that time would live on the grasses and herbs that abounded in that paradise of peace and harmony.

After the days of Nimrod, the hunter, and the bloodthirsty Esau, the beasts of the field were driven and hunted, becoming wild and at enmity with man, remaining in that condition up to the present time.

It is God's design to have a pure people on the earth; men, whose tabernacles can be a fit abiding place for the Holy Ghost, and to this end He has instituted this "Word of Wisdom," in preparation for the dawn of the day of rest, when the earth shall again receive its paradisical glory, and the lion and ox eat straw together and the wolf and lamb lie down together. We will eventually do away with the eating of fleshy meats, which destroy the body, and will subsist, as in the beginning, entirely on herbs, grain and fruit; then we shall live, as Isaiah says, to the age of a tree and a man dying at the age of 100 years, will be considered a child. As knowledge increases, covering the earth as the waters cover the deep, we shall study the ingredients of the tree of life which will be planted, and learn to eat its fruit and prepare its leaves, that the sick might be healed and the pangs of death alleviated. The curse will be taken off the earth and through the principles of knowledge and wisdom, men will become immortal and no more subject to sickness and death.

Ancient Israel, after its liberation from the bondage of Egypt, was in a position to become a pure and holy nation. God desired to give them His priesthood, His gospel and all His laws. He guided and protected them, sending His overshadowing cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night. He spoke to them from Sinai and desired to meet with them, but the people trembled and were sore afraid, saying to Moses: "Speak thou with us, and we will hear; but let not God speak with us, lest we die." They fled to their tents, to hide themselves from the presence of God, they complained, and were dissatisfied with the higher laws of God; they did not want the manna, the pure, angelic food which God had prepared, but lusted after fleshy meats, saying: "Who shall give us flesh to eat? We remember the fish, which we did eat in Egypt freely; * * * But now our soul is dried away; there is nothing at all beside this manna, before our eyes." On account of their hard hearts and many complaints, God's anger was kindled against them, and He said: "Sanctify yourselves against tomorrow, and ye shall eat flesh; for ye have wept in the ears of the Lord, saying: Who shall give us flesh to eat? for it was well with us in Egypt; therefore the Lord will give you flesh, and ye shall eat. Ye shall not eat one day, nor two days, nor five days, neither ten days, nor twenty days; but even a whole month, until it come out at your nostrils, and it be loathesome unto you;" and God showered quails among them and they gorged themselves with flesh, which brought sickness and death in the camp, so that many thousands died. He also sent them the 'carnal laws, as they were not prepared to receive His higher laws.

The prophet Moses established an order amongst the Israelites called the Nazerites, which were restricted in their diet and who appear to have been filled with the Spirit of God. Of this number we will mention Samson, Samuel and John the Baptist, who took vows of the Nazerites. These men, with all the prophets, lived on the most meager diet, and confined themselves to an abstemious mode of living, that the Spirit of God could enlighten and strengthen them in their callings. Daniel, the wise, received similar instruction in his youth, and kept the word of wisdom. When taken captive by Nebuchadnezzar, who desired him as one of his captives, he pleaded with Ashpenaz, who was the master of the king's servants, not to give him wine and meat to nourish and beautify him, but supply him with pulse and water, as he did not wish to defile his body. The Hebrew princes, Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah, lived on this simple diet of prepared grain and water, and became notorious for their beauty and wisdom. The wise men of Babylon could not compete with this youth, Daniel, who kept his body pure and holy. Being a fit receptacle for God's Holy Spirit, he was able to interpret dreams and withstand lions, and the visions of eternity were opened up to his understanding.

After the carnal laws had been given Israel, God instructed them regarding clean and unclean animals, as contained in the eleventh chapter of Leviticus.

Since that time the Jews have been strict observers of the Mosaic laws, and in many ways have preserved their health and identity as God's chosen people. They are very particular about eating meat, especially looking with horror upon swine as an article of diet. We must agree with them in this regard, and the meats forbidden anciently have not improved any by age, and are therefore not good now.

Franklin's Epitaph.

The following is Benjamin Franklin's famous epitaph, written by himself about himself, and preserved as a literary curiosity:

The Body
of Benjamin Franklin,
Printer,
(Like the cover of an old book,
Its contents torn out,
And stript of its lettering and gilding)
Lies here, food for worms.
Yet the work itself shall not be lost,
For it will, as he believed,
Appear once more,
In a new
And more beautiful edition,
Corrected and amended by The Author.

When I hear a young man spoken of as giving promise of high genius, the first question I ask about him is, always, "Does he work?"—Ruskin.

All the keys that unlock the way out of all difficulties hang at God's girdle.

A PROPHECY THAT FAILED.

BY ELDER JOSEPH H. LINES.

During the month of October, 1899, Carroll county, and especially that part of it lying in the immediate vicinity of Mitchell's Cross Roads, was considerably agitated by a public discussion between the Rev. W. W. Otey, a minister of the Campbellite church, and Elder Joseph H. Lines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The discussion, which lasted four days and was attended by from two to three hundred people, was upon the subject: "Resolved, that Joseph Smith Was a Prophet of God and that the Book of Mormon is the Word of God." King James translation of the Bible was to have been the standard; but the reverend divine, like many others of his class, refused to be bound by such a trifle as a solemn agreement, and pushing the Bible to one side, he made Stenhouse's "Rocky Mountain Saints" and kindred publications the standard by which he tried to prove that the Mormons were an utterly depraved and vicious people. He succeeded only in convincing the intelligent and honest-hearted people who listened to his vile talk, of the utter rottenness of his own heart, and that, so far from being guided by the spirit of the Lord in his shameful and slanderous attack upon the Mormon people, he was prompted by the spirit which emanates from beneath and is the very anti-Christ; the same spirit that hounded the Savior to his death and made His followers outcasts in the world. It was while the discussion was at its height that Rev. Otey rose up and in the majesty of his self-appointed calling, predicted that Elder Lines would be so utterly annihilated that he would never again show his face in Mitchell school house, or before any considerable number of people in Carroll county. The sequel shows that the reverend must have consulted his oracles in the wrong time of the moon. Last Thursday, the 3d inst., Elder Lines, accompanied by Elder Walter F. Ostler, again set foot on Carroll county soil. The news of their coming had preceded them, and Dr. E. M. Wilkinson, a local Elder of the church, had made several appointments for them to preach, among the rest being one at Mitchell school house, and here, on Sunday morning, Elder Lines stood up in the presence of quite a large congregation, most of whom had been present at the debate, and again bore testimony to the truths of the Everlasting Gospel; thus giving ample proof that he was neither annihilated nor ashamed of the Gospel of Christ. We would advise Rev. Otey that hereafter when he makes a prediction concernoing Mormon Elders, to be sure he consults his oracles when the signs are right; while we would call the attention of the good people of Carroll county to the words of Christ: "Beware of false prophets."

Here, as elsewhere, the preaching of the true plan of salvation causes the righteous to rejoice and the wicked to rage. Many of the honest in heart become earnest investigators, while the wicked, the narrow-minded and bigoted not only will not hear the message themselves, but do all that lies in their power to keep others from hearing it. Like the wicked, hypocritical Pharisees and lawyers whom Christ denounced, they will neither enter into the way of life themselves, and those who would enter they hinder. The truthfulness of the above was well illustrated by an incident that happened in this neighborhood a few nights back.

About a mile from Peck postoffice stands an antiquated and very much dilapidated temple of learning called the Wm. L. Smith school house. For many months it has stood with door unlocked and has been freely used by preachers of various denominations. Young men have also been wont to congregate beneath its roof and engage in drunken revels, and even now its floor is stained with blood, the result of a drunken row. All this called forth no protest from the worthy patrons of the school house. Some two weeks since Dr. Wilkinson made arrangements for Elders Lines and Ostler to hold a series of meetings there beginning Sunday night, May 6; and though the fact of the Elders going to preach there was widely circulated among the people, it called forth not a single protest against the use of the house. But after the first meeting it became evident that a few honest hearts were becoming interested in the doctrine. Then Satan raged, he mustered his forces, which, we are sorry to say, consisted of some of the so-called Christians of the neighborhood, and in solemn council they decreed that the Mormons should not preach any longer in that school house. The result was that when the Elders, accompanied by Dr. Wilkinson and C. W. Smith and family, who were kindly entertaining them, repaired to the school house Tuesday night they found it locked and the following notice tacked on the door:

Notice:—We, the undersigned patrons of the Wm. L. Smith school house, strictly forbid any further preaching in this house. We forbid the door being opened by anyone. This May 8, 1900.

Signed, W. L. Smith, Isaac Smith, Richard Phillips, S. A. Smith, L. C. Marshall, John H. Duncan, J. A. Marshall, J. W. Marshall, J. E. Marshall, Sam Matherly, S. O. Marshall, Thomas Phillips, Isaac Marshall, B. P. Marshall.

Thus do these people in their blind and unreasoning unbelief shut up the Kingdom of Heaven against themselves, and unwittingly bring to pass the saying of Christ: "They shall put you out of the synagogues. Nevertheless, they shall yet know that the Kingdom of God came nigh unto them."

Table Etiquette.

It was Emerson who said he should prefer to sit at table with a perfectly mannered scoundrel than take his meals with the honestest man in the world who ate with his knife and made a gurgling noise in taking his soup.

Soup is considered of itself a proper beginning of the important meal of the day.

Soup is served in plates, not bowls. The soup spoon is laid on the right of the plate.

The soup plate should never be filled to the rim of the bowl part of the plate.

It is not allowable to ask for a second helping of soup.

Soup is eaten with a tablespoon, not a dessert spoon, such as one is furnished with at some of the restaurants.

In taking the soup up, dip the spoon from you in the plate; drink or eat it—for the proper term is in dispute—from the side next you, and never from the tip of the spoon.

This is where the mustache misery sets in.

For you may not take soup except from the side, and then you must do it without the noise or sound. A man with a mustache must use his napkin after each mouthful and remove all evidences of the liquid.

Nothing is so vulgar as the hissing sound which only an unrefined man or woman makes when partaking of a liquid.

Of course one must not cool one's portion of soup by blowing on it.

And beware of the temptation to tip the plate so as to catch the last spoonful.

Soup is only intended as a preparation for the remainder of the meal.

Do not appear to regard it as the entire feast.

In eating one should not bend the head for each mouthful, but sit erect.

We rely more upon the actions of others for our happiness than upon the sunshine of our own making.

Success depends much on our own efforts. Vegetation don't do well unless you keep the weeds out.

ON THE BALMY PENINSULA.

BY FRANK N. TYLER.

To the Star:

When conference was held at Jacksonville, Fla., last February, myself and companion were assigned to go into Suwanee county to labor. There had been no Elders in that county since the last mobbing there, which took place three years ago. In forcible language the mobbers had said if ever a "Mormon Elder" came into that county again, no light punishment would be their lot, but they would be lynched and would never live to tell the tale. Upon our arrival in the county we found many kind friends. We did what good we could in the southern part, in the way of holding meetings and canvassing. Public houses could not be obtained, so we preached wherever given a chance in private places. Several meetings were held in a store house cleared out especially for our use. Our meetings were attended by some who were investigating, others who seemed to care very little about our message, and to be sure we had some bitter enemies to battle against. We next went into the Beach settlement and tried to obtain public places to hold meetings, but the same cold reception greeted us. On fences, school houses and trees were posted notices warning the people not to take us in nor give us anything to eat.

The notices informed the people that the Book of Mormon was written by the Devil, warning all to shun it. The coward who posted the notices had not manhood enough to meet us, but like all evildoers did his acts behind our back. He even boasted of being one of the mob who forced the Elders from the county, and said he was ready to help break our necks. We next made our way into a neighborhood where lived some Saints and held many good meetings. We baptized five members April 14th and three on the 15th.

The Saints of Levy and Lafayette counties decided to meet at Pine Bluff May 1st and have a picnic party and to have us preach unto them the message of salvation.

About 10 o'clock on the 1st inst. we launched our boats on the breast of the Suwanee river and glided along its course making our way to the mighty ocean. When we had all arrived at the appointed place, a count showed fifty present. We held meeting, Elder Decker and myself addressing those who had assembled. After meeting we gathered 'neath the shade of a stately oak and ate of the food prepared by willing hands. We felt very grateful to God for the privilege of meeting with our friends, for the kindness shown us and the good spirit manifest. No matter how bitter people may be in a county, there are always friends raised up to care for the true and faithful Elder. Our hearts were gladdened to sing praises unto our Heavenly Father and especially did we rejoice when we led three honest souls into the water, baptizing them into the fold of our Savior. We again held meeting in the afternoon, Elders Layton and Jones doing the preaching. After meeting we engaged in a hearty handshake and wishing each other well, again launched our boats and went back to Levy county; all feeling well, thanking God for His kindness unto us.

The Oldest Coin on Earth,

Salt Lake Herald.

The ministers and scientific men of Salt Lake will have an opportunity next Thursday and Friday to see if they wish what is claimed to be the oldest coin on earth. It is owned by Herman Gottschalk, a commercial traveler of Chicago, who will pass through Salt Lake at the time mentioned. The coin is a holy shekel of Jerusalem and is said to be of the time of King Solomon. Its owner has it insured for $20,000 and has been offered a fortune for it more than once.

THE PERSONALTY OF GOD.

BY PHILIP MAYCOCK.

In the ruthlessly frenzied and godless days of the Commune of Paris, a venerable parish priest, more than 80 years old, was dragged before Raoul Rigault, the Prefect of Police in that bloody time. The old man, following the ancient custom, mildly addressed Rigault and associates as "my children." Rigault, who was then about 27 years old, interrupted him brusquely, saying: "Citizen, you are not before children, but in the presence of a magistrate. What is your profession?" "I am a servant of God," answered the cure. "Where does He live?" asked Rigault. "Everywhere," answered the old man. "Send this man to jail," was Rigault's reply, "and issue a warrant for the arrest of his master, one called God, who has no permanent residence, and is in consequence, contrary to law, living in a perpetual state of vagabondage."

Reference is made to this occurrence, not indeed to approve the irreverence of Rigault, nor in any way to sanction the scoffing of that which in reality is sacred, or even falsely held sacred by others; but rather to instance how the inconsistent views of sectarian Christianity necessarily subject the advocates to ridicule, and also to give occasion for the statement of some views of the Latter-Day Saints on the subject of the Godhead.

There are certain basic principles of mental activity, according to which all minds at all times act—rubrics of knowledge, I believe Baldwin calls them. On them the very fabric of knowledge we have constructed is built. Things equal to the same thing are equal to each other; no two objects can occupy the same place at the same time; one object cannot occupy two places at the same time; property (quality) is a characteristic or mode of substance; that is, there is no property without substance; like begets like. These "first principles" of time and place and matter, I repeat, are the changeless laws of thought; and in no department of research can they be evaded or avoided, except, perhaps, in sectarian discourses about God. Now when any dogma of science or religion calls on us to sacrifice these rebrics, we should reject it as not only improbable but impossible.

The student of physics, unless in contrast with his species, he has been furnished with a mind adapted for life in topsy-turvydom, reduces all his knowledge of matter and force in the last analysis, to these fundamentals. But if that student of physics at the same time happens to be a student of theology in Andover or Drew, he will have to deny many of the basic rules for truth's sake he was before forced to support. A student of biology tells us that like begets like—an elephant does not beget a crocodile; but if he discourses about God in the orthodox manner, he disregards all such guiding lines as led him to the truth in other fields of study, and tells us that though God is our Father and Christ our brother, yet they have little in common with us, for we are constructed on a different plan and with different elements. Paul, who declares that we are the offspring, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Now it is because the acceptance of the secretarian doctrine of Deity demands the throwing away of reason and consistency, of universally established principles, that we Latter-Day Saints protest against it. We demand that the principles on which in every other department of life but religion even our opponents have built the structure of science shall also be respected in theology. We ask only that teachers of theology be natural, be reasonable.

Of course, let it not be understood that we, quack-like, pretend to explain everything in religion. We cannot hope to do so. But we do maintain that our religious ideas shall not be in open, irreconcilable conflict with universal reason. To multitudinous questions we may properly—we must indeed—say we do not know, for there are many facts of faith the understanding of which is beyond our earthly comprehension. But the acceptance of such facts does not crush into chaos the entire framework of our minds. We may have directly to antagonize much of what has been received as science; we may find that the declarations of God are squarely against many of our cherished theories. In all such cases we can consistently yield our experience to our faith, since the former, being a body not of fundamental principles, but rather of uncertain deductions, is at the best insecure, while faith founded on the unequivocal word of God is sure. So in our zeal for consistency let us not proclaim that we can explain everything, for in the absolute sense, we can explain nothing. There is just as much mystery in the falling of the apple as in the resurrection. We know that the apple does fall, and that the resurrection will come to pass; but the vexatious why of the former like the how of the latter remains unanswered. We call the force which produces the falling of the apple gravity; but let us not be so rash as to ask what gravity is, else with bowed acknowledgment of our ignorance we must confess that it is folly here even to attempt to be wise.

So when we require a reasonable God, we do not mean one we can absolutely explain; we demand merely that in accepting Him we shall not be called on to contradict our established modes of thought.

I know our Christian friends are repelled by our factual demands. They tell us that God cannot be laid bare with scalpel, nor caught in the focus of a microscope. That we, too, believe. But when we refuse to clothe God with irreconcilable attributes, we do only what they themselves do when they are true to their consistent selves. They recoil in horror from the picture of the heathen mother who sacrifices her darling child in furnace heat in order to delight the God whom she worships. They are repulsed by the acts of those pagan votaries who slash themselves, and perhaps exhaust their own life in order to please the object of their devotion. They cannot associate cruelty, diabolical ferocity with that being whom they and we say is the embodiment of love. The Christian world is every day more and more breaking with the old Calvinistic dogma that God sends one to heaven and ten to hell, irrespective of any merit or blame of theirs, all for His glory, because such lovelessness and caprice are incompatible with the justices and mercy which enlightened souls link with His character. We ask only that the same consistency be maintained when God is considered with reference to time and place and matter that is maintained when love and mercy and justice are in question. Indeed, we believe that because this inconsistency has been insisted on, many an honest man has preferred to hold to the sure rod of fundamental truth and consequently to remain an unbeliever.

We worship a God of bodily parts and spiritual attributes. His person cannot be in more than one place at the same time, for He is a material being of limited form and definite proportions; indeed, man, in the strictest sense of the expression, was made in His image. Christ, the Son of God, has the same physical and mental characteristics as His Father. The Father and the Son are distinct beings, the blending of their personalities and individualities being impossible. their oneness, as the seventeenth chapter of John says, is a oneness of will of purpose, of intelligence, of love. Their omnipresence is by virtue of their agencies, they themselves being able physically to be in only one place at any given time. They are of the same species as we; or rather, we are of the same species as they. As Paul says, we are God's offspring. In short, the Latter-Day Saints' doctrine is that, inasmuch as man is in the image of God, his Father, and Christ, his brother, he has all the essential physical and mental attributes of his great relatives. However, in man these attributes are yet immature or distorted in development, while in the Father and the Elder Brother they are in a state of perfection.

The views of the Latter-Day Saints accord not only with reason, but also with Scripture, for on their acceptance all Scripture is explainable, whereas on the supposition of secretarian Christianity, the greater part of the sacred writings cannot be explained.—Young Woman's Journal.

Why Americans Win.

Electrical Review.

One of the many reasons why American manufacturers are so successfully competing in foreign markets is to be found in the following episode which occurred recently: An American manufacturer of steam specialties was visiting an English firm which made similar goods. A certain article which both firms made was under discussion.

"What is your price on this thing?" asked the American.

"Well, in your money, about $19," replied the Englishman. "What does it cost you?"

"I'll deliver at your door all you want at $7 apiece," said the American.

"How in the world do you do it?"

"Well, I'll illustrate," answered the American. "Look out of that window and across the street. See that man painting a sign?"

"Yes."

"He's on a ladder, isn't he?"

"Yes."

"See that other man sitting on the sidewalk holding the foot of the ladder?"

"Yes."

"Now, in America we have ladders that stand up by themselves—don't need a man to hold 'em. So, you see, in this instance we divide your cost of labor exactly by two."

"I see," remarked the Englishman.

SKETCH OF PRESIDENT SNOW.

subtle alchemy intractable to human control, the soul shines in the face, and the countenance is a monument of warning or a poem of benedictions. Whatever estimate men may place upon the claims of Jesus of Nazareth, His fiercest detractors have never challenged His perfect knowledge of what was in man. To no one was this power of the soul to distil itself into the lineaments of the face better known than to Him. Not to logical symmetry of doctrines, not to abstract beauty of truths revealed, but to the living beings who had 'walked with Jesus,' did the great Physiognomist appear as the best evidence of the power of the Gospel of peace. The face which speaks of a soul where reigns the Prince of Pence is his best witness. Now and then in a life spent in the study of men, I have found such a witness. Such was a face I saw today; saw where and when I least expected it; saw it in a business office, where great affairs are transacted, where grave responsibilities are borne, and where serious troubles come. I had expected to find intellectuality, benevolence, dignity, composure and strength depicted upon the face of the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; but when I was introduced to President Lorenzo Snow, for a second I was startled to see the holiest face but one I had ever been privileged to look upon. His face was a power of peace; his presence a benediction of peace. In the tranquil depths of his eyes were not only the 'home of silent prayer,' but the abode of spiritual strength. As he talked of the 'more sure word of prophecy' and the certainty of the hope which was his, and the abiding faith which had conquered the trials and difficulties of tragic life, I watched the play of emotions and studied with fascinated attention the subtle shades of expression which spoke so plainly the workings of his soul; and the strangest feeling stole over me, that I 'stood on holy ground;' that this man did not act from the commonplace motives of policy, interest, or expediency, but he 'acted from a far-off center.' I am accustomed to study men's faces, analyze every line and feature, dissect each expression, and note every emotion, but I could not here. What would be the use of my recording the earnestness of the brow, the sweetness of the mouth, and all my commonplace descriptive terms. The man is not reducible to ordinary description. If the Mormon Church can produce such witnesses, it will need but little the pen of the ready writer or the eloquence of the great preacher."

MISSIONARY HYMN.

BY ELDER R. W. SMITH.

Tune—"Oh God, the Eternal Father."

To Thee, Our Heavenly Father,
Our voices we will raise
In songe of true devotion,
Of thanksgiving and praise.
We feel to ask Thy blessings,
Upon us day by day,
That we may ever follow
The straight and narrow way.

We love to serve Thee, Father,
And teach Thy righteous laws;
We're proud to be enlisted
In such a noble cause.
We know if we prove faithful,
Thy glories we will share;
Then help us, oh, our Father,
Thy people to prepare.

May we who are appointed
The gospel to declare,
Be guarded from all evil
And every tempting snare.
Grant us Thy Holy Spirit,
To guide our thoughts aright;
Help us to do Thy bidding
With all our mind and might.

Though Satan's hosts may gather,
Thy people to defame,
We ne'er shall cease to serve Thee,
And magnify Thy name.
And when our work is finished,
We then shall go to rest,
And rise to live in glory
Forever with the blest.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Elder A. C. Strong.

When Elder T. H. Humphreys was released to return to the household of his friends, the home of his loved ones, and the bosom of the church, the responsibility of presiding over the North Alabama Conference fell upon the shoulders of Elder A. C. Strong, who hails from Salt Lake City, Utah. Like the majority of Conference Presidents, Elder Strong comes of good pioneer stock, his father, James T. Strong, having crossed the plains in '49, arriving in Salt Lake City in the winter of the same year. This good old sire took up his abode in the "Old Fort" on "Pioneer Square," where he resided until 1850, when he moved into the Tenth ward, where he still lives. Brother A. C. Strong was born in sunny May on the 30th day of the month, 1876.

He attended the Salt Lake public schools until he was 17 years old, working in the summer and going to school in the winter—graduating in his seventeenth year. When 18 years old he entered the employ of the Pacific Express Company, remaining in their employ until he left to perform ministerial labors in the Southern States Mission. Twenty-two months of this time was spent in working nights, attending the Salt Lake Business College during the day. It was in the month of March, 1899, that our brother received a call to engage his time and talents in the service and work of the Lord. He responded to the call with a willing heart, and on Nov. 20th, 1899, he arrived in Chattanooga

ELDER A. C. STRONG,
President of North Alabama Conference.

and was assigned to labor in the North Alabama Conference. He labored as a canvassing Elder until March 29th, 1900, when he was called to labor in Memphis, Tenn.

Brother Strong, like his predecessors, seems to possess the genuine material necessary to the making of an able President. He has the love, faith, prayers and good will of all his associates, and we shall look for the work in the North Alabama Conference to maintain the good standing it has reached in times past.

History of the Southern States Mission.

March, 1897.

There was but one case of mob violence during the month. Elders D. A. Wilcox and J. H. Stander were about to fill an appointment in Saluda county, S. C., when a mob of armed men came upon them, bearing guns and threatening them with violence. An attempt to reason with the lawless men was of no benefit. By the interference of kind and watchful friends the brethren escaped without much damage being done. Shots fired fell short of their mark.

The latter part of the month many Conference Presidents were honorably released and other faithful men called to fill their places. General good health prevailed throughout the mission. Following is the report of work done for the quarter ending March 27th: Miles walked, 127,006; families visited, 57,989; families re-visited, 28,235; rejected testimonies, 4,433; refused entertainment, 3,483; tracts distributed, 77,632; dodgers distributed, 20,917; books sold, 1,842; books otherwise distributed, 4,632; meetings held, 12,977; Gospel conversatiosn, 64,033; children blessed, 153; baptisms, 204.

April, 1897.

Much good active work was done in the mission. Regarding the results of this month's work as an index to the future, the success was encouraging. Since January the Florida Conference Elders baptized 104 souls, while in the South Alabama Conference 136 people were also brought into the fold of Christ.

President Kimball took a business trip east, ordering a large quantity of shoes, Bibles, etc., doing this initiatory to keeping a commissary in the office, from which the Elders were to be supplied. From this beginning the commissary has ever been a friend to the brethren in the field. It was a wise step, and many Elders have enjoyed the benefits.

The city of Baton Rouge, capital of Louisiana, was successfully canvassed by Elders James A. Cornwall and John Wood. Upon entering the city the Elders were denied by the mayor the privilege of canvassing, without first paying a license of $5 required by the city ordinance. Upon counsel of President Kimball they importuned the mayor seven times, when his honor granted their request with a promise of protection.

Mobile, Ala., was also worked without money, the Elders laboring there for nearly three months, and received a place of entertainmetn every night. Thirty-two meetings were held in one week.

Elders George T. Wride and Charles L. Haight, through the blessings of the Lord, have forced a successful opening in Birmingham, Ala., the city in which Elders Campbell and Belnap were imprisoned and banished from in May, 1894, for preaching the Gospel and giving away tracts. They stayed at the best hotels and met with no abuse nor neglect whatever, and traveled without purse or scrip.

To disturb the quietude of the mission some little mobocracy was indulged in.

In leaving from a meeting held in Crenshaw county, Alabama, Elders S. R. Brown and Charles R. Spencer were taken by a mob of masked and armed men into the woods, and after some oratorical abuse and diabolical threats, a promise was forced from them to leave the county, when they were liberated with threats of death should they return. The affair was called to the attention of Gov. James F. Johnston, of Alabama, who immediately directed and accomplished the arrest and began the prosecution of the guilty parties., assuring us the full protection of the laws of Alabama while he was in office.

In Mississippi, Elders William N. Dye and C. H. Johnson were betrayed into the hands of a mob of five men, who leveled their guns upon them and made them throw up their hands, while the ruffians searched their persons and grips. Then ordering them, at the point of their guns, to march, drove them ten miles through the darkness and commanded them to leave the county and to not come back on pain of death.

A company of thirty-four Elders came during this month, which was the largest company up to this time in the history of the mission.

(To be continued.)

RELATIONSHIP OF THE BODY AND THE SPIRIT OF MAN.

BY ELDER J. URBAN ALLRED.

The professed Christian world believe generally that man is by nature a dual being, but entertain many vague misconceptions as to the divinely ordained relationship which here and hereafter will exist between the body and the spirit of man.

Medianeval asceticism—the basic principle of which was the subjugation of the body through vigorous mistreatment and oftimes abuse—was the outgrowth of an erroneous idea that the body must be regarded as an object of burden from which the spirit must be freed.

A doctrine taught today akin to this, is the one once universally, but now less generally taught by modern Christendom, of a spiritual resurrection—a resurrection of a spiritual, not a tangible body, a body that has no connection at all with the mortal life. It is highly essential to an understatnding of the full duties of man in this life, that he know something of his pre-existent state, and of his future existence or salvation, and the conditions upon which the same is predicated. These broad subjects can be but referred to in this short article, the purpose of which is to set forth briefly the proper relationship of the spirit and the body of man here in mortal life, and in an after-existence. Through the "fall" of Adam came the mortality of man. That which is called the "fall" and which the world has been taught to lament so much, was not an accident (I. Timothy, 2:14), but a divinely ordained means whereby the innumerable hosts of spirits in the councils of heaven were to receives the greatest of all gifts—a mortal body. The body and spirit make man "a living soul." The two were to work in co-operation under the healthful opposition in all things characteristic of this life, for the salvation of the spirit with the body.

Job tells us in his 38th chapter and first to eighth verses, of the rejoicing among "all the sons of God" at a time before the foundation of the world was laid, which joyous songs were, no doubt, the result of the anticipation of the formation of the earth upon which the spirits were to possess mortal bodies.

In fulfillment of the divine purpose of Jehovah, all the spirits of heaven who did not forfeit their first estate, and were not drawn down from heaven after the great dragon (Rev.XII, 4th and 13th verses) have or will possess a mortal body.

The body given to every spirit upon its advent into mortality was designed to be the eternal tabernacle of the spirit, and the means through which the spirit receives a knowledge of good and evil. Thus surrounded with laws of good and evil and possessing that which we call will power or free agency—the supreme faculty of the human mind—man is a free agent, responsible to his Creator for the transgression of his laws. Spirit and body are mutually dependent upon each other for development. The body is lifeless clay without the animation of the spirit; and the spirit is dependent for education and salvation upon the body—the means through which it receives sensations and through which the mandates of the mind are executed.

The Latter-day Saints have been taught the essential interdependence and eternal mutuality of the spirit and the body of man; that the body, or what Paul calls the temple of God, was designed to be the eternal body of the spirit; to be restrained, developed and educated by the spirit, and prepared in this life for the abode of the Holy Spirit of God, and to abide in the presence of God in a future existence.

The body is not to be tortured nor neglected by the spirit; neither was the spirit to be degraded by the domination of the passions of the body, which condition leads to but one end—sensualism and vice. But a healthful co-operation in the mutual development of the spirit and body, in which the latter is in harmony with the former, and the spirit is in harmony with the laws of God, is perfect and complete education, and will lead to the goal, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect."

No degree of development, education, or salvation can, however, be attained to but in one way, namely: First, by an acquaintance with, and secondly, by intelligent obedience to, truth, which, the Savior said, would make us free. So that whatever degree of intelligence the spirit and body may attain to in this life, according to Latter-day revelation, that intelligence is not lost by death, but will rise with the individual in the resurrection.

Through an infinite atonement of Him who said: "I am the resurrection and the life," the same quickening operation of the resurrection which called forth the mortal body of the Son of God from the sepulcher, will also pass upon all mankind, for "as in Adam all died, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

"But," say modern professors in Christianity, "that means a spiritual resurrection;" and Paul's words to the effect that flesh and blood could not inherit the kingdom of heaven are recited as proof of this belief. But the Apostle Paul did not say that flesh and bone should not enter the kingdom of heaven; but plainly taught a literal resurrection of the mortal body: to the Roman Saints he wrote: "Of the spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you."

The resurrection of the Savior—our type and pattern in all things—was an actual, not a spiritual resurrection. It was the same body of flesh and bone of which He said after the resurrection: "Handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have;" and of which he told doubting Thomas to thrust his hands into the marks of the wounds received on Calvary. And finally, that there should be no doubt of the reality of his resurrection, we read of Christ with his immortal, or resurrected body, dining upon broiled fish and honeycomb with his disciples. His words to Mary at the tomb indicate his intention of presenting his newly resurrected body before his Father in heaven before He appeared to His disciples. He said: "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father, but go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father; and to my God, and your God." John xx: 16,17.

Later we read of his glorious ascension into heaven, while two heavenly beings declared to the astonished Galilaeans that this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven.

If the resurrection of Christ, who is called the "first fruits of them that slept", was a reality; if his mortal body was literally resurrected from the tomb, and with that body of flesh and bone He entered into heaven and in like manner is again to come back to earth, then is it unreasonable to believe that we, like our Savior and great prototype, shall experience a literal restoration of our mortal bodies to our spirits, even after that separation called death? And if the mortal body is resurrected from the grave and restored "bone to his bone" and joint to his joint, even so shall all the development and education as well as the evil effects of sin on the body indelibly inscribed therein by the laws of justice, rise with the body in the resurrection and be the means by which it will be "judged according to the deeds done in the body." If there is no resurrection of the mortal body, then the resurrection is not a reality but a delusion, for it is only to the mortal part of man to which the power of the resurrection applies. The spirit does not die, and is therefore not resurrected.

But the word of the Lord declares that before the restoration of all things, that there will be a restoration, through the resurrection, of what was lost by death, and, as Ezekiel prophesied to the house of Israel, the graves shall be opened; and the body thereof shall be restored "bone to his bone." Then shall the body and spirit be restored the one to the other in their proper order; and the body shall inherit a degree of glory for which it has been fitted through the exercise of man's free agency.

The mortal body—the tabernacle of the spirit of man—endowed with divine faculties, the masterpiece of the Architect of the universe, in whose image it was created; predestined to a literal resurrection by which mortal blood will be displaced by eternal spirit; designed by its Creator through obedience to law to abide the celestial laws of the kingdom of God, there to dwell eternally in the presence of God the Father and Jesus Christ the Son, and those who are joint heirs with Him in celestial glory!

Blessed, indeed, is he who keeps his body—the temple of God—pure and undefiled! "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy; which temple ye are."

WISDOM.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

In these last days, the God of heaven again speaks, in the year 1833. He reveals to man a few things which are not good; the counsel is contained in Section 89, Doctrine and Covenants, and it is called the "word of wisdom." God says wine, strong drink, tobacco and hot drinks are not good for man; that meat should be used sparingly and that it would be pleasing to God not to use it at all, only in winter, cold or famine. He further says: "All grain is good for the food of man, as also the fruit of the vine, that which yieldeth fruit, whether in the ground or above the ground." Accompanying the above, God promises all who will observe this "word of wisdom" that they shall have health and strength and great wisdom, "and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint"; also "that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them."

In the light of the above revelation how many there are who disregard this kind advice from our Heavenly Father, and deliberately eat strong meats and drink strong and stimulating drinks. Science and advanced thought in recent years comes forward and testify to the truth of the above revelation. Recently a man died in Turkey at the advanced age of 130 who had subsisted, all his life, almost wholly upon barley, and it has been fully demonstrated that a higher state of civilization and moral purity, strength and endurance, can be obtained by living in harmony with the "word of wisdom."

Meats excite the blood, engender disease and shorten life. Such painful diseases as rheumatism have been attributed to life, formed in the muscular tissue, engendered by eating meats containing trichina. These parasites and worms breed amazingly, filling the system with germs, causing disease and untimely death. The excessive eating of meat causes men to become vicious and brutal, indirectly instigating crime. It heats the blood, ruffles the temper, excites animal passions and develops the brute in man. The American Indian has developed his savagery through flesh eating, obtained in the chase. Their forefathers, the Lamanites, lost caste, became a dark and benighted people on account of their wickedness and flesh eating propensities.

The Hottentot and cannibal, the lowest races of men, who gorge themselves with meat, are mentally deficient. I have seen the savage who would thirst for blood, eat four and five pounds of raw flesh in one meal, their cutting teeth finely developed, more like tigers than men. Intellectuality does not follow in the wake of the excessive use of meat, but cannibalism, barbarism and the lowest state of humanity does.

Let us abstain from too much meat, especially in the summer months, and we shall be much healthier and stronger thereby, both spiritually, intellectually, morally and physically.

Now a few lines on the greatest curse under which this earth suffers—"King Alcohol," under the names of brandy, whisky, gin and rum, wines and beers in all their demoralizing phases. His Satanic Majesty certainly never chose a more devilish agent to destroy man, than strong drink; the influences of this power have been felt in all the world. From the early ages man has learned to distil liquor and its baneful results have been felt by all nations. Murder, adultery, theft and crime of every description follow the use of this most potent agent from hell. It will work upon man's passions in an unnatural way, causing him to cry, to laugh, to act the fool, and will excite another to commit acts of violence and bestiality: while it brutalizes all. Why will man, who has been made to walk uprightly, in the image of his Creator, so stoop and grovel in obeisance to the god "Bacchus" as to lose his identity, sinking among the lowest of brutes, lying in the gutter, a sot, a drunkard.

Some years ago I was at a small island in the South Pacific called "Pitcairn." This isle was discovered and occupied by men who had been convicted of crime in Great Britain, and who had been shipped off as convicts to Van Dieman's land, the British convict station. They were en route on a vessel called "The Bounty." Mutinizing, they secured the ship and located on this small island, about two miles in circumference; a veritable paradise located far from civilization. Fruits in all their variety grew spontaneously in profusion. These men began to distil alcohol from the cocoanut, and drunkenness, crime and murder was the outcome. Seeing the result of their folly, they destroyed and burned the stills and established a government of peace and abstinence. When I was at the island in the year 1883, it had grown into a thrifty community, where peace, unity and love abounded.

The demoralizing influence of these powerful stimulants are well known, and we also know that if we take the stimulus, alcohol, from any distilled drink, it destroys its insidious effects, and the beer, wine or liquor becomes slop, unfit for consumption. It is therefore this distilled spirit, fermented from decayed vegetation, that we must avoid, be it in mild or strong drink. Alcohol as a beverage is a body and soul destroyer and should be shunned as a viper.

There are more powerful stimulants than spirituous liquors, such as opium, morphine, cocaine and other drugs, which destroy men's minds, make slaves, murderers, suicides, fill hell and make devils grin.

How often do we see men and boys, yea, even women, who disgrace their sex, using tobacco; it is chewed, smoked and snuffed up the nostrils. God says it is not good for man, and the laws of nature, which are the laws of God, declare very forcibly that tobacco is not for the stomach. In acquiring this habit, the poor stomach rebels, nausea and a siege of vomiting results, and nature cries, "Stop!" The willing dupe and slave to this nasty, dirty practice, persists in using the filthy weed, until the stomach demands it: thus the habit is formed, which is unhealthy and debasing.

There are many evils arising from the use of tobacco, one of the principal being disordered digestive organs, or indigestion, heart disease and lung troubles. Over 90 per cent. of rejections of men enlisting for our late war with Spain, was caused through having weak hearts, brought about by the use of cigarettes. Many of these cigarettes are manufactured from a collection of refuse gathered from the garbage of cities, which is ground up, made saleable and fascinating by being mixed with opiates.

I am personally acquainted with a young man who was a slave to this habit: it was killing him, but he could not resist it. Finally his spiritual duties enforced him to be the man, and forsake the habit. I saw him when his stomach would be craving for this unnatural stimulant, and he would tremble and quake like the asp, and like a hungry man he would seize a cigarette, inhale the smoke and gratify this unnatural desire. Finally overcoming the habit, he became a healthy, strong man, gaining forty pounds in weight in a few months.

The appetite for this pernicious and soul-destroying weed, is not confined to men alone: we find women and children sucking, chewing, snuffing and smoking tobacco. God says it is not good and we can readily understand that the tabernacle of a person addicted to the use of this poison is not fit as a receptacle for the pure influence of the Holy Ghost. Nicotine is a terrible poison and is the active principle of tobacco, which gives it that soothing and narcotic influence: it is a slow, insidious, but sure invader of happiness and health.

Hot drinks, such as tea, coffee, cocoa and other stimulants, are not good for the body. They weaken the digestive organs and cause them to act unnaturally, accelerating the action of the heart and otherwise injuring humanity.

The stimulating principle of tea is theine, a deadly poison and a powerful astringent; extracted, one drop, like nicotine, will destroy life. It also contains tannin, causing the internal organs to become discolored, unnatural, like leather. It is said the best mountain tea is only obtained within a radius of 200 miles of Hankow, China, situated on the river Yang-tsi-Kiang, and the best quality sells as high as $100 per pound. It is common for the mandarin, or Chinese nobleman, to pay from $25 to $50 for a pound of tea, and I myself have been acquainted with Chinese who would not think of paying less than $5 per pound, and would then have it shipped direct from China, fearing adulteration. Whatever can the article be, which sells for 25 and 50 cents a pound? The coolie, or poor laborer in the far east, generally seep the tea leaf three or four times before it is thrown away and it is possible that much of the stuff called tea, pressed and packed for shipment, coming to this country has been formerly used. Each leaf is fingered, and the tea is packed and pressed into chests by dirty, sweaty, dog-eating coolies.

Coffee contains its caffeine, and other hot drinks contain their stimulus, and should be avoided. The coffee berry is very porous and before it obtains its beautiful gloss, is subjected to much adulteration. In fact, in this age of brilliant thought and invention, men manufacture eggs and butter without the aid of cows and chickens: we get chalk instead of flour and our food is tampered with, and much adulterated to the detriment of health.

I have written the above that we might act with wisdom and discretion, shunning all evil, and cleaving unto all good. We must learn to be clean and tidy in our habits. It is said that "cleanliness is next to Godliness." Let us, then, have clean bodies, inside and outside, and God will favor us more abundantly. If we will observe the above, we shall be blessed with health of body, mind and heart and the Holy Spirit will honor us with intelligence like Daniel, above our fellow-men. The time is not far distant when men again will learn the laws of life and health and live to the age of a tree. Let us, therefore, prepare ourselves for a celestial estate, learning line upon line and precept upon precept, that we might attain unto perfection, abstaining from all things deleterious to the health of the body and mind.

Sowing Seeds.

While reading the testimonies in the Star of those who have embraced the Gospel, and noting the way in which they generally come into possession of that priceless pearl, the thought came to me that few of the Elders fully realize the amount of good they are daily doing, by distributing tracts, preaching and conversing upon the principles of the Gospel. As a general rule observation shows that one pair of Elders sows the seed, hoping some will fall on good ground, but seldom do they see the fruits of their labor while still in the field. But as they go from place to place they see the fruits of the labors of those who have preceded them in times past; thus beholding the good that others have done. It fills them with courage to press on in the cause of truth, and do what is within their power for the spread of the Gospel, trusting that their efforts will be quite as fruitful as their predecessors'. By noting the results of kind words and literature dropped here and there by the servants of God in past times, fulfills the saying that "the bread which is cast upon the waters will return after many days."

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

BE PUNCTUAL.

"Do you realize you are late in reporting?" once remarked a general to one of his officers. "Yes, sir, my watch was slow," was the only excuse offered. "Either secure a new time-piece or I will get a new man," responded the commander.

Men who succeed in life are those who are punctual to every promise made. But a few days ago a towerman employed to signal trains went to sleep at his post of duty. The train came along at the appointed time, and the engineer, seeing the signal, passed on into the tunnel, only to dash against another train.

The trusted watchman had betrayed the confidence placed in him, he had gone to sleep without changing the signal.

Because one man had failed to do his duty he had caused sorrow and misery to enter many homes. He had robbed loving wives, fond mothers and helpless children of the blessed care and protection of fathers, sons, husbands and brothers.

Many good friends have been made and their friendship retained, by Elders keeping their word; by being punctual to every promise made, with a fixed determination to fill them in the face of any and all obstacles which might arise. It is indeed a pleasure to note the great amount of confidence placed in the Elders by the people of the world. An Elder by breaking a promise may not do the damage done by the towerman, but he can wreck the confidence of friends and bring sorrow upon his co-laborers. Each promise kept to the very letter lays strong the foundation of friendship for the Elders coming after to build upon. We, as servants of God, are today laboring for the grandest cause known to man. We are endowed with God's Holy Priesthood and blessings, so let us not betray the trust placed in us; let us be men in very deed. If our lives are to be monuments of good deeds we cannot afford to weaken the trust placed in us by the people in whose society we mingle. God taught that His people were the salt of the earth, "but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted?" "It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men." "Ye are the light of the world." "A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid." (Matt. 5:13-16.) Men, shining lights in the world, have often through disregard of promises made, become but mere creatures. Instead of being as a light set upon a hill, they become a dim smouldering coal, and having lost their savor are trodden under foot of men. Think well before making a promise, and then be punctual in keeping it.

FRUITS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

In writing to the twelve tribes scattered abroad, the Apostle James says: "But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy." (James 3:17.) From this we learn that the wisdom that is from above is full of "good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy." "Full of good fruits." What are the "fruits of righteousness" and the manifestations of godliness? Are they not "pure, peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated?" Certainly they are! In whom shall we expect to behold the manifestations of the "fruits of righteousness?" Those who profess to possess the Holy Spirit. And Why? Because the Apostle Paul says that "the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness." How shall we know when one is really in possession of the gift of the Holy Ghost? By observing their acts and deeds, their walk and their conversation. There is a certain, sure, and unmistakable way by which we may know the disciples of the Master, from those of the adversary. Jesus has solved the problem, and answered the inquiry. "By these shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one to another." (John 13:35.)

Here then we have a decision upon the question which in and of itself is law and gospel unto all those who lay claim to be traversing that "straight and narrow way" which leadeth to Eternal Life. Do we love one another? Do we pray for our enemies, and invoke Heaven's blessings on those who despitefully ill-treat us? Jesus has commanded us so to do; and He is our Glorified Head; our immaculate Savior; our Divine Law-giver, and blessed Teacher. These are some of the "Fruits of Righteousness," and when one fails to exhibit these fruits, they say in language plain and true, "We have not the spirit of God; we are lacking the gift of the Holy Ghost." This is the only alternative; for had they the spirit of God it would bear its righteous, peaceable fruits; otherwise it would be a useless guide, and a miserable comforter indeed. But no! God forbid! It has not lost its fruits, its gifts, or its graces. 'Twill do the same for those who possess it today, as it did in days of old. Yes! it will cause the happy and favored possessor to forgive his enemies; to return good for evil; to bless and not curse, and to exercise love without dissimulation. Not a feigned and partial love, but a fervent and holy love, which endureth and lasteth forever, and is ministered to both friend and foe.

If there is one hymn more than any other which touches the heart and thrills the soul of the Christian in the "Sunny South," it is that one which is invariably sung in their "revivals" and protracted "camp meetings," known as "The old time religion." All "Mormon Elders" like this dear old hymn, for they can sing it with a consciousness and a joy, knowing that they have the "Old time religion" to preach and declare unto the people. The last verse of this sacred song says, "Makes me love everybody;" and it is an eternal truth that the "old time religion"—the Gospel of Jesus Christ—will make us "love everybody." Love is one of the fruits of righteousness, an attribute of God, for John says, "God is love." Now, dear Christians, how can you consistently sing "Makes me love everybody," and at the same time despise, ridicule, persecute, and malign those of our brethren who labor among you and admonish you to yield obedience to the Gospel, for Christ's sake and your own eternal glory? You cannot be sincere and practice such hypocrisy. We say hypocrisy, because it is hypocrisy. When a person sings one thing and deliberately practices another, can you apply any other term than the title we have given? We do not judge anyone, but we know them by their "fruits." All we ask of you is a fair and impartial hearing; we crave an audience, and invite the intelligent and learned to come and compose that congregation.

Remember the words of Jesus, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and let your acts abound in righteousness, peace and good will. James, the Apostle, says, "The fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace." So order your lives, and fashion your deeds, that you can conscientiously sing that good old time religion hymn, "Makes me love everybody."

No unhallowed hand can stop the work of God from progressing. Persecution may rage, mobs may combine, armies may assemble, calumny may defame; but the truth of God will go forth boldly, nobly and independently, until it has penetrated every continent, visited every clime, swept every country and sounded in every ear: till the purposes of God shall be accomplished and the Great Jehovah shall say the work is done.—Joseph Smith.

In the following you will find recorded an instance of God's power made manifest through His servants. May the 20th, 1898, while Elder Wheeler and myself were canvassing in Moore county, Tennessee, towards the close of day we called on a Mr. Deal. He treated us very kindly and asked us to remain over night with him. We gladly accepted his invitation and were soon engaged in conversation. Within this habitation the daughter of Mr. Deal lay very sick with fever. She was very nervous and continued to remark that she dreaded the coming of night, as it seemed so long to her. We felt it our duty to explain the principles of the Gospel, with the gifts and blessings enjoyed by the Latter-day Saints. We stated we were authorized servants of God and by the anointing with oil accompanied by faith and prayers the sick were healed. We referred to James 5: 14, 15, whereupon she requested us to administer to her, having faith she could be healed. After retiring and making it a matter of prayer, we returned and administered to her. She at once went to sleep and rested peaceably until the next morning. We asked her how she felt. Her answer was, she felt as well as she ever did. We told her to give all praise, honor and glory to her Father in Heaven. This is not the only case of a similar nature since my arrival in the mission field. I have seen God's power made manifest on many occasions. As servants of God we testify to all mankind that Christ's promises as recorded in Mark xvi: 17, 18, have been verified unto true believers in our days as in times past.

Your brother in the Gospel.

Editor of The Star.

Being a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, I desire to bear my testimony. I have been a member of the Church for two years and have tried to live up to every commandment given of God. I desire to gain for myself an exaltation and know the way to success is in following the teachings of Christ, revealed in this day and age. Realizing that there is a straight path which leadeth to life eternal, and a broad way which leads to destruction, my desire is that I may do right. If a man gain the whole world and lose his own soul, his life has been a failure. Ever praying for the welfare of all truth seekers, I am, Your brother,
C. H. Linch.

Largest American Flag.

Washington, May 14.—Ferdinand W. Peck, United States commissioner-general to the Paris expostion, recently requested the loan of the large flag which hangs in the pension office. It was the intention, he said, to float it on the Eiffel tower on the Fourth of July. Secretary Hitchcock has decided to grant the request. This is the largest American flag in the world, measuring 26 by 50 feet.

The flag in the pension office is not the largest American flag. The one which was spread across the Mormon Temple in Salt Lake at the Jubilee, July 24 1897, and which is still preserved, is 60 by 120 feet.

NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

After six months of faithful labor and remarkable success, the Elders of the North Carolina conference met in the city of Goldsboro, May 5 and 6, for the purpose of holding conference. They all came in enjoying the spirit to a remarkable degree, though somewhat disappointed in not meeting President Rich from the office. The Elders were pleased to meet together and hail their belover president and his counselors with a hearty handshake. There was but little opposition manifested by the people of Goldsboro, though they were completely wrapped up in the cloak of prejudice; treating the Elders with silent contempt. A convention hall was secured for the purpose of holding conference, and the town was duly notified, but instead of coming out and hearing the servants of God proclaim the truth, they held extra meetings in order to keep the people from attending the Mormon services. About 200 Saints and friends from the surrounding neighborhoods came in, and, though our attendance was comparetively small, the conference was a decided success.

Saturday night the Elders were called together in counsel meeting where they received much valuable counsel and instruction from their president and counselors. A short meeting was held and each Elder bore a faithful testimony, expressing his joy of being worthy to be called a deluded Mormon of whom the world so hates.

Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, public service began, President Haws presiding. Elder John Bailey was in charge of the singing, which was rendered with marked ability. Meeting commenced by singing "Now Let Us Rejoice," etc. Prayer was offered by Elder Gordon. Continued by singing "Do What Is Right."

President Haws made the opening remarks. He welcomed those present and extended an invitation to all to come and hear the so-called Mormon doctrine explained from a Mormon standpoint. He spoke of the religious freedom that is granted to every son and daughter of this grand republic, and believed that all men should have the privilege of worshiping God according to the dictates of their own conscience. Said no people on earth believed and preached the Gospel as literally as did the Latter-Day Saints. The mission of the Elders was not to deceive, but to exalt all mankind. Elder James S. Blake spoke upon the restoration of the Gospel. He said if any present had come seeking for truth with a sincere heart, they would receive a testimony of the truthfulness of the Gospel taught by the Mormon Elders. He knew of no reason why the people of today could not enjoy the gifts and blessings of God as did the ancient Saints, if they would only obey the true plan. Elder F. A. Gay spoke at some length upon the Gospel being preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations before the end should come.

Elder Joseph P. Bischoff explained the duty of all mankind in regard to their individual salvation. If the laws and commandments given by the Lord were disobeyed it would prove eternal damnation to the soul of man, while if they were observed it would prove eternal salvation to them. Services were closed by singing "Praise to the Man." Benediction by Elder Robert S. Hontz.

Evening services were conducted by Elder Joseph P. Bischoff. Singing—"What Was Witnesesd in the Heavens."

Elder Robert Hontz was the first speaker. He said he rejoiced in having the privilege of raising his voice in defense of the truth, speaking at some length upon the principle of faith, showing that with out true and implicit faith in God it would be impossible to be saved in the kingdom of God, and wherever true faith has existed among the children of men it has always been accompanied by prophecy and revelation. He bore a faithful testimony that the gospel had been restored, and that the gifts and blessings are enjoyed as they were anciently.

Elder Henry Sullivan, a local Elder, addressed the congregation. He spoke upon the necessity of obedience to the Gospel in order to gain salvation. Elders Bailey and Palmer then sang "Zion Prospers, All Is Well," with much effect.

Elder James N. Connell spoke upon the divine authority man must be endowed with to enable him to preach the Gospel. Services were closed by singing. "The Spirit of God Like a Fire is Burning." Benediction by Elder I. B. Evans.

Night services were commenced at 8 o'clock. President J. M. Haws in charge. Singing "Glorious things are Sung of Zion." Prayer by President J. M. Haws. Singing, "Softly Beams the Sacred Dawning." Elder I. H. Rogers compared the doctrines taught by John, the Baptist, the Savior, the Apostles and the Latter-Day Saints, showing that they all agreed in every principle.

Elder W. W. Butler said that mankind generally preferred to walk in darkness rather than seek a light to be guided by. He told of the unjust prejudice that confronts the Mormon Elders. The meeting closed by singing the Doxology; Benediction by Elder J. W. Richins.

Sunday morning at 10 o'clock the services commenced by singing "O, Ye Mountains High," prayer by Elder C. E. Jones. Singing "When Shall We meet Thee."

Elder Jesse W. Richins was the first speaker. He said the world has not the spirit of God, consequetly they cannot understand the things of God. The spirit of God will not always strive with man. The principle of repentence was dwelt upon, showing in a clear way the difference between worldly and godly repentance, condemnation following the former, while salvation follows the latter. Elders Bailey and Palmer sang: "Hark the Song of Jubilee." Elder J. P. Bischoff said that when he looked back to the ancient days, when those good men were persecuted and reviled for delivering the message, they were taught to preach, it reminded him of the present day when ridicule, sneers and jeers are heaped upon the servants and messengers of God. He instructed the Saints in their duties, exorting them to more diligence, in living up to the laws of God. Closing song: "Ye, Who Are Called to Labor," Benediction by Elder George E. Cook.

Evening services convened at 2 p. m., opened by singing "Ye Elders of Israel," prayer by Elder Edward Samuelson; singing, "Now Let Us Rejoice." Elder Gilbert M. Williams spoke of the prejudice that exists in this country against the Mormon faith; of how the "so-called Christian ministers" and newspapers satisfy the demands of sensationalism while they cover up their own wicked deeds under the cloak of religion. All men will be judged according to their works.

Elder John Bailey spoke of the personality of God, proving from the scriptures the God of the heavens is a being with body parts and passions, and not a mere spirit as is generally believed. President J. M. Haws made some timely remarks. He spoke of the great sacrifice the Mormon Elders were making in order to publish the Gospel to the inhabitants of the earth. He encouraged the Saints in their duties, exorting them to set exemplary lives and show to the world that they have embraced a religion that exalts man, when he lives up to its teachings. Services were closed by singing "We Are Sowing," benediction by Elder Joseph E. Caldwell.

The last public service was held Sunday night, which commenced by singing "O, My Father." Prayer by Elder W. A. Brown. Singing: "Praise to the Man."

Elder Joseph E. Caldwell then delivered a discourse on the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon. He referred to many passages of scripture in the Bible to prove the divinity of the Book of Mormon. He said it was a new witness for God, and the Bible, while the Bible was a witness of it. He said if any one would read the Book of Mormon with an unprejudiced mind he would know it was of God, not of man. Elder Edward Samuelson spoke of how the so-called Christians had perverted and twisted the Gospel to suit their own tastes.

Being the last public service, Elder Bischoff, in behalf of the Elders, thanked those present, and the people of Goldsboro for the good treatment given the Elders. He urged them to investigate the Mormon doctrine and pray for a testimony of the truth. Singing the Doxology. Benediction by President J. M. Haws.

Again the Elders met in counsel meeting Monday morning, where they received more timely counsel, after which the sacrament was administered and the time was spent in the Elders bearing testimonies. Each Elder bore a faithful testimony of the truthfulness of the Gospel. Some of them enjoying the gift of tongues and prophecy. Every heart was touched and tears of joy moistened the eyes of the Elders. What a glorious time, what a heavenly feeling of love and peace, thrilled the hearts of every Elder. When the interpretation of the tongue was given it was made-known that the Lord had accepted the labors of the Elders and had forgiven them of their sins.

Thus ended one of the most successful conferences ever held in North Carolina. Every Elder went to his field of labor feeling amply paid for his long walk to get to conference. Never before have the gifts and blessings of God been showered upon the Elders as at this conference.

A NON-MORMON ON MORMONISM.

Deseret News.

Mr. Charles Ellis, of Salt Lake City, is in receipt of the following letter from a Mrs. Lucy Ellis (no relation), of Onslow county, North Carolina, under date of April 25:

Dear Sir:—You will please excuse me for taking the liberty of writing to you, but as I have been reading a portion of an article headed, "Mormons and Mormonism by a Non-Mormon," and as you are the author of same, I take the liberty of writing you, and would like you to answer a few questions on the subject of "Mormonism." I am a non-Mormon, but am living among some members of the "Mormon" Church, and they are being ridiculed by some people for their belief. People say that they are an ignorant and illiterate class of people. Would you be kind enough to answer that question, and also the following: Do the "Mormons" preach and practice polygamy now—since the Manifesto was passed? Is there any doctrine taught among the people in the west, that is not allowed to be taught by the Elders in the world?

Please state something about the customs and character of the "Mormon" people, or anything you deem necessary to speak about.

The reason I am asking these questions is because ministers of different denominations are asking many questions and say things I do not believe to be true. Therefore I would like for you to write me a letter, that I may have to show them, that they may know the truth about the "Mormons."

Please state also in your letter what denomination you belong to, if any.

Yours respectively,
LUCY ELLIS.

Mr. Ellis' Reply.

To this letter Mr. Ellis replied, as follows:

Madam—Your letter of April 25, asking sundry questions having reference to the "Mormons," is before me, and I take pleasure in replying.

The "Mormons" have not only been "ridiculed," but they have been shamefully lied about and abused, even to the extent of persecution, and in the main by people calling themselves "Christians." But you are aware that all new sects have met great opposition from those already established. If "Mormonism" had not from the first met a want in the lives of members of existing churches, if it had not made rapid growth, if it had remained a puny infant, little attention would have been paid to it. You must remember that in so-called "Christian" countries, "Mormon" converts have almost wholly come from the existing evangelical churches. They do now, and the fact that the opposition is found chiefly in these churches.

As to being "illiterate," I must ask you to look over the people whom you know as members of the evangelical churches in your own country. If they are illiterate, take them as an average of the same churches throughout the world, and, then, remembering that the mass of "Mormon" converts have come out of such churches, you may draw a fair inference.

But this would be true only of converts. Yet it is true that many "Mormon" converts have been uneducated people, it does not follow that, for that reason, they have been immoral or unworthy. Educated people are not, because of their education, any better "Christians" than the average of those who are classed as illiterate. In the case of "Mormon" converts from evangelical churches the change was merely from one church or sect into another, the mental conditions being not greatly disturbed. But from the time those people become "Mormons" education becomes an important part of life's work. I know of no sect that has been more persistent in the education of its people—old and young—than "Mormonism.' ' Here, where the people have become thoroughly established, you would be greatly surprised to see the earnestness of the young "Mormons" in acquiring education in all directions. I am convinced that your friends who sneer at "Mormons" as being "ignorant and illiterate class of people," would be put to shame were their own accomplishments brought into comparison with those of the mass of "Mormons" born and reared in the "Mormon" church.

Do they "preach and practice polygamy since the manifesto was passed?" For more than two years the anti-"Mormons" of Utah have been charging that polygamous marriages have been made frequently since the issuance of the "manifesto" in 1890. Yet with the state laws all in their favor, with the courts very largely in the hands of non-"Mormons," there has not been a single case established. I am forced to the conclusion that there have not been any polygamous marriages since 1890. But the manifesto did not and could not annul polygamous marriages already existing. Such families have not been broken up save by death, and that is the agency that will in due time wipe the last polygamous line from the slate of "Mormon" life.

Do the Elders preach doctrines in the world different from those taught at home? I have never heard a "Mormon" missionary in his field of labor. But I have heard a great many "Mormon" sermons in Utah, and I have never yet heard anything taught that might not be just as freely taught by every missionary in the field. So far I can speak with certainty. But I have heard only such tachings as are given in "Mormon" public meetings. What is taught in their temples I do not know. That is to say, there is a kind of Free Masonry in "Mormonism"—a series of "endowments" corresponding somewhat to the "degrees" of Masonry. No conscientious "Mormon" will talk about the secrecy enjoined in connection with this work, any more than a faithful Mason will divulge the secrets of his lodge. This phase of "Mormonism" is connected with its temples, into which no Gentile enters—into which even no "Mormon" can enter unless he or she is recommended as in "good standing" by their bishops. But while I acknowledge my ignorance of what is taught in the temples, I can say conscientiously that I have no reason to believe that there is anything taught there that is inconsistent with the sermons I have heard in public, or with what the missionaries teach abroad.

My own "denomination?" Church people call me an "infidel." I care so little about their opinion that I never attempt to explain. To you, however, I will say that I do unto others as I would have them do unto me. Many of those who condemn me as an infidel call themselves "followers of Christ." If I know the Man of Nazareth at all, the only safe plan for such people is never to let Christ know they are following Him. I make no pretentions. My life is my religion and on that I stand or fall, and I demand for unpopular "Mormonism" every right, every protection extended to sects that are more popular, but not so useful.

The article, apart of which you read, is from my booklet, entitled "Mormons and Mormonism." I will send you a copy. I think I will also offer your letter and this reply to the "Mormon" paper here. The editor, whom I know well, may possibly be pleased to say something in regard to the temple teachngs that will help you to understand it better than you will from what I have said.

Kindly let me know if I have satisfied you.

Respectfully,
CHARLES ELLIS.

Are they Lamanites?

Deseret News.

The following remarkable story appeared in several papers, and if true it suggests that members of the colonies which left this continent many centuries ago, and found places of abode on several of the islands of the Pacific ocean, as recorded in the Book of Mormon, may have penetrated as far as the Philippine Islands and left descendants there, whose posterity is yet to be found among the Malays. Or it may be that the immigration occurred in more modern times. At any rate the alleged occurrence is worth recording, and may form a subject of investigation for one of the scientific societies of the twentieth century. This is the report:

"Ex-Representative Springer tells a story which is worthy of investigation by the bureau of ethnology. A Creek Indian from the Indian Territory, who was a member of the rough riders, enlisted in the regular army at the close of the Spanish war, and was sent to the Philippine Islands. While campaigning with his regiment in the southern part of the archipelago he found a tribe of Malays whose dialect was almost the same as the language of the Creek nation. He could understand them so well that he was able to act as interpreter with a tribe he had never heard of before."

"Churches Worse Than Saloons."

Toledo, O., May 13.—Rev F. E. Patton, a young Christian minister of this city, preached from the stage of Burt's opera house here tonight. He said:

"By the practice of the church more people are doomed to eternal perdition than were ever caused by the saloons or any other influence. Place no faith at all in your churches. Mark my words, that there will be a reformation that will shake the religious world to its foundation. Isms and schisms will be parts of a broken parachute."

The Rev. Patton will arrange for a church edifice and will have in the building billiards, pool, bowling, etc.

One hundred medical students were asked to name the books of the Bible and only five could do so. Some named "Philistines," "Marcus Aurelius," and "The Epistle to the Filipinos."—T. R. Burnett in "The Way."

A man should never get so far away from the Lord that he cannot reach Him with a short prayer.

THE SPIRIT OF GOD UNITES THE SAINTS.

Our Good Deeds Should Increase Each Year — This is a Time of Preparation for God's People.

Discourse Delivered by Apostle F. M. Lyman, at Salt Lake City, April 6, 1900.

While I attempt to speak to you, my brethren and sisters, I trust I may be able to make you hear, and that by the aid of the Spirit of the Lord we may feel encouraged and strengthened in our faith. We meet together frequently as a Church in general conference for the transaction of business and to receive the word of the Lord. We have the ancient Scriptures and we have the modern Scriptures, and scriptures are being made now, as has always been the case when the Lord has had His Church upon the earth, with the living oracles; for when they speak by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, what they say is scripture. We are entitled to know individually whether our brethren speak to us the truth, for it is our privilege to enjoy the same Spirit that they speak by. This is the power that binds the Latter-day Saints together, and that holds us to our obligations and covenants with the Lord and with each other. We are not held by threats, nor by fear, but by love—the love of the Gospel, which has been planted in our hearts and has been growing with the people for these seventy years. We have become a pretty well trained people, and four-fifths of the Latter-day Saints, I believe, are doing tolerably well, and I believe that the one-fifth that are careless in some things, are perhaps laboring fairly well in others. There will no doubt be quite a percentage of the people that will not be found numbered among the wise.

While listening to Brother Brigham Young and to President Snow, the parable put forth by our Savior, as recorded in the 25th chapter of Matthew, was presented to my mind, and I thought to read it, that we might be brought to consider by its examination whether we are numbered among the wise or among the foolish. This is a very important matter; for if we travel along with this Church for twenty years, for thirty, forty or fifty years and then at the last find that we have failed to save our souls and that we are among the foolish, it will be very unprofitable to us. As President Snow has said, we are gathered together for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God upon the earth, and there is some reason why we should be thus gathered; why we should take upon us the obligations that we have; why we should endure the hardships that we have; why we should, among all the denominations on the earth, be singled out for the despising of all people, and why this condition should stay with us and follow us in preference to any other people in the world. We are a small people, not very important in numbers nor in wealth, and yet every little while something occurs that creates quite a furore in regard to the Latter-day Saints. The whole world becomes agitated and in a ferment over the Latter-day Saints, and there is trouble in the hearts of many people for fear the Latter-day Saints will do something very wrong. What is the matter? Are the Latter-day Saints minding the business of any other denomination? Are we troubling ourselves particularly about our brethren who have other forms of religion? Are we excited and worried over them? Do we combine together with some other people in order to look after the morality and purity, or the immorality and corruption, of other people? How carefully the Latter-day Saints attend to their own business! And is it not a proper thing for the Latter-day Saints to take care of themselves, their own morality and honesty? Shall we not give attention to our own affairs, and are we not just about of the same material, the same kind of people, as our other religious brethern? Have we not come from among other denominations? Have we not been gathered from among the Catholics, the Presbyterians, the Methodists, the Baptists, the Congregationalists and the Christians, as well as the infidels? Now, have we gone to these various denominations and gathered the very worst of them? Have we ever advertised in our periodicals and in our preaching and labors, publicly or privately—have we ever bid for the bad Methodists, the bad Presbyterians, the bad infidels? Have we ever promised them an easy way of salvation? Have we done any of these things, or have we gone to the world conscientiously and honestly and laid before them the offer of life and salvation on consistent and Christian terms? Have we ever promised anybody that they could be saved in their sins? Have we ever asked anybody to come into this Church without repentance, without reformation, without honesty, without virtue? Have we entered into a compact with anybody to be corrupt? Have we promised them immunity from the punishment of the law if they transgressed the law? Do we cover up their sins and hide them? Are we doing that? Are Bishops, Presidents of States, Presidents of quorums, Elders, High Priests and Seventies asking the corrupt and wicked from among the nations of the earth to come to us and we will shield them in their corruption, in their adulteries, their fornications, their thieving and their dishonesty? Why, no. But we have presented to the world a very startling and remarkable work, a work that requires repentance and reformation. And when repentance has been complied with, in order that the repentance may be genuine and the forgiveness of sins continue, it must be eternal. It is not enough for men to repent in order to come into the Church, and then do as they please, but their repentance must be perpetual; it must not need to be repented of. If a man has been a thief and ceases to steal, he must continue to refrain from his larcenies. If a man has been a liar, a deceiver, or corrupt in any degree whatever, it is required of him in this Church that he must cease forever. If he should live a hundred years, he would not live long enough to have any degree of allowance shown to him for transgression because of his age, but the older men are the better they must be. I think that is reasonable; for the oldest of all whom we have ever heard of is said to be good and the only one who is entirely good—our Father who is in heaven. I say the father should be better than the son, the mother should be better than the daughter, and this Church has now arrived at the full ripe age of three score and ten. What shall we do who have been entrusted with the holy Priesthood? Can we afford to be indifferent and careless? We are now seventy years nearer to the coming of the Son of Man than we were when the Prophet Joseph, under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, organized this Church. After this extended experience, can we not well afford to be good, conscientious and honest with the Lord? Can we not afford to make our repentance and reformation genuine from this time forth, believing that the coming of the Son of Man, the redemption of Zion and the fulfillment of the purposes of the Lord are at our door?

Can we not afford to do this now, so that when the Bridegroom comes we shall be prepared to meet Him; for He will come; He has always come when He has promised. He has visited the earth in this dispensation and has established His authority and power among men, and the Millenium, the reign of righteousness, is to be ushered in; and it is liable to come in our day. The redemption of Zion is also liable to come in our day. There is doubtless a set time for the redemption of Zion and for the coming of the Son of Man. The time has not been made known to us, and is not likely to be, until He comes. It would hardly be fair for the Presidency, the Twelve and the presiding brethren to know the very time of His coming, so that they could be prepared, and let the people be indifferent and careless. The coming of the Son of Man will be as much of a surprise to the presiding brethren as to any others. That is, it will occur when they are not looking for it particularly. We hope to be prepared, and we hope the people will be prepared, but it will come suddenly, and you will know it as soon as we know it. We have the Spirit of that coming, and the Spirit of the redemption of Zion. We have the Spirit that indicates that in the near future the Lord will appear.

Hence, the Spirit of the Lord has been very powerfully upon President Snow and his brethren, and they have been led to urge upon the people the importance of reformation, not alone in the law of tithing, but in every other principle of the Gospel. Tithing alone is not enough. It will yield its measure of oil and light and of inspiration and power, to those who observe that law. But if we are non-prayers, non-partakers of the Sacrament; if we are not found doing by others that we would that others should do by us; if we are not honest and virtuous, the fact of our being tithe-payers will not be enough to save us. But it is pretty well discovered and understood that if men can stand the test of the law of tithing, which appeals to our wealth, they will be able to make other sacrifices as well; for there is a strength and a power which comes in answer to our fulfillment of this law that will enable us to do other things much less difficult. There are many things less difficult than the payment of tithing. In our fallen condition, being of the earth earthy, we love the things of this world, and it is a most difficult thing for some of us to meet this requirement of the Lord. There is quite a percentage of the brethren who have received the Priesthood, as well as members of the Church, who ought to be tithe-payers and are not. I want to ask any man upon whom I have ever laid my hands and conferred authority in the name of the Lord Jesus; I want to ask any brother who has ever had the hands of the servants of God laid upon his head, to confer the Priesthood of God upon him, can you reconcile your course of life, if you neglect to furnish the revenue necessary for the building up of the kingdom of God on the earth? Can you justify yourself in this? I want the High Priest, the Seventy and the Elder to come to me as an individual and show me his philosophy and reasoning as to how he can conscientiously hold the Priesthood of God and yet decline to meet the obligations that belong to that Priesthood. I believe that there is no man in this Church entitled to the holy Priesthood who will not magnify it. I believe the Lord requires it of every Deacon, every Teacher, every Priest, every Elder, every High Priest, every Seventy, every Patriarch, every Bishop, President, etc. And we will not always be tolerated with the authority of God unless we do honor it. We will be found among the foolish, lacking oil in our lamps and being unprepared for the coming of the Son of Man, unless we attend faithfully to these duties.

Is a man justified in this Church who fails to partake of the Sacrament when the opportunity is offered? Is a man justified who does not bow his knee before the Lord daily, and who forgets the Lord in secret prayer? I think not. I believe that the Latter-day Saints are required to meet all these obligations and to be as honest with their brethren as they are required to be honest with the Lord. It is not enough for us to pretend to be honest with the Lord, and not be honest with our brethren. We cannot be honest enough with our Father
